Drawing conclusions from the serious criticism levelled at Kharkov's machine builders in the CPSU Central Committee resolution and in Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's speeches at the Central Committee conference on scientific and technical progress and during his visit to the Ukraine, we see it as our paramount task to ensure the production of the kind of goods and techniques which would not only match the world technical level but, including the time taken to prepare production, would outstrip it by at least 2-3 years.

The comprehensive measures that are now being implemented envisage increasing the production of top-quality machine building output to 85-90 percent of the total production volume by the end of the century and in so doing to achieve a national economic effect or more than R300 million.

The attainment of those goals will be promoted by the implementation of the 750 progressive organizational and technical measures formulated by our scientists and specialists and coordinated and ratified by by the relevant ministries and departments.

This will also be helped by intensifying economic and creative links horizontally — among subcontracting plants, sectoral institutes, and design bureaus. Many of them have already confirmed specific deadlines for the supply of materials, components, manufacturing processes, and equipment with the kind of technical and economic characteristics which ensure the high technical standard of the finished product.

Also taken into account here are the many suggestions submitted by workers, engineering and technical staff, scientists, and specialists in response to the CPSU Central Committee's call to fundamentally improve output quality.

It must be said frankly that such concrete deeds increase party organizations' activeness, display Communists' vanguard role, educate cadres, and reveal the great potential of the human factor, to which the obkom and local party committees pay constant attention. I fully agree with Comrade B.K. Pugo's proposal on the creation of an all-union comprehensive program and an integral quality control system.

Comrades! The congress has already spoken about the need to increase the efficiency of planning, scientific research, and design organizations and of science in industry. Questions of intensifying creative labor are also very relevant to us. I should like to consider just that part of the problem relating to planning.

The current procedure for shaping and monitoring the fulfillment of state plans for the development of science and technology is complex, involved, and as we feel at the local level, still provides only a poor reflection of the changes taking place in technical policy. Is it really acceptable that in the final 10 days of last December alone the oblast received 220 alterations amounting to one-fourth of the new equipment plan? And this is repeated year after year.

With such an approach, of course, local party, soviet, and planning and monitoring organs find it hard to administer this process. Consequently the new equipment plans are not fulfilled primarily not because they are too strenuous, but because of planning defects.

Our own failings in the selection by enteprises and organizations of a topical and effective theme and in monitoring the time taken to meet targets are also involved here. But the question is: How can such arbitrariness be possible when there is a categorical ban on plan adjustments in the production sphere and in scientific and technical planning? I believe that the USSR State Committee for Science and Technology and certain superior economic and planning organs should be more persistent in implementing the demands of restructuring and approach production's needs more vigorously.

Comrades! The Political Report to the congress attaches exceptionally great significance to the further development of the country's agro-industrial complex. In attempting to ensure that the oblast's agriculture is more stable and is independent of the weather, we have determined and are implementing the main priority areas for its intensification.

For example, thanks to the great support of the CPSU Central Committee and the Soviet Government, a modern base for the chemicalization of agricultural production has been created in the oblast in recent years, making it possible to switch to centralized agrochemical services for kolkhozes and sovkhozes, to halve fertilizer losses during transport and storage, to increase their effectiveness by 25 percent, to triple the use of liquid fertilizers, and to lay a firm foundation for the scientific programming of harvests. The experience of recent years shows that even under extreme conditions this mechanism for working with fertilizers produces a noticeable addition to the crop.

Considering the CPSU Central Committee's guidelines on concentrating capital investments and resources primarily in those parts of the country capable of providing the largest return in the shortest period, particularly in terms of grain production, we are ready to assume the responsibility, with the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee's support, to turn the oblast into a center for trying out all chemicalization processes in agriculture, provided, of course, that our counterpledges on increasing agricultural production are adopted. Our proposals on this question have been submitted to the CPSU Central Committee.

The further consolidation of the feed base is a main task in the intensification of livestock raising. But I should like to dwell in particular on feed processing. Mechanized feed production shops are now in operation on each farm. In addition to batch production equipment, people are also using high-productivity equipment developed and manufactured by our enterprises to hull grain and process corn cobs with increased moisture content, while the innovations that are being introduced include a small, custom built unit with a capacity of 6 metric tons per hour for the preparation of finely ground five-component mixed feed. This year alone, Kharkov's enterprises will produce 250 of those units, which we will deliver to farms in those regions with no mixed-feed producing plants of their own.

In this connection it would be expedient to change the USSR Ministry of Grain Products' established trend of building large, costly mixed-feed plants and, primarily by taking into account local conditions, to switch mixed-feed production directly to farms just by providing them with premixes and other feed additives.

The introduction of this mixed-feed production technique will enable the oblast to save up to R45 million in capital investment on the construction of scarce mixed-feed plants, on transport, and other expenditure. Improving the quality and balance and cutting actual losses of forage will save around 150,000 metric tons of grain a year, livestock productivity will increase, and output prime costs will fall. And time will be saved — a very important matter. This question is relevant to other parts of the country, too, particularly those where crosshauls of grain and mixed feed are large.

Congress Delegate Comrade V.Ya. Gorin, chairman of the Frunze kolkhoz in Belgorod Oblast, convincingly described the general benefits of this technique in PRAVDA recently.

In addition, the Ministry of Machine Building for Animal Husandry and Feed Production should depart more vigorously from the familiar path and more promptly resolve questions of organizing the mass production of those mixed-fixed machines and other progressive equipment which many oblasts with the appropriate potential are forced to produce a local enterprises in small batches and, to be honest, by using a certain amount of trickery. Is it a normal situation when we produce 25 percent of our feed processing equipment by our own efforts? There is need here for a substantial restructuring of the ministry's work. We hope that the minister in question, Comrade L.I. Khitrun, will show firmness on this matter.

Comrades! The Political Report paid great attention to questions of economic, scientific, technical, and cultural cooperation with the fraternal socialist countries. Much is being done here by means of local party ties with Poznan and Kalisz Voivodships in Poland, Gottwaldov District in Czechoslovakia's South Moravian Region, and many labor collectives in those countries. Last year, for example, Czechoslovak specialists from the "Slusovice" cooperative helped sovkhozes in our oblast twinned with Gottwaldov District to introduce methods for transplanting embryos from highly fertile cows and also a progressive technique for corn cultivation. In turn our specialists shared their experience with high-yield vegetable cultivation and helping to build prefabricated houthouses on the aforementioned farm. But these are only isolated examples.

Apart from the mutual contemplation and admiration of progressive techniques and equipment and innovations in selection work, the majority of our specialists do not take matters any further than that because of bureaucratic obstacles at higher levels.

In our opinion, now that the comprehensive program for CEMA members' scientific and technical progress through the year 2000 has been adopted and is being implemented, there is an urgent need for a special examination of this question to provide scope for intersectoral integration and to facilitate and further develop direct ties, particularly between twinned oblasts and science and production collectives.

Esteemed comrades! The tasks which the 27th CPSU Congress has given to the party and the country are more colossal and responsible than ever before. Their implementation will require tremendous organizational and political work from all party organizations and an improvement in the style and methods of leadership and of the principles of our party life, which have been further developed in the draft new edition of the CPSU Program and the proposed amendments to the party statutes.

Comrade delegates! As Comrade G.F. Sizov's report makes clear, in the period under review the CPSU Central Auditing Commission has actively promoted the rational utilization of party resources and party members' strict observance of their statutory duties. This is particualrly important now when the party is instilling order and strengthening organization in all areas of our life. I move that the CPSU Central Auditing Commission's report be approved.

Permit me to assure the 27th CPSU Congress that the Kharkov Oblast party organization will struggle with even more energy and creative initiative to implement the CPSU's strategic course and acheive new successes in communist building. (applause)

Kemerovo Obkom's Yermakov

Second Edition pp 3-4

["Speech by Comrade N.S. Yermakov, First Secretary of the Kemerovo CPSU Obkom" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 4 March morning session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Comrade delegates: No matter how vivid the words we use to describe the supreme forum of Communists, they all pale before its true greatness. And the greatness of the congress lies in its bold and resolute excision of everything that is old, extraneous, or unproductive and in its making a radical shift toward purifying all aspect of the life of Soviet society. (applause).

The party Central Committee Political Report really shook up people by is unusualness, in-depth analysis, bold creative generalizations and conclusions, and astonishing force of impact on people. Reports are coming in from undergound and open-cut mines, planes and factories, kolkhozes and sovkhozes of the Kuzbass industrial region about the inspiring atmosphere generated by the congress' work. And it could not be otherwise! For the party is talking with the people in the language of truth. (applause)

The Kemerovo party organization delegation wholly approves the Political Report's provisions and conclusions and unreservedly supports the CPSU's strategic course of speeding up the country's socioeconomic development and its fight for a Leninist work style and innovative view of the future.

The report on the Basic Guidelines for the country's economic and social development, delivered to the congress by Comrade N.I. Ryzhkov, steers the national economy toward a decisive shift to intensive factors of development in full accordance with the party's program aims.

People in the Kuzbass region are well aware of their responsibility to the party and state to provide the national economy with fuel, metal, and chemical products.

With its unique reserves of high-quality coal and other minerals and its powerful productive capital and million-strong working class, our oblast plays a substantial part in the country's economy. In the last 5-year plan the Kuzbass region extracted 730 million metric tons of coal and produced 60 million metric tons of steel and tens of millions of metric tons of rolled products and mineral fertilizers.

However, the very rich potential of this Siberian region is, for a number of reasons, not being fully utilized. And we were quite rightly criticized by Mikhail Sergeyeich Gorbachev at the conference in Tyumen for the fact that coal extraction in the Kuzbass basin in recent years has not been running smoothly and that we have essentially been "marking time." This particularly disturbs us, because the coal sector determines the image of the Kuzbass and the standing of our party organization.

The CPSU obkom believes that the oblast's party, soviet, and economic organs have not shown the necessary persistence and determination in resolving questions of coal-extraction enterprises' development and have failed to find effective ways of influencing labor collectives and mobilizing them to utilize their reserves.

Let us be frank; quite a few resolutions of all kinds have been adopted and conferences held in order to improve the performance of underground and open-cut mines. But the chief thing — specific, relevant work and unity of word and deed — was lacking. In the Political Report's words: "There were a lot of appeals and discussion on this score, but matters were virutally at a standstill."

This topic was discussed in a principled and exacting way at oblast, city, and rayon party conferences and at primary party organizatiuon meetings. Most collectives are now carrying out measures of restructuring, instilling order, and tightening up discipline in accordance with the demands of the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum. The demands on people to fulfill state plans are being stepped up. More attention is being paid in underground and open-cut mines to preparatory work and stripping and ensuring that coal extraction operations run smoothly. All of this is having a beneficial influence on miners' work.

However, putting the major failings of coal extraction in the basin down to our deficiencies alone would give an incomplete account of the overall picture. The central planning organs and the USSR Ministry of the Coal Industry, which unjustifiably paid less attention to the Kuzbass region and pursued an ill-considered policy of renovating mines and increasing their number, cannot stand aloof.

It is surely not normal when one of the country's most efficient coal basins in the last 20 years does not open a single new mine, and in fact 50 percent more coal mining capacity was decommissioned than commissioned during the last 5-year plan. More than half the existing coal enterprises need urgent reconstruction — reconstructionwhich is drawn out over decades because of the weakness and low capacity of the construction organizations — and hydraulic technology, with its proven advantages, is unable to make any inroads.

The problems on a sociocultural plane form a tight knot. The oblast lags behind union and RSFSR indicators in providing working people with well-appointed accomodation, preschool establishments, clubs, and general educational schools and in the standard of municipal and consumer services and communications. And these indicators are even worse for miners than for other categories of working people.

The USSR Ministry of the Coal Industry, which, in addition to coal extraction, took on capital construction and mining machine building, proved unable to cope with this excessively inflated volume of multisectorial work.

The ministry was a jack-of-all-trades and master of none. Unfortunately, its capital construction work proved feeble and its mining machine building has been ailing for many years now. (applause)

Coal workers are carrying out construction inefficiently. Technical standards, labor productivity, and the use of construction industry capacities are 20-30 percent below those in construction ministries' subunits.

However, in the Kuzbass there are major work forces belonging the USSR Ministry of the Construction of Heavy Industry Enterprises and the USSR Ministery of Installation and Special Construction Work, which are primarily intended for constructing heavy industry installations. But we have not yet managed to involve them in constructing and reconstructing underground and open-cut mines, although attempts have been made at various levels. Unfortunately, the ambitions of the leaders responsible for this matter have gotten the upper hand. I think that it is time to make the appropriate corrections in this very important matter. Whatever else happens, the strengthening of the Kuzbass' construction organizations can wait no longer.

The oblast party committee is counting on the USSR Gosplan, USSR Ministry of the Coal Industry, USSR Ministry of the Construction of Heavy Industry Enterprises, and other ministries and departments carefully examining with us at the local level the state of affairs in subordinate organizations and giving assistance in retooling them in recruiting more cadres and retaining them.

We completely share the view that it is necessary to remove the serious shortcomings in the use of manpower. There is no question that order must be established here. Nevertheless, without an increased work force, the Kuzbass will not be able to resolve the difficulties that have arisen.

We also have quite a few problems which require no material expenditure. The miners' present working system, whereby shifts cover Sundays, is extremely unpopular in mining collectives. It not only disrupts production life but also the organization of families' recreation and makes mining unattractive, especially to young people.

The problem is not a local one, it affects the country's entire coal sector and needs careful examination. (applause)

Although universally acknowledged as urgent for a long time now, the question of changing the management structure of our coalmining and mine construction subunits, eliminating the lack of coordination among them, and subordinating them to a single body, which the oblast needs, is not being resolved.

Comrades, the oblast party committee has outlined an extensive program to enhance work efficiency in all sectors of the national economy. The enterprises themselves will be more extensively involved in reconstruction and retooling. We are paying particular attention to developing and introducing new technological processes and enhancing the quality of output and capital construction.

It is intended in the 12th 5-Year Plan to switch the Kuznets metallurgical combine from open-hearth steel production to converter steel production and to assimilate a fundamentally new technique of smelting metal with an enhanced scrap metal charge at the West Siberian metallurgical combine.

Large savings for the national economy are expected from the widespread introduction of a method of transporting concentrated hydrocarbon suspensions and direct combustion of them in power station boilers which has been successfully tested at the Belovskiy GRES. A virtually new kind of fuel is being created which will make it possible to cut back on coal transportation by rail and provide for it to be conveyed over large distances via pipelines.

It is planned to further increase the use of casing-head gas in ferrous metallurgy. However, for this it is essential to speed up the construction of the second gas pipeline from Tyumen Oblast to the Kuzbass. This is also dictated by the need to clean up the atmosphere of our cities, where, unfortunately, no tangible results have yet been achieved.

Union ministries of the chemical industry, mineral fertilizer production, ferrous metallurgy, and nonferrous metallurgy, power and electrification, and the coal industry are failing to cut harmful emissions and reduce the level of air pollution of the cities of Kemerovo and Novokuznetsk, as envisaged in CPSU Central Committee resolutions.

The oblast party committee considers that the leaders of these sectors — Comrade Ministers Listov, Petrishchev, Kolpakov, Lomako, Mayorets, and Shchadov — must finally appreciate the whole complexity of the situation and stop making bureaucratic formal replies and drawing up endless futile measures which essentially change nothing and merely exacerbate the inhabitants' dissatisfaction. It is necessary to seriously examine the question of decommissioning outdated, inefficient, smoky, and fume-producing units and halting the construction of new produciton units in those cities which aggravate the very complex environmental situation and to tighten up monitoring of purification techniques and the construction and operation of purification facilities. (applause)

And one more thought, which has already been expressed by some speakers: The assimilation of our region's natural resources is being held in check by unbalanced development and the lack of a comprehensive approach to dealing with it. As a consequence serious imbalances have occurred in leading sectors and their infrastructure.

Closer coordination of sectorial and territorial planning on the basis of a scheme for the comprehensive long-term development of the Kuzbass' production forces is, in our view, the answer here.

We are counting on the active participation of the USSR Gosplan, the USSR State Committee for Science and Technology, and the USSR Academy of Sciences in drafting this document.

Comrade delegates, the scale and nature of the tasks that must be carried out in the new 5-year plan demand maximum teamwork, exertion of effort, a sharp shift in the style of leadership of the national economy, and improvement in party work.

But let us be frank: This will not be easy, the force of habit and commitment to old approaches is still strong. (applause) Some people are in no hurry to change their working methods and hope to protect one another in some way and sit it out until perhaps the offensive subsides and everything goes back to what it was. But this will no longer happen! (applause)

The press, radio, and television have an enormous role to play in combating deep-rooted evil. These are a powerful party weapon, but it must be skillfully used. We fervently support the critical comments on the press made by Yegor Kuzmych Ligachev. (applause) We should not lose our sense of proportion! Journalists who have no experience with or professional knowledge of party work should not give their subjective assessments of the conduct of major party measures. (applause)

The oblast's working people have started the new 5-year plan quite well — the first 2 months' plan targets for rates of growth in industrial output and labor productivity have been overfulfilled. I am able to report to the congress that 1 million metric tons of coal in excess of the plan were extracted during that period. (applause)

We are grateful to the Leninist party Central Committee for its wise domestic and foreign policy and uncompromising sense of purpose in the struggle for world peace. A particularly large amount has been done here since the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum.

Collaboration among socialist countries is becoming an increasingly weighty factor in security and acceleration of socioeconomic development. Direct, first-hand ties between our country's oblasts and production collectives and those of fraternal socialist states are providing a real return.

Our oblast, for example, is cooperating with Hungary's Nograd District. This important, promising work assists the productive exchange of experience of party work and of mutually beneficial production sharing. It will continue to constantly strengthen and increase.

From the congress rostrum we also express our fraternal solidarity with the the heroic people of Cuba. (applause) Everyone knows that they are building socialism in the face of a fierece imperialist blockade, pressure, and threats. Expressing the sincere feelings of all Soviets and on behalf of our delegation I want to say: We are with you, Cuba! (applause)

Together with all the peoples of the socialist community, we will be able to defend our common interests and the immutable right to build a new life!

The Kemerovo Oblast party organization will, with unflagging energy, educate the working people in a spirit of lofty communist ideological commitment and proletarian internationalism, which will serve as a guarantee of indomitable strength and a very important safeguard of our people's spiritual health. (applause)

Please allow me to assure the 27th CPSU Congress that Siberians will do their utmost to revive Kuzbass' former glory, will work indefatigably to fulfill the majestic tasks of the new 5-year plan, and will devote all their strength, experience, and knowledge to communist creation! (prolonged applause)

Power Minister A.I. Mayorets

["Speech by Comrade A.I. Mayorets, USSR Minister of Power and Electrification" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 3 March morning session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Esteemed comrde delegates! The 27th Congress has again convincingly shown the whole world that the CPSU exists for the people and serves the people.

The Central Committee's Political Report, delivered by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, determined the prospects for Soviet society's development and the ways and means of achieving the ultimate goal — communism.

There is no higher honor for a Communist than to be a delegate to the historic congress which adopted the new edition of the CPSU Program embodying our ideals, expressing the Soviet people's fundamental interests and hopes, and creatively developing Marxist-Leninist theory.

The report to the congress on the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for the 12th 5-Year Plan and the Period Through the Year 2000, delivered by Comrade Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, determined the specific plan targets for achieving the CPSU's program goals, Together with all the party and the entire people, Soviet power workers fully approve these lofty goals and plans.

Thanks to the tireless concern of the party and government, the power industry is developing all the time and constantly improving its technical level. Electricity generation has now exceeded 1.5 trillion kilowatt-hours a year. One-half of the increase in electricity generation in the last 5-year plan was provided by AES's and GES's, that is, by power stations requiring no organic fuel. The country now has almost 5 million km of power lines.

The great Lenin said that "...when Russia is covered with a dense network of power stations and mighty technical installations, our communist economic building will set an example for the future socialist Europe and Asia," and that dream has come true.

In keeping with the comprehensive program, the joint plans for ensuring the socialist countries' energy supply will be further developed. The area covered ranges from Ulaanbaatar in the east to Berlin, Bucharest, Budapest, Warsaw, Prague, and Sofia in the West. The ministry is cooperating with 53 countries and is giving technical assistance in the construction of approximately 300 power industry facilities abroad.

Fulfilling the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum's decisions, power industry workers have done considerable work to strengthen discipline, organization, and order and to increase production efficiency. The ministry's functional administrations are being restructured. Administrations responsible for scientific and technical progress and for the quality and standard of projects are being reinforced or created anew, and planning, economic, and production subdivisions are being strengthened. A new planning and administration scheme has been adopted with the aim of improving the efficiency of scientific and technical organizations' work.

The leadership of a number of subdivisions has been strengthened. Those people who were not able to restructure their work in light of the CPSU Central Committee April Plenum's demands and did not understand the aims and point of the changes occurring in our country's economy have had to leave their posts.

The sector is persistently seeking ways to increase production efficiency. In the second half of last year we formulated and applied new methods of planning and providing economic incentives for electricity generation. Economic normatives governing the formation of material incentive funds were made directly dependent on the level of capacity use. These economic levers made it possible to bring more than 10 million kilowatts of extra power capacities into operation by the end of the year, which is equivalent to the average yearly increase in capacities by means of new construction, and made it possible to cut fuel consumption by millions of tons in the last 5 months alone. The sector carried out a prompt and improved overhaul of equipment in preparation for the fall and winter peak load.

As a result of measures taken, the energy system has been working steadily during the winter months and without fluctuations in frequency, which is very important for qualitative characteristics. Calculations show that losses in the national economy resulting from fluctuations in frequency total over R2 billion. And for the first time since 1970, we managed to work on the normal frequency without fluctuations during fall and winter.

We can clearly see that this is only the beginning of much work to make use of existing reserves.

Comrades! The 5-year period ahead is the one in which the first stage of the USSR Energy Program will be implemented. The power industry is one of the national economy's base sectors. It plays a main role in carrying out the task set by the CPSU Central Committee of accelerating scientific and technical progress and, on that basis, of ensuring the country's continued rapid economic and social development. After all, a mere 1-percent increase in electrification produces a significant growth in labor productivity.

Noting the paramount role of electrification, Vladimir Ilich Lenin said: "In my view, electrification is the most important of all the great tasks facing us."

We regard the 1990 electricity generation target of between 1.84 trillion and 1.88 trillion kilowatt-hours outlined by the Basic Guidelines as a minimum.

AES's have a special place in the electrical power industry and in scientific and technical progress. The implementation of the course adopted by the party of restructuring the country's fuel and energy balance by the accelerated development of the nuclear power industry is a nationwide task!

The enormous scale of the tasks set by the party may be illustrated by the following figures. The world's first nuclear power station provided power for Soviet industry back in 1954. AES capacity currently stands at 28 million kilowatts. And in the 12th 5-Year Plan it is planned to commission 41 million kilowatts, in other words to increase AES capacity by 150 percent in 5 years.

Our experience in building and running nuclear power stations and the existing scientific and technical groundwork have made it possible to begin carrying out the tasks of making wider use of nuclear energy sources in the national economy, primarily of nuclear thermal power stations and heat supply stations, fast-breeder reactors, and experimental-industrial plants with high-temperature reactors for use in various technological processes and to lay the foundation of the nuclear power industry.

To accelerate AES construction, the investment cycle must be shortened. The norm for constructing a 1-million-kilowatt power unit is 60 months. But it takes 7 years to begin construction of such a unit in accordance with the existing instructions, to choose a site, and prepare the technical and economic bases and plans. That time could be significantly reduced by deciding to carry out the planning and construction at the same time and by ensuring continuous financing.

The construction of the large power stations belonging to the Ekibastuz and Kansk-Achinsk fuel and energy complexes and of West Siberian power stations based on natural gas and casing-head gas will continue in the 12th 5-Year Plan. The figures show that these power stations provide us with our cheapest electricity.

Much work must be done in the construction of large-capacity GES's in regions of Siberia, the Far East, Central Asia, and Transcaucasus, the further development of the country's integrated energy system, and the intensification of links among energy systems and power supply lines carrying 1.15 million volts AC and 1.5 million volts DC.

To carry out these large-scale tasks, the ministry is carrying out measures to improve construction, expand the construction industry's bases, give even greater preference to the construction of housing and social, cultural, and consumer facilities, improve designs so as to cut the cost of construction, commission mechanization facilities on a wide scale, and improve planning.

The implementation of the power industry's development plans is inconceivable without the usual preparatory work and the full provision of material and financial resources. The USSR Gosplan acknowledges the need for a balance between targets and the resources for achieving them, but this must be incorporated into concrete decisions and targets in the 5-year plan and take into account the energy needs of republics, oblasts, and cities, as comrades have said in their congress speeches.

Many unresolved questions have accumulated in the power industry. Capital investments have not been fully utilized for 15 years now, and plans for the commissioning of power stations have not been fulfilled in the past 10 years.

The pace of the power industry's development cannot fail to be affected by the squandering of construction workers' resources on the building of non-power industry projects. The situation has not changed yet, despite the government's repeated instructions to concentrate the sector's construction workers on power industry projects. I believe that this question must be urgently resolved by the USSR Gosplan.

The implementation of an extensive power station modernization and reconstruction program is a most important area for increasing efficiency in the power industry. It will substantially increase the economical use and reliability of equipment and make it possible to bring approximately 20 million extra kilowatt-hours of power capacities into the energy balance during the 5-year plan.

The increasing of power generation efficiency is indissolubly linked with the acceleration of the scientific and technical progress. Highly economical nuclear reactors, turbo-units, gas turbines, steam-gas and magnetohydrodynamic units, and automated technological process control systems are to be introduced on a wide scale in the power industry.

On the basis of the development of new equipment, it is planned to achieve at least 80 percent of the additional power generation in the 12th 5-Year Plan without using organic fuel.

The ministry is committed to considerably increasing the reliability of the power supply to agriculture in the 12th 5-Year Plan. Power workers treat with the utmost responsibility the criticism levelled at them for failing to adequately guarantee the supply of electricity to agriculture. We intend to improve the reliability and continuity of electricity supplies in the current 5-year plan by further developing power grids, ensuring a backup supply for all large rural consumers, and using advanced power supply systems and types of equipment.

Comrades! The production of electricity and thermal energy requires the increasing expenditure of manpower and resources, and in that regard their thrifty utilization must be the constant concern of all the people. The ease and availability of electricity have given many people the idea that our energy resources are inexhaustible and have dulled their awareness of the need to conserve it.

We believe that the solution to this problem must be sought in two interconnected areas: first, by improving the system of calculating, monitoring, and administering the consumption of electricity, energy, and heat; and second, by stepping up the economic incentives for reducing the consumption of all types of energy in each workplace and home, and at industrial and agricultural enterprises.

Allow me to assure you that power workers and power industry construction workers, inspired by the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, will carry out the party's colossal plans and make a fitting contribution to creating the material basis of communism. (applause)

Yakutsk Obkom's Prokopyev

PM051720 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 Second Edition pp 5, 6

["Speech by Yu.N. Prokopyev, First Secretary of the Yakutsk CPSU Obkom" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 4 March morning session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Dear comrades! At this time the CPSU Congress is providing a platform for a frank and interested discussion about party affairs and the paths of our society's further development. Today there is not a single person, especially a Communist, in the country who has not been stirred and excited by the measures being taken by the Central Committee and its Politburo to fundamentally improve the state of affairs in all spheres of life. Soviet people are primarily gratified by the strictly sober approach to the evaluation of the situation prevailing in the world and inside the country and, on this basis, the profoundly considered specific measures to determine the immediate and long-term prospects of the country's development. The human barometer is very accurate and reacts swiftly to good and bad. The growing confidence in the working masses and the greater openness and frankness in the work of party committees impress people and consolidate the prestige and enhance still further the importance of the party and its main staff, the Central Committee!

The Political Report and also the new edition of the CPSU Program and the amended party statutes, which have been approved by the congress reveal with tremendously convincing force the breakthrough which is currently taking place in social development, with all of us witnessing and participating in it.

The CPSU Central Committee's activity is distinguished by incisiveness in the solution of domestic and international problems. We, the party and the country, are strong enough to speak openly about our shortcomings and temporary difficulties and to solve our problems not from the positions of people on the defensive, but of people who are confident in their future.

The party congress delegates are unanimous that, under present-day domestic and international conditions, Soviet society's comprehensive progress is possible only along the path of the utmost acceleration of socioeconomic and spiritual development. This realistic and profoundly scientific course is based on knowledge of the processes occurring in social life and is a model of the creative application of Marxist-Leninist theory to the solution of the complex economic, social, political, and educational problems of the time. The objectives set by the party Central Committee are on a large scale, profound in meaning, and specific, and demand immediate implementation.

Yakutia's Communists and working people, like the whole Soviet people, wholly and fully approve the political course and practical activity of the CPSU Central Committee. (applause)

The Political Report's theoretical provisions and its conclusions, which are vitally important for our country, have found materialization and convincing reflection in the form of the specific economic tasks contained in Comrade N.I. Ryzhkov's report 'On the Basic Guidelines of the USSR's Economic and Social Development for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000."

The fundamentally important directives of the Central Committee April (1985) plenum provided the basis for and received logical development in the questions being discussed at the congress.

The intensification of production, the improvement of planning and management, and the quest for new forms and methods of economic activity demand that responsible decisions be made and consistent actions be taken to improve the work of sectors and enterprises and ensure the psychological reorientation of cadres. This last factor is perhaps of paramount importance. In parallel with the renewal of cadres, the bulk of them must be reeducated and reoriented. Those who have spoken from this rostrum were right in saying that many workers in the management apparatus are still in the grips of old habits and stereotypes, of established routine. This can be observed not only in the central apparatus of ministries and of planning and supply organs but also at local level.

Aware of this, the Yakutsk party obkom is taking measures for the improvement of work with cadres, for the mastery of new concepts and style of thinking by leaders, and for the enhancement of their competence. This is yielding its results. But this is only half of it. Reorientation can produce the desired effect only if profound psychological changes occur within workers collectives directly engaged in the production of material goods. People who are motivated and conscientious in their work constitute an essentially inexhaustible reserve for the acceleration of economic and spiritual development. All this places tremendous personal responsibility on leaders and makes it incumbent on party committees to intensify their purposeful influence and to considerably enhance the role and significance of educational work.

As a result of the measures that have been implemented, socialist competition has spread somewhat more widely in the republic, the demands made of its participants are stricter and more specific, and job certification and other measures are being conducted in a better considered fashion. Recognition is being given to Communists' reports on the fulfillment of the demands of the CPSU Statutes and production targets. We understand that the front line of the struggle for the retooling of production and the strengthening of organization and order in labor collectives lies in the positions taken by primary party organizations, and we are taking steps to boost their initiative and militancy.

All this made it possible to ensure stable and high rates of economic and social development in the 11th 5-Year Plan period. The volume of industrial output increased by 26 percent in 1985 compared with the 1980 level, agricultural output increased by 14 percent, and the commissioning of fixed capital increased by 34 percent. The shaping of the South Yakutia coal complex continued successfully; and today we can report to the congress that the tasks concerning its shaping, set by the 26th CPSU Congress, have been basically fulfilled. (applause) The planned extraction level for diamonds, gold, and other rare and nonferrous metals has also been ensured.

But we are far from imagining that we have done everything possible in the spirit of current Central Committee demands. The profound practical restructuring of the work of party committees and soviet and economic organs requires time, persistence, and consistency in achieving the set goals. We have made far from full use of the reserves both in questions of realizing the technical potential of existing machines and equipment and also in questions relating to the activation of the human factor, labor organization and incentives, and the organizational and ideological education work that is being done.

The level set by the 5-year plan for labor productivity growth in industry was not reached, success was not achieved in appreciably improving the quality indicators of mining sectors' work, and a serious lag was allowed to occur in the creation of satisfactory housing conditions, particularly at nonferrous metallurgy enterprises, where the level of availability of well-appointed housing for working people does not exceed 58 percent. Basically, these shortcomings and omissions are the consequence of the inertia of the past, which has still not been fully overcome and at times takes the form of inertia in thinking, inability to perceive new developments quickly, and sometimes even smoothing over awkward issues, keeping silent about shortcomings, and being afraid of criticism and self-criticism. The republic's party organizations perceive the rapid elimination of these shortcomings as their paramount task.

Yakutia's Communists and all working people entirely support the party's strategic course of the preferential development of Siberia and the Far East and the comprehensive opening up of these regions with consideration for the rapid return obtained from funds invested in their development. The republic has perceived as a task of particular importance the provisions of the draft Basic Guidelines for economic and social development which set specific tasks regarding the continued shaping of the South Yakutia territorial production complex.

A reliable bridgehead has already been established for the large-scale opening up of this region: Power industry projects and a construction industry base have been built, labor collectives have been formed capable of handling construction and installation work worth more that R300 million a year, a reliable transportation network has been developed, and major capacities have been created for the extraction and processing of coking coal. Now this potential must be efficiently utilized. The USSR Gosplan and the relevant ministries should take practical measures to bring into active national economic use the mineral and raw material resources available in a unique combination in South Yakutia, where there are proven major iron ore and apatite deposits, a coking coalfield, and other types of ores, and also to embark on the creation of an agrochemical and metallurgical industry in this region.

The shaping of territorial production complexes in the country has generated a pressing need to give serious thought to questions of their management. Lack of departmental coordination poses many problems that are difficult to resolve, and party committees often have to play the role of coordinators. Taking sector efficiency as their criterion, ministries single out only "their own" components while the rest — even when they may be extremely necessary for the state — end up "at the bottom of the pile." A management organ standing above departmental interests and capable of pooling the efforts of all involved partners is needed to ensure the comprehensive utilization of natural assets and a faster and fuller return from territorial production complexes.

In our view, the following problem also merits serious attention: Even though our country has a reliable mineral and raw material potential, it continues to purchase various types of raw materials abroad. Today this is necessary; but it would obviously be more expedient if a larger quantity of mineral resources, which are abundantly available in our soil, were extracted at home and the funds used to purchase them were channeled in this direction. In particular, when solving questions of the strengthening of the production and social infrastructure around the Deputatskiy lead mining combine, lead extraction could be increased 5-6 times, thus considerably reducing and later abandoning altogether lead imports.

This demands primarily a solution to the problem of reliable power supplies precluding the transportation of large volumes of petroleum products into this region which presents difficulties of access. On the basis of the conclusions of the USSR Gosplan's State Expert Assessment Commission, questions concerning the construction of the Adycha River GES in this region and the commissioning of its first power units during the 13th 5-Year Plan period must be worked out in practice, and the relevant targets must be formulated in the draft Basic Guidelines currently under discussion.

Comrades! Today's Yakutia is rightfully considered one of the country's leading hard currency sources. In the immediate future the republic will remain the main supplier of diamonds and will extract the prescribed quantities of gold and other precious metals.

In order to ensure the successful work of these subsectors, the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification must effect the commissioning of the planned energy sources within the set time schedules. And the Ministry of the Gas Industry must work out more carefully the question of the large-scale incorporation into circulation of Yakutia's major reserves of hydrocarbon raw materials.

I would like to dwell on another question. In accordance with a USSR Council of Ministers resolution, work has started on the Berkakit-Tommot-Yakutsk railroad, which is planned to be commissioned for permanent operation by 1995, with a 380-km section planned to be commissioned for temporary operation in 1991.

The measures implemented in 1985 by the Ministry of Railways, the Ministry of Transport Construction, and local party and soviet organs have made it possible to gather a pace which would ensure the fulfillment of the government decision. But the inadequate funds allocated by the USSR Gosplan in the 12th 5-Year Plan (just R150 million) render it virtually impossible to complete the railroad's construction within the set time. Furthermore, even today the seasonal nature of the existing transportation system already involves major economic expenditure resulting from the need to "freeze" a significant proportion of material resources. Each year this results in the "withdrawal from circulation" of commodities worth up to R1.8 billion. Bearing all this in mind, we ask the USSR Government to reexamine this issue and take the necessary measures for the unconditional fulfillment of the resolution in question.

The fundamental party documents adopted by the congress and the draft Basic Guidelines set out a truly majestic program for our motherland's political, social, and economic development, and this is generating a desire to work even more productively and produce even greater returns.

To make their fitting contribution to its implementation — this is how the Yakut ASSR's Communists and working people perceive their most important party and civic duty, and they will devote all their strength, knowledge, and experience to perform it! (applause)

Irkutsk Obkom's Sitnikov

PM111600 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 Second Edition p 5

["Speech by Comrade V.I. Sitnikov (First Secretary of Irkutsk CPSU Obkom)" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 5 March morning session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Comrade delegates! It can be said without exaggeration that the 27th congress will go down in our party's history as a congress of the fundamental restructuring of all work and of major changes.

Each of us delegates is now thinking about how to convey the congress atmosphere of great exactingness, innovation, and creativity to every Communist and every primary party organization. The magnitude, impressiveness, and scale of the tasks formulated by the congress will demand of all party members and working people exceptional self-discipline and organization and the utmost effort and dedication. What are needed now are not just assurances and support but above all practical, specific deeds and high end results.

It can be said with confidence that the political and practical activity of the Politburo and the party's Leninist Central Committee and their vigorous, creative actions engender in all Communists and all Soviet people a desire to overcome shortcomings and difficulties more rapidly and to switch to resolute actions to accelerate development in all spheres of communist building.

For the Irkutsk party organization and all working people in the Angara region, the contemporary approach to questions of socioeconomic building found real embodiment in the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution adopted late last year "On Measures for the Further Comprehensive Development of Irkutsk Oblast's Productive Forces in 1986-1990 and the Period Through 1995." We regard this resolution as a document of tremendous state importance and as specific confirmation of the propositions of the new edition of the CPSU Program to the effect that the accelerated development of the productive forces of Siberia and the Far East has been and remains a component part of the party's economic strategy. With every passing year we must increase our contribution to the country's economy and obtain higher results in the oblast's socioeconomic development.

This is not the first time that the party has set the people of Irkutsk Oblast tasks on such a scale. Everyone remembers the nationwide construction projects of Bratsk, Ust-Ilimsk, and the Baykal-Amur Railroad. In the 11th 5-Year Plan alone more than 300 large production units and facilities were commissioned. The national economy's fixed capital increased by more than 30 percent during the 5-year plan. Our duty is to make full use of this truly enormous economic potential.

We clearly realize that the successful implementation of the tasks spelled out by the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolution depends to a decisive extent on how rationally we organize matters, overcome the elements of conservatism that still exist, and are able to boost the creative energy of Communists, working people, specialists, and scientists.

In late 1982 the CPSU Central Committee subjected the Irkutsk party obkom to stern but fair criticism for the serious shortcomings allowed to occur in the leadership of agriculture. In the light of the high demands of the CPSU Central Committee November (1982) Plenum, the oblast profoundly analyzed the state of affairs not only in agricultural production, but also in all sectors of the national economy; it interpreted and assessed in the new way the miscalculations and omissions in the work of party, soviet, and economic organs; and it determined ways of eliminating the shortcomings. It was necessary to take urgent and sometimes even drastic measures to strengthen executive discipline and increase the responsibility of cadres at all levels. This process was by no means simple. Whoever was unable or unwilling to change his ways in the light of the new demands was replaced by vigorous, modern leaders.

Comrades! In the light of contemporary conditions and the increased tasks the Central Committee and the Politburo constantly creatively develop the Leninist teaching that the selection, placement, and education of cadres must be the linchpin of all party organizational work. We completely and utterly support the Politburo's practical activity in cadre policy. (applause) We clearly realize that in this matter it is impossible to tolerate stagnation or to rely solely on local cadres. In our everyday work we seek to formulate a more efficient system and to combine a careful, solicitous attitude toward cadres with increased exactingness and responsibility for assigned tasks.

Without this we would have been unable to strengthen the development of the material and technical base of the agroindustrial complex and not only to overcome the lag of the first 2 years but also to overfulfill the 5-year plan plan targets in the main spheres of rural construction.

However, when the party obkom and party organizations assess their activity from the standpoint of the CPSU Central Committee (April) 1985 Plenum, it becomes obvious how much we still have to do to fundamentally restructure the style and methods of work, get rid of outmoded cliches and stereotypes, and seek the most effective ways and methods of influencing people, stimulating initiative, and accelerating their thinking and actions.

First, it is necessary to fundamentally reorganize the structure in the oblast's industry. Whereas in recent years the increase in output has been obtained largely via new construction, in the 12th 5-Year Plan it will be necessary to obtain over half the growth in industrial production via the reconstruction and retooling of enterprises on a new basis. By 1990 it is planned to reach the average republican level in terms of all vitally important indicators.

One of the oblast party organization's main tasks will be to mobilize working people to ensure growth in economic potential via an accelerated advance into the oblast's sparsely populated northern rayons and the tapping of natural resources — oil, gas, potassium salts, high-quality commercial timber, coal, and other resources.

This year we have made a practical start on forming the Upper Lena territorial production complex and have begun preparing for the start of the construction of a new mining combine and the Telmamskaya GES in Bodaybinskiy Rayon. Moreover, our geologists have created a real basis for organizing the industrial extraction of oil and gas. The formation and development of the Upper Lena territorial production complex is a task of tremendous complexity and scale. In our opinion, it should be reflected in the Basic Guidelines, and the attention of the USSR Gosplan and the ministries and departments concerned should be drawn to it.

Comrades! The responsibility of the Irkutsk Oblast party organization in increasing the country's fuel and energy resources is great. It must be admitted that we still lack specificity, persistence, and consistency in this question. By no means full use is made of the existing potential for building up the volumes of electricity generation. In recent years on the cascade of Angara hydroelectric power stations it has been necessary to discharge water into spillways and accordingly lose hydraulic power resources because the existing East Siberian power system cannot ensure the transmission of power in the requisite quantities. More than 6 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity have been lost in the last 2 years alone because of this. It is necessary not merely to ponder this, but to take the most resolute action to save energy resources. The party obkom fully supports the PRAVDA article by Academicians Aleksandrov, Glebov, and Melentyev entitled "Siberia-Center Energy Bridge."

The June (1985) conference at the CPSU Central Committee raised questions of resource-saving in a very pointed way. Socialism is orienting scientific and technical progress toward radically improving the utilization of natural resources These demands are especially important for our oblast, as a major supplier of raw materials. Timber, reserves of which exceed 8 billion cubic meters, which is 12 percent of the all-union stocks of softwood, is our oblast's priceless resource. Each year over 30 million cubic meters of timber are now procured. The western sector of the Baykal-Amur Railroad has opened up further potential for increasing the volume of timber procurement. However, questions of intensifying the whole timber complex by making full use of raw wood are being resolved intolerably slowly. It is a question primarily of introducing waste-free technology. Here too the weak material base is a constraint. Although research and design organizations have on the stocks studies for a complex of machines for waste-free techniques, there is practically no machine-building enterprise for the timber industry in Siberia. The USSR Gosplan and the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry must accelerate the resolution of these questions.

Comrades! The Basic Guidelines emphasize the need to improve the management of nature conservation in the country and to enhance the efficiency of the measures taken in this direction.

Nature has given us a unique wonder — Lake Baykal. The problem of its conservation perturbs not only us, but the whole public. For the sake of fairness, it should be noted that in recent years, in accordance with the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers resolutions, measures have been implemented that have made it possible to considerably reduce Baykal's pollution. However, these problems have not been completely solved, since even the most finely purified effluent is impermissible. We are grateful to the party Central Committee for issuing instructions on the eve of the congress for the preparation of cardinal proposals for the conservation of Lake Baykal. We cannot get away with half-measures and palliatives here. The lake is essentially in the position of a child with seven nursemaids, when what is needed is just one master, but a master who exercises sovereign power and is responsible to the people and the state. (applause)

Comrade delegates! The propositions of the CPSU Central Committee Political Report that party committees must act as political organs and not supplant economic and soviet organs are extremely topical and are of tremendous practical significance. However, it must be noted that the existing system — or rather lack of system — compels us to sometimes deal with matters that are not properly ours. Party obkoms, gorkoms, oblispolkoms, and gorispolkoms are often forced to collect the so-called contributions of the ministries and departments concerned in accumulating the funds to solve major regional problems of national economic significance, and they spend ages on this. All this is not done simply for its own sake. The USSR Gosplan and other state organs often avoid deciding pressing questions and, unless party committees deal with them, things may be held up. Economic cadres at all levels must be taught at last to resolve questions, not to avoid resolving them. (applause) I would like to comment about the organization of competition between oblasts. This is an area in which there is sheer formalism in our country! The time has come to straighten out this competition. The AUCCTU and republic councils of ministers must act as arbiters and at least twice a year sum up results and determine the winners. While being rigorously guided by Leninist principles, we must make competition between oblasts and krays truly competitive. (applause) Comrades! After the CPSU Central Committee April Plenum there is now probably no Communist who does not understand that it is necessary to resolutely implement a psychological reorientation; but in practice the state of affairs is not always objectively and critically assessed, wishful thinking is sometimes presented as reality, shortcomings are hushed up, and ostentation, empty talk, inertia, and retrograde thinking have not been eliminated everywhere. The party obkom draws the attention of party committees and primary party organizations to ensuring that they constantly develop and support the initiative of Communists and all cadres, increase their personal responsibility, foster professionalism and unity of word and deed, and call people strictly to account for any failure, disorganization, laxity, passiveness, or irresponsible attitude to matters. Here too I think we cannot tolerate "amendments" that reduce party demands. The life-giving dynamism in domestic and foreign policy and the CPSU Central Committee's actions, the unswerving concern for further increasing the people's well-being, and the consistent and persistent struggle for peace evoke among Soviet people boundless support and a powerful impulse to increase labor and political activeness. The Irkutsk Oblast party organization, armed with the historic decisions of the party's supreme forum, will develop with still greater energy and practical effectiveness the struggle to fulfill the congress decisions and the plans of the 12th 5-Year Plan. (applause)

Presidium, Leaders Discuss Congress Decisions

LD172034 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 17 Mar 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Today the Presidium of the USSR Council of Ministers,at its meeting with leaders of USSR ministries and departments and with representatives of the councils of ministers of union republics taking part, examined the question of immediate measures for the organization of the fulfillment of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Measures directed toward the fulfillment of the con-gress's decisions, of the provisions, conclusions, and tasks set out in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee, and the realization of the Basic Guidelines of Economic and Social Development for the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period to the Year 2000 approved by the congress, were determined.

The Presidium of the USSR Council of Ministers made it incumbent upon USSR ministries and departments, and councils of ministers of union republics, to begin, in accordance with the decision by the CPSU Central Committee Politburo of 13 March, work on the practical implementation of tasks set by the 27th CPSU Congress, to mobilize all potential and reserves to accelerate the country's socioeconomic development, and to secure in the 12th 5-Year Plan period a fundamental shift in raising the efficiency of public production.

The immediate implementation of measures was mapped out to further perfect the system of management and the economic mechanism, to improve the style and methods of work of central economic organs, ministries, and departments in expanding the independence of associations and enterprises and increase their responsibility for the end result of work, and to create conditions for the growth of activity and initiative of labor collectives. Particular attention was turned to the acceleration of scientific-technical progress, the raising of labor productivity, organization, and discipline, the raising of exactingness toward cadres, the demand for the matter entrusted, and, on this basis, the raising of the standard of living of Soviet people.

The meeting also examined questions concerned with the preparation of the draft of the 5-year plan for 1986-1990.

Congressional Debate on Soviets Role Examined

[Editorial: "The 27th CPSU Congress on Enhancing the Role of the Soviets"]

[Text] "If some people can say: That has nothing to do with me, for the soviets that formulation is unacceptable." These words from the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th congress are a type of key to understanding the role of the local soviets in economic and cultural building and their responsibility "for all spheres of life on their territory."

All spheres of life. This concept includes much that ultimately determines Soviet people's healthy daily life and productive labor. Housing, children's preschool institutions, consumer goods, education and health care, trade, consumer services, public transport and roads, leisure and nature conservation — all this vitally interests every family and every Soviet person and is therefore a vital concern of the soviets which today have over 2.3 million deputies in their ranks and rely on their numerous activists in their daily work.

Whatever problems of an economic and social nature were mentioned from the congress' lofty platform, the solution of these problems depends to some degree or other on precisely how local soviets link their work with the tasks of the day and whether they make full use of their powers to investigate the state of affairs seriously and in depth and to enhance their role, as the congress resolution emphasizes, "in mobilizing the masses to the acceleration of the socioeconomic and spiritual development of society..."

An important function of the soviets is the elaboration, assertion, and implementation of plans for the comprehensive development of their territories. There is a wealth of work here, as they say. And problems. Particularly on the social plane. The interests of the oblast and the sector clash on the soviet's territory. And it is far from always — the congress delegates stated this frankly — that the local organs of power succeed in implementing their powers.

In Moscow Oblast, for instance, all 130 union and union-republic ministries and departments have their own enterprises and organizations, but not one of them is displaying interest in creating a sensible regional production infrastructure. For a number of years there has been no success in combining territorial and sectorial interests in the leather workers' city, Bogorodsk, Gorkiy Oblast, where 15 related enterprises of light industry of union and republic subordination work separately and, in practice, fail to resolve social problems. These problems are being drawn into a tight knot in many oblasts of the non-Chernozem Zone, Siberia, and the Far East.

Today the soviets, the congress stressed, act, as a rule, in the role of sole client for the construction of housing, municipal, and socioconsumer projects. Many of them are constructed with the mutual participation of union ministries' enterprises. It is here, where departments meet, that problems arise. Many specific facts were cited from the congress platform. Their thrust was that the dimensions of shared participation, unfortunately, still undergo a lengthy coordination stage in the ministries and USSR Gosplan. But even after the approval of all documents, the central departments as a rule forget to allocate these funds. So the leaders of the local party and soviet organs have to tour the echelons of management and argue for their right to this share and act in the role of supplicants. The congress delegates suggested introducing a procedure whereby the funds agreed on for the development of the social infrastructure are centrally allocated by the USSR Gosplan to a single client for the entire 5-year plan.

The congress gave a principled assessment of what is impeding our common cause and our headway. At the present stage of society's qualitative transformation the party is demanding from the soviets new efforts and principledness in assessing their own work, efficiency, and selflessness. After all, if decisions are not fulfilled, if problems brew and remain unresolved for years, if deputies' initiative nearly always comes up against barricades of instructions and circulars, that means the soviets lack efficiency, principledness, and enterprising action. That means the control they exercise is slack. In particular, and this could explain the fact, on the territory under the jurisdiction of the Krasnoyarsk Kray and Kemerovo and Omsk Oblast Soviets and in a number of other regions a considerable lag has been allowed behind union indicators for working people's provision with well-appointed housing, children's preschool institutions, clubs, and general educational schools and for the level of municipal and consumer services and communications. Speaking of this, the congress delegates actively supported the provision put forward in the Political Report to enhance the soviets' role and the specific proposal it voices "... to examine the question of soviets' relationships with the enterprises on their territories under higher-ranking jurisdiction and to increase the interest of local organs of power in the results of their work."

The enhancement of the role of the local soviets is mentioned in the CPSU Program and the Basic Guidelines for the USSR's Economic and Social Development for 1986-1990 and the Period Through 2000. In the time which has elapsed since the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum, soviets of all ranks have taken an active part in and implemented a number of our party's major measures to shift the economy to an intensive development footing and to enhance the effectiveness of the management of the national economy. Practical steps have been taken to further introduce order, to consolidate labor and state discipline and the regime of thrift, and to struggle against drunkenness and alcoholism. But that is only a beginning. The main work lies ahead.

The congress wholly approved the party's economic and social policy and obliged the party, soviet, economic, and public organizations "to base all their activity on the unconditional implementation of the program directives for the national economy's transition to an intensive path of development," to open up scope "for truly revolutionary transformations" in the economy, and to scale the projected heights. After all, in 15 years we must double our production potential; that is, create as much as was created in the seven decades since October.

The intensive development of the economy is a very important factor in ensuring a materially and spiritually rich and socially full life for Soviet people. That is why businesslike, constructive criticism was levelled from the congress platform against the local soviets: as few words and faceless, unspecific resolutions as possible, as many practical actions as possible, and a more responsible attitude towards their duties. The maximum soul and zest in work with people!

The country has accumulated considerable experience in the soviets' really businesslike work. In Ulyanovsk Oblast, for instance, the role of the local organs of power has been considerably enhanced recently. The workers of the soviet ispolkom planning commissions are predicting end results and revealing "bottlenecks" in the work of enterprises under their jurisdiction. Approaches have also been found to pool the efforts of sectorial and territorial organs of management. The actions of the ministries have been coordinated with local organizations for each enterprise in the oblast. All this has made it possible to ensure stable fulfillment of the plan for the majority of indicators from one month to the next. This attests yet again to the fact that the soviets have the rights and the opportunity to improve work on the comprehensive and planned provision of socioeconomic amenities for their territories.

Proceeding from the decisions of the 27th congress of our party, the soviet workers and deputies must learn to work daily and persistently in a new way, to prevent complacency, to give a principled assessment of those leaders who preach the pernicious practice of improving matters without changing anything. It was resolutely emphasized from the congress platform that it is time to put an end to the situation whereby soviet workers verbally recognize the need to fulfill their pledges, but in fact reduce everything to making decisions which are backed by nothing but paper-shuffling. Life not only demands from the leaders of the soviet ispolkoms and all deputies psychological restructuring under the new conditions, but also persistently prompts them to vigorous practical actions.

Receiving a mandate from the electorate, deputies of all ranks assume the responsibility to strictly observe Lenin's instructions on the soviets as organs which not only make decisions, but also organize their implementation and the verification of their execution. In its resolution the congress demanded precision and efficiency in the activity of the soviet ispolkoms and other state organs. It obliged them to resolutely eradicate manifestations of departmentalism and local favoritism, irresponsibility and bureaucracy, and a merely formal, indifferent attitude toward people. It is essential to ensure the regularity of the reports from ispolkoms and other organs of management to the labor collectives and meetings of the population and to make more effective use of various forms of effective control over the work of the management apparatus by the working people.

The party's aims are an explicit program for the local soviet ispolkoms in their vigorous and purposeful work to fulfill the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Congress Results Highlight Communist Theory

PM171515 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 14 Mar 86 First Edition pp 2-3

[V. Sergeyev article: "The 27th CPSU Congress: a Creative Development of Marxist-Leninist Theory"]

[Text] The 27th CPSU Congress was an event of truly crucial significance in the country's life. The party's collective intelligence gave the answers to fundamental questions of our society's further development and armed every communist and every Soviet person with a clear vision of the new tasks and ways of resolving them.

The Central Committee Political Report, the new edition of the party program, the changed CPSU Statutes, and the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for the 12th 5-Year Plan and the Period Through the Year 2000 are documents of tremendous theoretical and political significance. The general line, comprehensively substantiated in these documents, toward the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development and the consolidation of world peace represents a new contribution to both the theory and the practice of communist building and is the foundation of the multifaceted work of the Leninist party and all the people.

In elaborating its strategic principles and resolving concrete tasks of communist building, the CPSU invariably builds on the firm foundations of Marxist-Leninist teaching.

"Marxist-Leninism is the greatest revolutionary philosophy," M.S. Gorbachev noted in the Central Committee Political Report to the 27th congress. "It has laid down the most humane goal which mankind has ever set itself — the creation of a just social system on earth. It points the way to the scientific study of social development as an integrated process which, for all of its tremendously diverse and contradictory nature, is governed by laws, and it teaches us to analyze correctly the nature and interaction of economic and political forces, to choose the right avenues, forms, and methods of struggle, and to feel confident at the major turning points of history."

With all of its revolutionary way of thinking and innovative spirit, the 27th party congress demonstrated that loyalty to the fundamental principles of Marxism-Leninism is a condition and a guarantee of the correctness of the political course at any stage in history, however crucial. At the same time, Marxist-Leninist teaching is by no means a collection of stagnant outlines and formulas which can be used everywhere and in all circumstances. Its strength lies in the continual creative quest, the constant generalization and dialectical interpretation of new facts and phenomena, of the experience of the revolutionary struggle and social transformations. and in analyzing the concrete economic and political situation in which we live and act and the particular features of that phase of the historical process through which Soviet society and the whole world is passing. The CPSU follows without fail Lenin's demand: "...take into account real life, the accurate facts of reality, rather than clinging to yesterday's theory" (V.I. Lenin, Complete Collected Works, Vol 31, p 134).

Today the party's theoretical thought and practical activity is centered on an unprecedentedly complex range of problems arising from the objective and in many respects, new realities of the present day, from the crucial stage in the development of our society and the world as a whole. The key to the resolution of these problems — immediate and long-term, economic and social, political and social, domestic and foreign — is the comprehensive acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development. The concept of acceleration put forward by the CPSU is a major achievement of creative Marxism-Leninism.

"The higher you go, the more rapidly matters advance," F. Engels wrote, referring to the objective nature of the acceleration of the development of any material system as it rises to higher levels of maturity (K. Marx, F. Engels, Works, Vol 20, p 620). This applies directly to social progress. In our era socialism has caused just such a mighty acceleration of the world historical process. And the higher the level to which the new system rises, the more rapidly "matters must advance" and the greater the need for qualitative changes in society and the acceleration of its progress at the stage of developed socialism.

The prevailing conditions require that theoretical and political thought be channeled not toward consolidating what has been achieved, but toward substantiating the ways and methods of accelerating socioeconomic progress. It is on the basis of acceleration that our society must scale new heights, in order to reveal most fully the socialist system's advantages and to resolve the problems inherited from preceding stages.

The course of acceleration demands radical changes in the economic sphere. It demands an active social policy and the consistent establishment of the principles of socialist justice. The strategy of acceleration means improving social relations, renewing the forms and methods of work by political and ideological institutions, deepening socialist democracy, resolutely overcoming inertia, stagnation, and conservatism, and utilizing all the potential and advantages of the socialist system. Acceleration relies on the masses' living energy and thus, on the fullest possible exploitation of the human factor. The new qualitative condition of society can and should be achieved only in this way.

The successful resolution of the tasks of acceleration in all their multifaceted, interrelated aspects prompts intensive work in theoretical thought and acts as an effective stimulus to the development of all three components of Marxist-Leninist teaching. The 27th CPSU Congress set a shining example of this approach to theory and revealed its inexhaustible vitality.

Marx' philosophy, V.I. Lenin wrote, gave mankind and the working class in particular the "big guns of understanding" (Vol 23, p 44). The party's tried and tested weapon — the method of dialectical materialism — makes it possible to deeply penetrate the very essence of social phenomena and to understand the picture of the world in all its complexity, diversity, dynamism, and contradictoriness. The Central Committee Political Report and the new edition of the CPSU Program give a comprehensive analysis of the main trends and features of current world development.

The realities of the historical process today are the confrontation between the two world socioeconomic systems, the need for peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems, the deepening of the general crisis of capitalism, the contradictory aspirations and paths of development of countries which have won liberation from colonial oppression, and the multitiered social movements of our era. But the dialectics of world development are such that it is in these kaleidoscopic conditions, where processes taking place in individual countries and regions affect each other organically, that the interrelatedness of the fates of states and peoples objectively grows. It is through the struggle of opposites that we see the emergence of a contradictory, yet interdependent and largely integrated world in which the idea of human unity forges a path with particular force and logic in the face of the nuclear threat. The age-old question "to be or not to be" takes on not only a philosophical meaning, but a universal practical meaning. After all, it is a question of war and peace, of the survival of the human race and the preservation of civilization. In conditions where the two socioeconomic systems differ radically in both their readiness and their ability to interpret and resolve the problems which arise, particular relevance and value are attached to the recognition and assertion of Lenin's idea of peaceful coexistence.

Soviet foreign policy is based on this idea, which is an organic part of it, and on an understanding of all the difficulties, the many stages of complex processes ensuring the establishment of a lasting peace acceptable to all countries. It takes into account the real difficulties and contradictions in relations between countries, the differences in ideologies and social systems, and the totality of factors which determine international relations.

The CPSU proceeds on the basis that however great the threat of nuclear cataclysm, world war is not a fatal inevitability. Mankind can be saved from self-destruction. That is the historic mission of socialism and of all progressive, peace-loving forces. The possibility of curbing the forces of war exists. It lies in the strengthening of socialism's positions, the growth of its influence in the world, and the real changes in the correlation of forces in the world arena. It lies in the increasingly close unity of the main revolutionary forces of today — world socialism, the workers and communist movement, the peoples of the liberated states, and mass democratic movements against imperialism and its policy of aggression and oppression and for peace, democracy, and social progress.

Today, as man becomes increasingly aware of the planetary, global scale of his activity, he cannot but feel a sense of personal responsibility for the future of civilization, the outlines of which are already sketched out. The importance of the theoretical study of global contradictions was particularly stressed in the 27th CPSU Congress documents. It may be said that global problems are the touchstone by which the depth of the dialectical approach to the world and the scientific substantiation of the proposed practical solutions are measured today. Here the historical truth is with socialism.

An understanding of the particular features of the current moment and consideration of the objective laws of social development demand a creative, innovative approach and the ability to go beyond customary, but obsolete ideas on the part of the party and every Communist. As the new edition of the CPSU Program notes, paramount significance is attached to the scientific analysis of the objective contradictions of socialist society and the elaboration of well-substantiated recommendations for resolving them. The very nature of socialism dictates the need for a systematic, conscious exploitation of the laws of social development. That is the most important condition for the acceleration of the country's progress.

The radical restructuring of the economy and the economic machinery which has begun is impossible without the support of science. The practice of communist building demands that politico-economic theory be substantially advanced. The 27th CPSU Congress considerably enriched our ideas about the paths of socioeconomic growth and the transition to an economy of superior organization and efficiency with comprehensively developed production forces, mature socialist production relations, and a well-oiled economic machinery.

Marxism-Leninism established a very important law of social development: The acceleration of the progress of production forces requires corresponding forms of organization of economic life. But the dialectical correlation between production relations and the nature of production forces is not automatically guaranteed. Considerable efforts are needed for this theoretical truth to acquire appropriate forms of implementation in daily reality. Socialist production relations undoubtedly sweep away the palisade of obstacles erected by capitalism in the path of production forces. But it is also obvious that these preconditions for progress can only be utilized best given the constant improvement of production relations. That is why it is so important to notice obsolescent economic management methods in good time and to replace them with new ones based firmly on the laws of socialism.

The primarily extensive development of our economy gave rise to forms of production relations and methods of planning and management which gradually lost their stimulating effect on the rate and entire course of economic building. In order to open up new scope for production forces, it is necessary to change the orientation of the economic machinery, overcome its expenditure-based nature, and direct it toward improving quality and efficiency, accelerating scientific and technical progress, and increasing the role of the human factor.

Marxism has always attached great significance to the revolution in production relations which arises from the elimination of private ownership. But that revolution is not a once-and-for-all act as a result of which the basic means of production become the property of the whole people. It must not be forgotten that people's attitudes toward ownership are cultivated above all by the real conditions in which they live and their opportunities to influence the organization of production, distribution, exchange, and utilization of the results of labor.

The 27th congress pointed to the need to resolutely increase the role of labor collectives in the utilization of public property. True financial autonomy requires enterprises and associations to be fully responsible for ensuring that their work does not make a loss. And each worker's level of income should depend directly on his personal contribution and on the concrete contribution of the collective to increasing the national wealth.

One of the most important tasks of the politico-economic theory of socialism is the study of the problems of combining various economic interests (those of sectors, regions, collectives, and so forth) on the basis of giving unconditional priority to the interests of the whole people. The single owner of the means of production — the socialist society — cannot allow departmentalism and parochialism to hamper the exercise of the advantages of socialism's economic system.

The acceleration of socioeconomic development is associated with the creative quest in the cause of improving the economic machinery. "Here," it was noted in the Central Committee Political Report, "we should not allow fixed ideas, still less prejudices, to stop us. If, for instance, it is necessary and justified to make use of economic normatives instead of certain directive indicators, this does not mean a departure from the principles of planned leadership, only a change in its methods and means. The same could be said of the need to step up the autonomy, initiative, and responsibility of associations and enterprises and enhance their role as socialist producers of goods.

"Unfortunately, the situation whereby any change in the economic machinery is regarded as practically a deviation from the principles of socialism has become widespread. In this connection, the following should be stressed: The highest criterion of the improvement of management, and indeed of the entire system of socialist production relations, should be socioeconomic acceleration and the strengthening of socialism in practice."

Important methodological significance is attached to the congress' conclusions that in socialist production the cooperative form of ownership and a commodity-money relationship developing on a socialist basis have by no means exhausted their potential.

The 27th CPSU Congress showed convincingly that communists regard the economic teaching of Marx, Engels, and Lenin not as a dogma, but as living guidance for action.

The main distinguishing feature of the communist philosophy is that it is invariably centered on man and his interests and concerns. Marx' idea, "...How a society itself produces man determines as well how man produces society" (Works, Vol 42, p 118), is true of all socioeconomic formations. But in the conditions of socialism — and this is how it differs in principle from previous social systems — people create social relations consciously. That is why, as the new society strengthens and the tasks it resolves become more complex, the role of the human factor inevitably grows. It is no accident that the problem of professional and spiritual development and of increasing people's social role and promoting their moral growth was raised by the 27th CPSU Congress as simultaneously the end and the means for socialist society to scale qualitatively new heights.

The communists' programmatic principle is to achieve the complete well-being and free, all-around development of all members of society. That presupposes the resolution of all other problems of our life — above all, economic problems — in indissoluble linkage with the implementation of an active social policy, the heightening of attention toward the social sphere, and the consistent assertion of the principles of socialist justice everywhere.

Socialism eliminates the main source of social injustice — the exploitation of man by man and inequality with regard to the means of production. In our society, real people's power and equality of citizens before the law, actual equality of nations, and respect for the individual have become established; the conditions for the all-around development of the individual have been created; and wide social guarantees are ensured.

At the same time, justice depends entirely on the material content manifested in it. This content is just insofar as it corresponds to and matches the mode of production (K. Marx and F. Engels, Works, Vol 25, Part I, p 373). The principle "From each according to his ability, to each according to his labor" is inherent in the socialist mode of production. And the full translation of this principle into practice is a most important task. The 27th CPSU Congress elaborated a specific and precise policy in the sphere of distributive relationships which is designed to ensure that wages are strictly dependent on the quantity and quality of labor.

Experience testifies that, given observance of the principle of distribution according to labor, there is an invariable increase in labor productivity and a sharp improvement in the results of labor in every collective and at every work place. Thus, the path to the solution of economic problems is laid via the implementation of the norms of social justice.

Vital importance for a Marxist-Leninist party is attached to analysis of the problems of the interrelationships between classes and social groups. The Central Committee Political Report reveals the significance and content of the concept of the unity of socialist society, which is established on the basis of the consideration in party policy of the community of interests and specifics of classes and social groups. The cornerstone of CPSU policy is constant concern to strengthen the alliance of the working class, peasantry, and intelligentsia while retaining the vanguard role for the working class, which holds the leading position in the system of socialist production, possesses great political experience, and displays great creativity, organization, and activeness.

Opportunities for concentrating forces for the accelerated resolution of topical economic and social tasks lie precisely in the unity of Soviet society. However, socialism in no way downplays the individuality and uniqueness of the individual. On the contrary, our system has a vital interest in developing the entire multiplicity of people's requirements and abilities and developing competition and rivalry among intellects and talents, without which a socialist way of life is totally inconceivable and progress is impossible.

The congress also examined problems of national relations in the context of the strengthening of our society's unity and the consolidation of the collectivist foundations of the socialist way of life. Relying on V.I. Lenin's teaching on the nationalities question, the party analyzed the contradictions inherent in this sphere of the life of society. The main thing here is to see the increasingly new aspects and facets of these contradictions, to seek and provide prompt and correct answers to the questions posed by life itself, to unswervingly follow Lenin's wise behests and creatively apply them in the new conditions, and to be infinitely attentive and principled in national relations.

The acceleration of society's development and the growth of man's social role are also inconceivable without the further improvement of socialist democracy and all its aspects and manifestations. The Central Committee Political Report and the new edition of the party program profoundly and comprehensively substantiate the concept of the people's socialist self-management and apply to the practice of socialism's political life Lenin's idea that management is not only carried out in the interests of working people, but naturally and gradually becomes an immediate matter for working people themselves, who are subject to no power except the power of their own unification. When millions of people rise up to play a conscious part in political life, that constitutes working people's self-management in the Leninist interpretation, the essence of Soviet power. The congress noted in particular that the development of self-management foundations is not external, but internal to our statehood, penetrating increasingly fully into every pore of state and social life, enriching the content of democratic centralism, and strengthening its socialist nature.

Man's tremendous creative potential is also materialized in the spiritual sphere and the development of social awareness. This is a complex and contradictory process. But the uniqueness of the present stage makes the problems which have come to a head here particularly acute. The congress drew attention to the intensification of the interconnection between, on the one hand, the growth of the degree of society's maturity in the course of communist building and, on the other, the steady growth of the maturity of awareness and the enrichment of man's spiritual world. The party's ideological activity, the new edition of the CPSU Program states, must be distinguished by close harnessing to social practice, profundity of ideological-theoretical content, full and precise consideration of the realities of domestic and international life and working people's increased spiritual requirements, closeness to people, truthfulness, a sound basis of argument, and specificity. The prime condition for accelerating the country's socioeconomic development is to orient society toward the new tasks and involve the people's creative potential in resolving them.

The 27th CPSU Congress materials creatively develop Lenin's teaching on the party of the new type. History testifies that whenever new tasks face the country, the party finds ways to resolve them and restructures and alters leadership methods, displaying the ability to be equal to the responsibility for the fate of socialism and peace.

The new tasks — the tasks of the qualitative transformation of society — can be resolved by the party only if it itself develops continuously. As the congress defined it, the essence of the restructuring of party work lies in ensuring that every party organization wages an active struggle to implement the April Plenum's line and lives in an atmosphere of seeking and updating the forms and methods of its activity.

The 19 million-strong CPSU is the supreme form of a self-managing sociopolitical organization. Its role is growing on a law-governed basis under present-day conditions. This is the result, as the new edition of the CPSU Program notes, not only of internal factors, but also of the increased complexity of the tasks being resolved by the party in the international arena.

It is important to note that the implementation of the CPSU's leading role does not mean direct management of social processes. The party exercises political leadership of society and determines its general development prospects. It formulates the main tasks in the socioeconomic and spiritual spheres of life and concerns itself with the selection and deployment of cadres and general control. As for ways and methods for resolving specific economic and sociocultural questions, considerable freedom of choice is granted here to every management organ and labor collective and to economic cadres. Therefore, the party at its congress again spoke out resolutely against confusing the functions of party committees and the functions of state and public organs.

In the Central Committee Political Report, the new edition of the program, and the amended CPSU Statutes, the Leninist principles of democratic centralism, collectivity of leadership, criticism and self-criticism, and cadre policy are enriched in light of the new conditions. The scale and complexity of the problems being resolved and the need to draw, to the full, uncompromising lessons from the past — these are precisely the factors which dictate the new demands made of cadres and the entire style and methods of party work.

The 27th CPSU Congress encompassed a very broad spectrum of theoretical problems affecting the processes both of the creation of the new society and also of world development. Today the party feels more than ever an insistent need for serious philosophical generalizations, substantiated economic and social predictions, and in-depth historical research. The tasks facing the social sciences are extensive indeed. Social scientists must involve themselves more extensively in the resolution of specific practical questions, react sensitively to changes in life, keep new phenomena in their field of view, and strive for weighty theoretical and practical results. The congress' innovative provisions and conclusions provide rich opportunities for creative questing.

Immediately after the victory of October V.I. Lenin said that for a working class party "theory means substantiating actions which are taken in order to inspire confidence in them...." The ability to be out in front in theory and promptly raise and resolve new questions of social development — all this constitutes a solid Leninist tradition of our party. The 27th CPSU Congress confirmed this tremendously forcefully and convincingly.

Publishing Chief Discusses Changes in CPSU Rules

LD172334 Moscow World Service in English
1710 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Interview with M.F. Nenashev, chairman of the USSR State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants, and the Book Trade, by unidentified presenter; Nenashev in Russian with superimposed English translation]

[Excerpt] [Presenter] What is the essence of the changes in the [CPSU] Rules?

[Nenashev] Democracy within the party is to be further expanded and the rules should enhance the initiative and responsibility of Communists and their party organizations.

[Presenter] The party rules say that the guiding principle of the party's organizational structure and its entire life and activities is democratic centralism. But some listeners believe democracy and centralism cancel each other out. How would you explain the point to them?

[Nenashev] Centralism and democracy, when they are organically fused, is a combination of two interconnected foundations, not of two opposite poles, by far. Yes indeed, there are central bodies, but they are elected by the lower branches of the party. That means the destiny of centralism is settled at a democratic level. There is very wide freedom of discussion and criticism in the Soviet Communist Party, but after a decision has been taken in a democratic way — that is, by the will of the majority — its implementation is obligatory for all members of (?a) party organization regardless of the position some of them aired before the decision was taken.

Take the following example: Before the congress all the party organizations discussed the drafts of the party rules and program widely and actively. Each party member spoke freely at meetings or contributed to the press his or her own proposals. The discussion went on at the congress. Many remarks and amendments were incorporated in the final texts of the party documents but, after the party endorsed the documents, they acquired the force of law for party members. We establish our party discipline ourselves. No one imposes it on us. A person who finds such discipline too confining should not join the party.

[Presenter] What was the need to make more specific the requirements to party members in the rules?

[Nenashev] Today, when a crucial term has shaken this country towards intensification, towards raising efficiency and accelerating social and economic development, and towards technological renewal, not all people can keep up with such a tempo, can give up the usual routine. But a party member is duty bound to innovate, to possess the precious feeling of all things new, and not to fear taking certain risks, even against the current if necessary. Actually, for that matter, the party required all these qualities of its members before, but these qualities today are much more important and necessary and are required of every party member.

[Nenashev] Being a party member does not give any privileges. It only means higher responsibility for everything taking place in the country, for the destinies of social progress.

[Presenter] One obligation of a party member under the party rules is to oppose the people who impede progress. What sort of impediments are meant?

[Nenashev] We are persistently attempting to overcome bureaucracy and formalism, lack of conscientiousness, misuse of powers, career seeking, nepotism, and protectionism. That is, we want to uproot (?mores) and morals that run counter to the socialist way of life.

[Presenter] The rules are the law for the party's internal life. How do they tally with the fundamental law of the nation, the USSR Constitution?

[Nenashev] The party rules cannot contradict the constitution, but they go much further in the requirements for party members since they reflect the vanguard nature of the party. I would like to make the following point. A communist is a person who sees more and looks ahead further, who is more dissatisfied with what has already been achieved, who has a criticial attitude, who feels what has been done is not yet enough, who is restlessly thinking about how to do more and in a better way. That is the guarantee of the party's prestige among the rest of the people.

[Presenter] If the requirements for Communists are so exacting is it possible for the party to continue growing numerically?

[Nenashev] Ours is a vanguard party. It has never set itself, nor does it set now, a goal of accepting into its ranks all citizens of this country. One can be most actively involved in the political life, in running all the affairs of state and society, without being a party member, which is what many citizens of this country not affiliated with the party are doing successfully.

[Presenter] It's fair legal practice that a person cannot be punished twice for one and the same misdemeanor and yet, according to Article 12 in the party rules the party members faces a double responsibility for a violation of Soviet law, to the state and to the party. What can you say in this regard?

[Nenashev] I don't think there is any contradiction here. Communists reprimand or otherwise punish their party comrades in the following ways: First, a party member is admonished, he can also take a reprimand, and finally, he faces expulsion from the party. It goes without saying that the party cannot apply administrative or criminal punishment against members. That is the exclusive domain of the state.

[Presenter] Now this final question. Could you put in a few words the essence of the Soviet Communist Party Rules?

[Nenashev] That essence is expressed in the rules themselves, which contain the following lines, and I quote: The party exists for the people and serves the people. It is the highest form of public and political organization, the nucleus of the political system, the leading and guiding force of Soviet society. Unquote.

CPSU Congress Materials Published as Pamphlets

PM151747 [Editorial Report] Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 14 March in the First Edition carries on page 2 a TASS report headed "Separate Publication," of which the text reads:

"The 27th CPSU Congress Resolution on the CPSU Central Committee Political Report and the resolutions of the 27th party congress have been published as a separate pamphlet. The pamphlet is published by the Political Literature Publishing House."

This is followed by another TASS report headed "Our Course: Acceleration" and reading:

"A pamphlet has been published containing the text of the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and for the Period Through the Year 2000, which were adopted unanimously by the 27th CPSU Congress. The pamphlet is published by the Political Literature Publishing House."

Belorussian Plenum Assesses Results of Congress

LD151534 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian

[Text] In Minsk today a plenum of the Belorussian Communist Party Central Committee discussed the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic party organization in fulfilling its decisions.

Comrade Slyunkov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Belorussian Communist Party Central Committee, delivered a report. The republic's Communists entered an amendment in the program of intensification, which defines the boundaries of the economic development of Belorussia for the current 5-year plan period. They proposed increasing the target for growth in the national income to 26 instead of the planned 23.8 percent. Moreover, it has been decided to obtain the entire increase as a result of raising labor productivity and by lowering materials consumption. It was noted at the plenum that the tasks put forward by the congress cannot be accomplished without reorganizing the thinking and style of work of cadres and introducing innovative and nontraditional approaches to the development of science, technology and production; while the human factor can be properly activated only through a well thought-out economic strategy and social policy, and purposeful ideological and educational work.

In whatever problems were touched on by participants in the plenum about raising the contribution of science to achieving a steady growth in production of agricultural output, about perfecting the work-style of party committees or about reorganizing the activity of state and public organizations, they stressed that the republic's Communists see their first duty in turning the energy of ideas born at the party congress into the enrgy of action.

Meeting Focuses on Quality of Sports Goods

PM171243 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Mar 86
First Edition p 2

[Reports by V. Cherbakov: "For Millions of Athletes"]

[Text] In all of the all-union planning, technological, and experimental design institute of sports and tourist articles meetings on 15 March there was a discussion of questions connected with the development and expansion of the production of goods and equipment for physical culture and sport.

Enterprises of 78 ministries are involved in Soviet sports industry production. An impressive figure. But a considerable proportion of the output is still of poor quality and falls short of world standards. The question of output of equipment, clothes, and shoes for children is particularly acute. For example, around 300,000 tunics are currently needed for exponents of unarmed combat. Industry is producing scarcely more than 30,000 and for adults alone.

At the discussion there was an examination of questions connected with sharply increasing the production of high-quality sports goods made from modern materials using the latest techniques. There was also a discussion about including sports training equipment, collapsible swimming pools, fencing masks, bows, and many other sports items in the list of cultural and consumer goods.

The meeting participants looked around the permanent exhibition of sports goods and familiarized themselves with some promising types of clothing and sports suits developed by specialists in the Main Administration of the Sports Industry.

The conference was attended by Ye.K. Ligachev, Politburo member and secretary of the CPSU Central Commite; N.V. Talyzin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR Gosplan; A.P. Biryukova, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; L.A. Voroninin, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR Gossnab; V.G. Klyuyev, USSR minister of light industry; V.V. Listov, member of the CPSU Central Committee; and representatives of ministries and departments. M.V. Gramov, chairman of the USSR Committee for Physical Culture and Sports, acted as guide during the visit to the exhibition.

The development of physical culture and sport, as was noted at the 27th CPSU Congress, and their introduction into everyone's daily life are an important matter. It is a matter of the health of millions of people. The task is to ensure fulfillment of the plans to increase production of sports goods which are enormously popular among a broad strata of the population.

Officials Criticized on Housing Defects in Rostov

[V. Zanozin article under the rubric "Closer to People, Comrade Soviet": "Recurring Complaint" — first paragraph is SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA introduction]

[Text] SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA has repeatedly written about shortcomings in the supply of heat and water to households in wintertime and the preparation of homes for cold weather. But the flood of readers' letters provides evidence that this still remains an acute problem.

Rostov Oblast [No date given] — The number of recurring complaints by working people to soviet organizations in Rostov Oblast has recently risen significantly. The total number of such complaints exceeds 16,000 a year. Lines form for personal meetings with leaders responsible for repairs to housing and the work of the heating and water supply network. Why is this happening?

One winter evening, rain started coming through the ceiling in the ninth floor apartments of the block at 143, Volkov Street in the oblast center. At the same time, the temperature in apartments of the block at 36, Dobrovolskiy Street in the very same Voroshilovskiy Rayon in Rostov-na-donu fell so low that residents were forced to switch on all electric heaters and gas burners, while some heated their homes by filling the bath tubs with boiling water.

It would be reasonable to assume that the residents' complaints would result in the most energetic intervention by the appropriate organizations. Alas, this was not to be. A different path was selected: To convince the applicants that the situation was hopeless. In any case, this was roughly the answer they obtained from Voroshilovskiy Rayispolkom Chairman V.N. Ampilogov: "At present, it is technically impossible to carry out repairs." Yet, informed specialists said repairs were possible.

Viktor Nikolayevich cited the fact that he had not been working as rayispolkom chairman for very long. This was evidently why, in the course of one citizens' reception session, he reached for the telephone after almost every question and asked his deputy V.V. Pugovkin in the next office for advice. This would have seemed to be the time to invite Vladimir Vitalyevich to meet the callers personally, since in his written answers he categorically rejects the applicants' arguments. Pugovkin wrote in reply to a letter from the above-mentioned No 36: "Both the heating system and the hot and cold water supply system are new and operational." But the deputy ispolkom chairman was obviously unwilling to hear any different opinions and found it more convenient to "comment" on the telephone.

A lengthy investigation of the complaint confirmed the facts stated in the letters. New facts were added to what had already been reported. The block's power supply is unsatisfactory and walls in six apartments are letting water through. The wind recently brought down decorative fittings from 45 balconies and the approach roads have not been properly laid.... Imagine the amazement when, after all this, V.V. Pugovkin calmly told us when we met him: "We have no outstanding problems concerning block No 36."

This looks very much like downright deception. First, on official forms, then in the office. The practice of pulling wool over people's eyes is firmly rooted at the ispolkom.

We asked the construction workers whether the situation is equally hopeless as regards, for example, the roofs. No, we were told, there are people to repair them in the oblast center, if only the Oktyabrskiy production and operation trust or the special administration for repairs to large-panel buildings. Finally, there is also the emergency repair service. Why did the rayispolkom not think of them, why did it not use its powers and duties to settle the matter?

This block was built for war veterans and was considered a showpiece by the housing construction combine. It was erected in, so to speak, the full glare of publicity by A.F. Kvitko's team, who were the initiators of the struggle for guaranteed quality certification. The team coped with its task ahead of schedule, the desired certification was gained, and the housing construction combine as a whole fulfilled its annual housing commissioning plan by 129.9 percent. This was, no doubt, a cause for joy at the rayispolkom — initiative, pace, and scope. The only thing they forgot was that the list of defects at block No 36 contained... about 500 items left undone.

We have cited just one example, but it reflects vividly enough the entire phenomenon concerning the slow reorientation of leaders' mentality and the occurrence of defects resulting from the old-fashioned way of working. The events in Oktyabrskiy Rayispolkom are actually typical of other soviet organs in the city. Quite a few examples can be cited to confirm the fact that the practice of avoiding specific action is quite widespread. Let us ponder these facts. For some reason or another, various institutions prefer to refer specific issues to their subordinates, even though people expect an answer from them and from no one else. Last year, for example, the Rostov Gorispolkom received over 1,000 working people's letters from the party gorkom, 1,500 letters from the oblispolkom, and about 3,500 letters from the party obkom. In turn, the gorispolkom redirected this flow to the various rayons and they redirected it somewhere else. The result was that many people's requests remained unsatisfied without anyone bearing specific responsibility for this. No wonder there is a growing number of complaints recurring time and again!

Tashkent Meeting Debates Tasks of Media Organs

GF161656 Tashkent Domestic Service in Uzbek 0215 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] Employees of mass media and propaganda organs held a meeting in the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee on

14 March. Also participating in the meeting were leading officials and journalists of the Uzbek SSR State Committee for Television and Radio Broadcasting and the news agencies, employees of the republic's State Committee for [words indistinct], correspondents for central newspapers and the all-union television and radio broadcasting network, and responsible officials of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee, oblast party committees, and the Tashkent city party committee. The convocation deliberated on the tasks of the mass media and propaganda organs as derived from the decisions adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress. Comrade Abdullayeva, secretary of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee, addressed the meeting participants.

The meeting confirmed that the press, television, and radio have been allocated a heavy and significant role in the effort to be made for realizing the party's economic program and social policy and shaping socialist life. The CPSU has described them as a strong means for people's control. The attention of the mass media and propaganda organs must be turned toward conveying the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee, the party program, rules, and regulations, and the other documents of the congress. The task is to guide each and every Soviet individual on the role and [words indistinct]. Important in this regard is [words indistinct].

Improved Artistic Output Required in Future

PM181229 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 16 Mar 86
First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "The Artist's Place Is in the Front Line"]

[Excerpt] The Soviet Communists' supreme forum demonstrated with renewed force the party's vital interest in further enhancing the role of literature and art. It clearly defined the main course in their development — stronger links with the people's life, truthful and highly artistic representation of socialist reality. inspired and clear disclosure of the new and progressive, and impassioned exposure of everything that impedes society's progress. "The party," the congress resolution of the CPSU Central Committee Political Report states, "supports and will continue to support all literary and artistic talent imbued with party-mindedness and the popular spirit. Ideological principle and exactingness, respect for talent, and tact constitute the norm for party organizations' work with the artistic intelligentsia."

Anyone who has linked his destiny with art and is invested with the high calling of an artist today has no right to work at half strength, at half measure, with a cold heart. The reader and the spectator can easily distinguish work of real talent from a stereotyped job. They do not wish to be reconciled to the grayness which makes itself felt in the most diverse spheres of creativity and they make justified demands on those works of literature, television programs, and movies which are not only devoid of ideological and aesthetic clarity, but also of rudimentary taste. The most drastic conclusions must be drawn from critical observations made by the public. This applies to the Ministry of Culture, the State Committee for Television and Radio Broadcasting, the State Committee for Cinematography, the State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants, and the Book Trade, and other organizations and departments on which the state of affairs in the arts sphere and the state of mass arts propaganda depend. The level of leadership in all sectors of the culture front must correspond to the demands of the time.

We have a right to expect a great deal of the creative unions — an influential social force and a school of civic awareness for workers in literature and art. It is here that formalism, inertia, and bureaucracy can be tolerated least of all. The creative unions have a wealth of tradition. They have accumulated valuable, varied experience. But decisive changes are urgently knocking at their doors. The congresses of writers, composers, and cinematographers to be held this year are good occasions for critically analyzing every aspect of the creative union's activity. We must proceed from the fact that the main outcome of this activity is measured not by resolutions and conferences, but by talented, original, socially necessary books, films, performances, pictures, and musical works.

The party and the people have never been and will never be in favor of showy, long-winded descriptions or petty, mundane detail or of opportunistic or utilitarian works. Masters of the arts must be inspired with serious, substantial, creative tasks and must bear aloft the dignity of their profession. Society expects of them the artistic discoveries and the living truth which have always been the essence of real art. The whole atmosphere of life in the creative unions, where party principle and high mutual exactingness must prevail, must impel artists to boldly investigate contemporary reality. It must infuse fresh spirit into cultural patronage and into the creative cooperation between literary and arts figures and production collectives.

Particular demands are made today on literary and artistic criticism, whose direct duty is to guard social interests and act as a transmitter of the party line in the creativity sphere. It will only worthily fulfill this role if it proceeds from social, class, genuinely Marxist ideological and aesthetic criteria and shakes off, as the party demands, complacency and undue veneration.

Today we have to live in conditions of unprecedently acute antagonism between two sociopolitical systems and of pyschological warfare unleashed by imperialist reaction against the socialist world. Demonstrating political vigilance and ideological steadfastness, Soviet artists must not stint in their efforts to make our culture a even more powerful factor in mankind's spiritual progress and an active champion of social justice and security in the world. Socialist in nature, diverse in national forms, and internationalist in spirit, the culture of developed socialism not only absorbs all that is best in world culture, but also introduces new ideological and aesthetic values to it.

The Soviet people are on a great crusade. The decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress are reliable guidelines on their way to new frontiers in the country's socioeconomic and spiritual development. The place of literature and art lies is in the working lineup. There can be no doubt that they will make a worthy contribution to enhancing the role of the human and moral factor in social affairs and in meeting the growing spiritual and aesthetic needs of the working people.

Central Statistical Administration Reports January-February Industrial Performance

PM180922 Moscow EKONOMICHESKAYA GAZETA in Russian No 12, Mar 86 (Signed to Press 13 Mar 86) p 4

[Unattributed "Statistical Summary": "USSR Industry in the First 2 Months of 1986"]

[Text] The EKONOMICHESKAYA GAZETA editorial office has received from the USSR Central Statistical Administration the following figures for the results of industry's work in January-February 1986.

The January-February plan for output sales was fulfilled 102 percent.

The total volume of industrial output increased 7.3 percent compared with the corresponding period last year.

Labor productivity rose 6.9 percent over this period.

Figures for the fulfillment of the plan for output sales and rates of production and labor productivity growth broken down by ministry are cited below:

All-Union and Union Republic Ministries and Departments	Percentage Fulfillment of Jan-Feb	Jan-Feb 1986 as Percentage of Jan-Feb 1985
	Output Sales Plan	Production Volume	Labor Productivity
Power and Electrification	100.9	103	101
Petroleum Industry	99	100.6	98
Petroleum Refining and Petrochemical Industry	101	104	104
Gas Industry	103	110	107
Coal Industry	104	107	107
Ferrous Metallurgy	102	110	110
Nonferrous Metallurgy	101	104	104
Chemical Industry	102	112	112
Production of Mineral Fertilizers	103	117	115

Commentary on Summary

The USSR Central Statistical Administration has summed up the results of industry's work in the first 2 months of 1986. In the course of the socialist competition for a fitting welcome to the 27th CPSU Congress and the 15 February all-union communist subbotnik, labor collectives in associations and enterprises ensured the fulfillment of plans and socialist pledges and accelerated the rate of growth in terms of the most important indicators of industry's work.

The overall volume of industrial production in January-February increased 7.3 percent compared with the corresponding period of last year. Labor productivity increased 6.9 percent over this period. It accounted for 95 percent of production growth.

The plan for output sales in the first 2 months of this year was fulfilled 102 percent by industry as a whole. All union republics and industrial ministries, except the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry, coped with their targets.

The gas industry achieved the fastest rate of development among sectors of the fuel and energy complex Gas extraction increased by 7 percent in comparison with the first 2 months of last year. Above-plan gas extraction amounted to 2.4 billion cubic meters. Coal industry workers extracted more than 4 million metric tons of coal in excess of the targets set for January-February, with most valuable coking coal accounting for half of this amount. At the same time, the lag in petroleum extraction persisted. Deliveries of petroleum and gas condensate were hundreds of thousands of metric tons short of the targets for the first 2 months of 1986. The nonfulfillment of the plan is primarily due to unsatisfactory work by the Main Administration for Petroleum and Gas in the Tyumen region and associations such as "Tomskneft" and "Tatneft."

The country's metallurgy workers coped with the 2-month plan for production of basic types of metal products. Nevertheless, plan targets for the development of advanced production processes and the production of highly efficient types of metal products are still not fully met. Plan fulfillment in the course of the month remained unstable. The lag which developed in early February was offset by a substantial increase in average daily output in the last days of the month.

The chemical and petrochemical industries fulfilled the January-February plan for production of mineral fertilizers, synthetic resins and plastics, chemical fibers and yarns, motor vehicle tires, and a number of other types of output. At the same time, plan targets for the production of soda ash and thermoplastic pipes and pipeline components were not met. Specifically, in the Ministry of the Chemical Industry the soda ash production plan was not fulfilled by Slavyansk's "Khimprom" production association and the Krymsk soda plant, while Syzran's "Plastik" association failed to fulfill the plan for production of thermoplastic pipes and pipeline components. The "Silvinit" production association under the Ministry of the Production of Mineral Fertilizers was the worst laggard in the production of potassium fertilizers.

The overall volume of output in the machine building complex sectors increased by 9 percent in comparison with January-February 1985. The 2-month plan was fulfilled in terms of the production of most types of machine building output and, in particular, such advanced types of equipment as industrial robots and machine tools with digital program control.

At the same time, the Ministry of the Electrical Equipment Industry failed to achieve the set targets for the production of heavy electrical machines and AC electric motors; the Ministry of Heavy and Transport Machine Building failed to achieve the set targets for the production of long-distance passenger railroad cars; the Ministry of the Automotive Industry failed to cope with the January-February plan for the production of the Belaz-7519 110-metric-ton quarry dump trucks; and the Ministry of Power Machine Building failed to cope with the January-February plan for the production of diesel engines for dump trucks with a capacity of 75-180 metric tons.

Many machine building associations and enterprises are still failing to operate smoothly: A considerable proportion of the monthly program is carried out in the last days of the month. For example, the Ministry of the Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry produced 53 percent of the monthly output of forging and pressing machines and 41 percent of metal-cutting machine tools in the last working week of February, while the Ministry of Heavy and Transport Machine Building produced 40 percent of freight trucks in the same week. During the last week of February, Leningrad's Sverdlov machine tool building association manufactured 79 percent of the monthly volume of metal-cutting machine tools, the Tbilisi machine tool building association produced 81 percent, and the Chimkent production association for the manufacture of forging and pressing equipment produced 70 percent of forging and pressing machines.

Top-quality output accounted for 34 percent of the total volume of production by machine building sectors in January-February. The proportion of top-quality output was higher than the machine building average in the Ministry of the Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry with 45 percent, the Ministry of the Electrical Equipment Industry with 44 percent, and the Ministry of Chemical and Petroleum Machine Building with 39 percent.

The 2-month plan for the production of consumer goods was fulfilled both as a whole and in terms of production of food and nonfood goods. Output in excess of the prescribed targets amounted to more than 8 million metric meters of cotton, wool, and linen textiles; 3.4 million items of knitwear; 24,000 radio receivers; 11,000 refrigerators; and furniture worth R35 million. At the same time, the plan for production of silk textiles, washing machines, and color televisions was not fulfilled.

The first quarter of the first year of the 12th 5-Year Plan is coming to an end. Now it is important for labor collectives to eliminate the shortcomings existing in their work and to mobilize new production reserves ensuring the implementation of the program for the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development which was adopted by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Army Paper Editorial Sums up CPSU Congress

[Editorial: "The Strategic Course of the Party"]

[Excerpts] The historic significance of the 27th CPSU Congress is determined by the fact that it adopted a Leninist-style bold, realistic, mobilizing, and inspiring strategy in the struggle for the triumph of the ideals of communism, peace, and progress. The main political result of the congress is the general line in domestic and foreign policy which it adopted and approved — a line toward the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development and consolidation of world peace. Henceforth this line will be a law governing the life of the party and of each of its organizations, a guideline for action for Communists and all the working people.

The CPSU's foreign policy is inseparably bound up with the party's fundamental, strategic tasks inside the country. This indissoluble link between the two was, again, confirmed most convincingly by our party's 27th congress. The main goal, the paramount demand of its foreign policy program is to ensure that the Soviet people can work in conditions of lasting peace and freedom. Meeting this demand in the current situation means above all halting the material preparations for nuclear war that are being forced on by reactionary imperialist circles. The CPSU regards the struggle against war, against the propagation of hatred and violence, as an integral part of the democratization of the entire sphere of international relations and of a genuine improvement of the planet's political climate.

The struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and consolidation of world peace has been and remains the main sphere of our party's activity in the international arena. The 27th CPSU Congress emphasized that there is no alternative to this policy. The nature of modern weapons makes it impossible for any state to hope to be able to defend itself by military and technical means alone, no matter how strong its defenses, because not only nuclear war itself but even the arms race cannot be won. Ensuring security is increasingly becoming a political task which can only be solved by political means.

Proceeding from its analysis of the nature and scale of the nuclear threat, the 27th party congress has instructed the CPSU Central Committee to systematically and persistently endeavor to resolve the problem of international security, gearing the Soviet Union's foreign policy to strict pursuit of the course of peaceful coexistence, staunch defense of our principles and positions, tactical flexibility, readiness to agree to mutually acceptable compromises, and orientation toward dialogue and mutual understanding. The congress emphasized the need to further step up Soviet foreign policy efforts in all spheres.

The congress pointed out that the struggle for the implementation of the program set forth in the CPSU Central Committee general secretary's statement on 15 January 1986 and aimed at the destruction of mass annihilation weapons and elimination of the war danger must become the central avenue of foreign policy in the coming yuears. The implementation of this program — a historic program in scale and significance — would pave mankind's way to a fundamentally new stage of development and provide it with the opportunity to devote itself entirely to creation.

The congress noted that the preconditions for a relaxation of international tension which have begun to take shape lately do not, in themselves, represent a breakthrough: the arms race continues and the threat of nuclear war persists. Imperialism, which bears the responsibility for this century's wars and conflicts, is now preparing to take a new and possible irreversible step — to extend the arms race to space, placing the planet as a whole within its sights. Our people resolutely denounce this criminal, militarist course.

The Soviet Union is not seeking superior security, but nor will it accept inferior security. As long as the danger of imperialism's unleashing aggressive wars and military conflicts exists, the party will continue to pay unremitting attention to consolidating the USSR's defense might, strengthening its security, and enhancing its Armed Forces' readiness to crush any aggressor by ensuring that they are maintained at a level which precludes strategic superiority for imperialism and making sure that their combat potential represents a firm fusion of military skill, excellent technical equipment, and personnel's ideological staunchness, organization, discipline, and loyalty to their patriotic and international duty. In accordance with these program objectives, the 27th CPSU Congress declared that the all-around enhancement of the Armed Forces's combat readiness and the education of Army and Navy servicemen and of all Soviet people in the spirit of vigilance and constant readiness to defend the great gains of socialism must remain one of the most important tasks of the party, the state, and the people.

FURTHER REACTION TO UK REJECTION OF USSR INITIATIVE

Rejection Not 'Definitive'

PM171621 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 13 Mar 86 Second Edition p 5

[Own correspondent A. Maslennikov report: "Ignoring the Dictates of Reason"]

[Text] London, 12 Mar -- Reports appeared in the press here yesterday that the M. Thatcher government has rejected the 15 January Soviet disarmament proposals offered to it. It considers "unacceptable" the Soviet Union's proposal to Britain and France not to build up their own corresponding nuclear arms given the complete elimination of the USSR and U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe. London states that the question of limiting Britain's nuclear forces can only be discussed after the completion of the Soviet-U.S. nuclear and space arms talks in Geneva. Just as in U.S. President Reagan's reply to the Soviet proposals, questions of nuclear disarmament are linked in the British letter with the patently farfetched "need for a leveling of the balance in conventional armaments" as well as the broadening of the discussion on regional, bilateral, and other problems.

Speaking in Parliament, Labour Party leader N. Kinnock accused the Thatcher government of setting out to complicate the elimination of medium-range nuclear weapons in Eastern and Western Europe. "The prime minister's refusal to go halfway toward trying to introduce a mutually binding freeze on nuclear arsenals," Labour shadow defense spokesman D. Davies said in support of his leader, "demonstrates the hypocritical nature of the government's repeated statements that it is committed to multilateral nuclear disarmament."

The attempts made by the prime minister and other cabinet members to try in some way to justify this negative stance made no impression either on Labour Party members or indeed on representatives of other opposition parties. The Tory government, Liberal Party spokesman J. Wallace stated, is "obsessed" with the idea of modernizing Britain's nuclear forces with the U.S. Trident missiles system, and this is "becoming a serious obstacle in the way of talks on achieving real disarmament in Geneva."

"In dismissing a Soviet proposal to eliminate nuclear weapons on earth in 15 years," P. Johns, chairman of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, said, "Thatcher has set herself against all those who are working to reduce nuclear arsenals in Europe. The provocative plan to boost the destructive power of Britain's nuclear forces by buying Trident is now one of the main barriers to the establishment of arms control. With the exception of the Conservative government itself, everyone is agreed that this plan should be cancelled." Instead of taking advantage of the Soviet proposals for the systematic reduction and ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, a statement published here by the British peace assembly says, the British Government has announced its intention to continue the arms race buildup.

Many commentators here are noting the Western ruling circles' insincerity in their approach to the whole range of disarmament problems. "Honesty is a quality which is clearly lacking in the recent replies (of the West -- A.M. note) to the Soviet nuclear moratorium," notes D. Adamson, diplomatic correspondent of Britain's DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The unpopularity of the British Government's stance is so obvious that even those press organs which usually actively support Tory policy have had to dissociate themselves from it. "It is questionable that Britain should have repeated the U.S. counter proposals word for word," THE TIMES writes.

In other words, the negative stance taken on the Soviet peace program by the Thatcher government in no way reflects the prevailing mood today either in Britain itself or in the West as a whole. And for that reason it cannot be considered definitive. Many Western political and social figures are speaking and writing to that effect now.

"The Thatcher government's reply to the Soviet proposals," G. MacLennan, general secretary of the Communist Party of Great Britain, said when addressing press representatives, "will cause anger and dismay to millions of people in Britain from all walks of life and many shades of religious and political outlook. This anger needs to be turned into determination and action to force a change in British policy. The Thatcher response shows that the British Government has no independent policy at all but is merely following the U.S. line."

"The Soviet program for ridding the world of nuclear and other types of mass-destruction weapons; the well-known British politician and MP A. Benn said in conversation with me, "inspired a ray of hope among the broad masses of the British and other peoples of Western Europe. And this is a factor which will have an increasing influence on the situation in Western countries. Whatever position the governments of those countries adopt," A. Benn stressed, "they cannot totally ignore the peoples' will."

Krivopalov Reports UK View

PM171325 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 16 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Dispatch by own correspondent A. Krivopalov under the rubric "On Topics of the Day": "Britain; There Is No Other Way"]

[Text] London -- People here learned with great interest of the content of the reply from M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to the joint message from the leaders of six countries. The USSR's decision not to carry out nuclear explosions even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States -- is interpreted here as a new manifestation of good will on Moscow's part.

The British cannot fail to make comparisons. The Soviet Union's constructive, flexible position highlights the weakness, unconvincingness, and set nature of the Tory government's viewpoint on the disarmament problem. This was manifested yet again during the recent polemics in Westminister.

These polemics erupted unexpectedly recently when, during parliamentary question time, it became known that the program for Britain's nuclear missile rearmament, known as Trident 2, will cost far more than supposed even very recently. The British taxpayers will have to cough up over 500 million pounds sterling more.

Answering acute criticism in the House of Commons from opposition representatives accusing the government of virtually abandoning multilateral efforts in halting the nuclear arms race, the head of the British Government made the following statement: "Unless deterrent means are updated, they will cease to be a deterrent." As is well known, no one and nothing threatens Britain, at least from the East. But, leaving aside the question of who the British deterrent means are aimed against, it must be noted that it is obviously impossible to understand this formulation of the prime minister's as anything other than an undertaking to continue to build up nuclear armaments.

The Soviet program to eliminate nuclear weapons requires businesslike discussion. London, however, has replied to Moscow's proposal to act together to prevent a nuclear catastrophe without even consulting with Parliament.

All political echelons of the opposition are considering the 15 January Soviet statement. Sober-minded Conservatives have also been obliged to study this very important document. It is well known how the Labour Party leadership has treated it. D. Healy, foreign secretary in the Labour "shadow Cabinet," has stated in particular that the West must take advantage of M.S. Gorbachev's constructive proposals in the disarmament sphere.

The leadership of the Conservatives asserts that it is speaking for the entire British people and expressing their will. But many people in the British Isles believe that official London is acting counter to widespread sentiments.

The fact that all recent public opinion polls bear witness to the decline in M. Thatcher's personal popularity is usually explained in the country's "big press" by the Tory government's setbacks in domestic policy. But the dissatisfaction with the one-sided foreign policy course wholly oriented toward Washington to the detriment of British national interests and independence must obviously be taken into account here as well.

It is Whitehall's deeds, not its words, which compel us to think about how the fresh spring wind of change which has animated international relations and given rise to great hopes in the world seem to be counterindicated to it. Surely the pernicious climate of "cold war" and military-political confrontation is not most dear to the Toires' hearts.

Lomeyko Addresses Newsmen

LD181719 Moscow TASS in English 1646 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 18 TASS -- Attempts are continuing in the West at presenting in a distorted light the essence of the Soviet initiatives, said Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the press department of the USSR Foreign Ministry. He was addressing Soviet and foreign newsmen at the Press Center of the USSR Foreign Ministry today. Thus, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told Parliament that the Soviet proposals on medium-range missiles allegedly imply that a certain number of missiles will be moved in the Far East, and these missiles, as she claimed, can certainly be sent back.

Meanwhile the statement by Mikhail Gorbachev of January 15 this year explicitly says that we favour a total elimination of Soviet and American medium-range missiles in the European zone -- both ballistic and cruise missiles as the first step of ridding Europe of nuclear weapons.

Trying to complicate the reaching of an agreement, London artificially draws here also questions of the military balance in Asia, a practical resolution of which is provided for by the Soviet programme at the corresponding stage, the spokesman for the USSR Foreign Ministry said.

Thus, the obstacle to progress is not the Soviet stand, but the West's obvious reluctance to take the path of nuclear disarmament. A fresh proof of this has been the speech by the British prime minister.

IZVESTIYA CITES PALME COMMISSION STATEMENT

PM181507 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russia 18 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Dispatch by own correspondent A. Sychev under the rubric "On Topics of the Day": "Named After O. Palme"]

[Text] Stockholm -- A memorial session of the independent commission on disarmament and security issues has been held in the Swedish capital.

Taking part were Swedish Prime Minister I. Carlsson, G. Brundtland, chairman of the Social Democratic Party of Norway, G.A. Arbatov, director of the USSR Academy of Sciences United States and Canada Institute, former British Foreign Secretary D. Owen, and a number of other eminent politicians.

In the statement adopted during the session, the commission members expressed their profound condolences in connection with the death of Prime Minister O. Palme, who created and headed the commission. The commission will continue its work aimed at strengthening peace and cooperation between states, to which O. Palme gave his entire life.

The statement says: "In the nuclear age there is no alternative to talks and cooperation between states. Nuclear war must not be unleashed. There will be no victors in it." The commission will concentrate its activity on measures which would lead to the halting of the nuclear arms race, the consolidation of the United Nations Organization, and the strengthening of regional security, including security in Europe. The statement particularly emphasizes the urgent need to make the process of detente and cooperation irreversible.

The commission has urged the nuclear powers to conclude a treaty on the total prohibition of all nuclear tests and to declare a mutual and verifiable moratorium on tests, emphasized the need for the full observance and consolidation of the ABM treaty, and pointed to the importance of abolishing all medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe. The creation in Europe of a zone free from battlefield nuclear weapons would be an important step on the path of reducing nuclear arsenals, the statement says.

The session decided to continue the work of the commission under the new name "O. Palme Commission for Disarmament and Security Issues," The commission members asked Swedish Prime Minister I. Carlsson to take the place of the chairman, expressing understanding of the difficulty involved in making a decision on this question immediately. The next Palme Commission session will be held 24-26 October this year in Budapest. It will examine questions of European security.

IZVESTIYA COMMENTS ON REAGAN LETTER ON TEST BAN

PM141353 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 14 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Yu. Bandura "International Commentary": "Washington's Nuclear Challenge; About R. Reagan's Letter to the U.S. Congress"]

[Text] In a letter sent to the U.S. Senate on 12 March, U.S. President R. Reagan confirmed the Washington administration's position on the question of a full and universal ban on nuclear tests.

Neither the introduction of a moratorium on nuclear blasts nor the ratification of the treaty on limiting underground nuclear weapons tests (signed in 1974) and the treaty on underground nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes (signed in 1976) "accord with the interests of the United States and its allies.

This message needs no extensive interpretation. Its thrust comes down to one thing: Washington intends to continue its nuclear explosions. And consequently to continue the arms race on its most dangerous salient.

To judge from the content of the message reported by REUTER, the U.S. President put forward many "arguments" to justify this stance. But they did not include one that was not already known to the international public and has not been rejected by it as unsound.

The reference to Washington's "concern" over the problem of verification [kontrol] of explosions is also unsound. It was confirmed from the platform of the 27th CPSU Congress that the Soviet Union is open to verification and we are no less interested than others in it.

The reference to "the Soviet Union's violations of the treaties" is unsound: This "argument," repeatedly exposed as artificial and without any foundation by the Soviet side, is essentially being used by Washington to deliberately thwart the talks and to reject all existing arms limitation agreements.

The reference to "the absence of a constructive response from Moscow" to his (Reagan's -- Yu.B.) overtures to hold discussions on these problems is unsound: The White House is suggesting that we attend U.S. explosions whereas our aim is the total and universal cessation of nuclear weapons tests.

The reference to the "nonconformance" of the halting of nuclear tests with the interests of the United States and its allies is also unsound. Answering a TASS correspondent's questions in August last year, M.S. Gorbachev stressed: "The question arises: what is it here that does not accord with the interests of the United States and the American people? This path is unsuitable only for those who are gambling on strong-arm pressure, who are nurturing plans to create ever new types of nuclear weapons on earth, who have set themselves the aim of unleashing the arms race in space."

What then is the real reason for Washington's reluctance to reciprocate with regard to the Soviet moratorium, to take as a guideline the resolution recently approved by the U.S. House of Representatives and urging the White House to immediately resume talks with a view to concluding a treaty on a total and universal ban on nuclear weapons tests and submit to congress for ratification the 1974 and 1976 Soviet-U.S. treaties on underground nuclear tests? Lost in the text of the President's letter to Congress in the middle of fabricated "arguments" the reply from the head of the administration is as follows: "Today and in the foreseeable future the security of the United States and its friends and allies must be based on a reliable and effective nuclear deterrent."

But is follows from this that the present U.S. Administration is not even thinking of eliminating nuclear weapons and is continuing to be guided by the "doctrine of deterrence." It seems to sound fine. But eloquence in this case is nothing but camouflage for the doctrine which the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress described as encouraging the arms race. The U.S. President's letter is also objectively aimed at encouraging this race, confirming the White House's reluctance to take a step halfway toward the elimination of nuclear explosions from the life of mankind.

GERASIMOV ON WESTERN SINCERITY ON TEST BAN

LD152223 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1530 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Commentary by Gennadiy Gerasimov, APN political observer; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Hello, comrades! In the message of leaders of the six countries to the leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States containing an appeal to refrain from nuclear explosions at least until the summit, there is the phrase: As long as nuclear weapons exist there can be no security in the world. It appears at first glance that there is no doubt to that; this phrase is an axiom. But listen to what the British ECONOMIST writes. It writes that even if our planet had been visited by inspectors from Mars and Venus and in this way or another they would have banned nuclear weapons, many earthlings would have thought: Is it really for the better? And they would have had questionable reasons for that.

What kind of reasons are those? In the line of reasoning of, for example, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, or U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, it appears that nuclear weapons are necessary for so-called containment [sderzhivaniye]. Accordingly, nuclear tests are also necessary, because, as Mrs Thatcher put it, if the containment forces are not modernized, they soon cease to be what they are.

Meanwhile, it was quite recently that President Reagan himself criticized the concept of nuclear containment, criticized it for being immoral. This concept treats the civilian population as hostages and envisions its annihilation in revenge for an attack. What we have as a result is not defense at all, but bloody vengeance. Now, as soon as the Soviet Union put forward a concrete program of eliminating nuclear weapons -- and by the way, Reagan maintained that such elimination was his dream -- as soon as our country introduced a moratorium on tests, as soon as other countries urged the leading nuclear powers to join the moratorium, it turned out that one cannot do without nuclear weapons; or to be more exact, it is more dangerous to live without them than with them. So, it turned out to be a u-turn.

The reason is that the test advocates' arguments have been discarded one after another. The argument concerning control, which reflects the position that the Russians cannot be trusted has been discarded -- because we are in favor of control, including participation of a third country. The argument about the U.S. backlog has also been dropped, a dishonest argument concerning the nuclear arsenals becoming outdated without periodic checks through tests has also been dropped, because it is equally applicable to the Soviet side. Now, the last line of defense is being assumed: the West needs nuclear containment. But what about the President's dream of eliminating nuclear weapons? What about his promise to strive jointly for halting the nuclear arms race on earth and preventing it from spreading to space? The issue of nuclear tests is like a litmus paper: it shows the sincerity of one's intentions.

PACT COUNTRIES SUBMIT DRAFT AGREEMENT AT MBFR TALKS

[Announcer-read report from "The World Today" program presented by Aleksander Zholkver]

[Text] In examining problems of disarmament, some Western politicians state that one should not reduce the problem to one of atomic weapons alone, for conventional arms are not less dangerous. Here is a report on the talks at which this problem is being discussed:

For 12 years now, in Vienna, representatives of 19 central European states have been examining the question of mutual cuts in armed forces and armaments in this region. I have often been in the Vienna Hofburg Palace where the talks are being held. It was hard to establish any progress there.

But now the Warsaw Pact countries have made an attempt to get things moving. They submitted a draft agreement envisaging that in the course of a year the USSR and the United States will withdraw 11,500 and 6,500 servicemen from central Europe respectively, together with military hardware. The remaining participants in the talks would pledge not to increase for at least 3 years the personnel and armaments of their land forces and air forces in central Europe.

At a regular plenary session of the Vienna talks, the head of the USSR delegation proposed starting on the joint elaboration of the text of such an agreement.

U.S. WANTS TO DRAW ALLIES INTO SDI DEVELOPMENT

LD181050 Moscow TASS in English 1024 GMT 18 Mar 86

["Why USA Endeavours To Draw Allies Into SDI" -- TASS item identifier]

[Text] Washington March 18 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports:

Attempts are being made in the U.S. capital to present the Pentagon's insistent efforts to draw the USA's allies into development efforts within the framework of the "Strategic Defence Initiative" (SDI) as a manifestation of good will with regard to those countries and of concern for their security. In actual fact the Pentagon concerns itself, first of all, with a search for most-suitable-to-the-USA forms of attracting the best foreign minds, foreign capital and technology to tasks under the "star wars" program, and on such conditions which would be of benefit only to the United States. Such a directedness of the USA's "allied friendship" is confirmed by the results of the recent visits to Washington by the delegations of the FRG and Italy. The delegations consisted of representatives of the governments of those countries, scientists, and technical specialists.

They were received, in particular, by Richard Perle, U.S. assistant secretary of defence, and by Lieutenant General James Abrahamson, director of the SDI organisation.

Data which have filtered into the press indicates that U.S. intentions to "milk" its allies without committing itself in any substantial way to the observance of the commercial and technological interests of the "friends", aroused considerable misgivings among the members of the Delegations. The misgivings are that the USA's allies, counting on the promised profits from participation in the SDI, would be completely deprived of independence in the exploration and study of outer space even for peaceful purposes. They would be bound to observe utter secrecy of the development efforts, including those related to their own industries.

Commenting on the results of the visits to the USA by the delegations of the FRG and Italy, the Washington weekly DEFENCE NEWS points out precisely these problems. The weekly writes that the Italians stated that they would not assume any concrete obligations under the SDI until Washington gave firm guarantees concerning the observance of the commercial and industrial interests of its allies, as well as those concerning the observance of the copyright for inventions, discoveries, and products themselves.

Such is the commercial aspect of the matter. However, there is also another important aspect of the U.S. attempts at "getting" its allies in the SDI. The idea is to make them share responsibility for the consequences of the realisation of the SDI. In spite of Washington's assuracnes that the "star wars" program is ostensibly a "purely defensive" one, major specialists, among them American ones, on the strength of facts show that the creation and deployment of space weapon systems would sharply destabilise the strategic situation in the world and would immeasurably increase the risk of an outbreak of nuclear war. Should that occur, Washington would like to have grounds to tell its allies: "Dear friends, we have been in this together, so mum's the word!"

Would not it be better for everyone jointly to secure that space weapon systems are never created and, still less, orbited? This is precisely what the Soviet Union is suggesting, striving to prevent an upsetting of stability in the world, a transfer of the arms race to outer space, and a growth of the threat of an all-out nuclear disaster. There is still time to secure that.

FRENCH REPORT CONCLUDES SDI PLANS 'UNREALISTIC'

PM131537 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 12 Mar 86 Second Edition p 3

[TASS report: "The Pentagon Intends To Continue"]

[Text] Washington, 11 Mar -- According to U.S. press reports, within Pentagon circles attention has been drawn to a report on "star wars" published by the French Defense Ministry's respected Space Armaments Commission. The report's main conclusion is that the creation of a "space shield" using the notorious "Strategic Defense Initiative" is unrealistic.

The commission, headed by J.F. Delpech, a leader of the National Scientific Research Center, includes specialists from the Defense Ministry, the Atomic Energy Commission, the National Space Research Center, and a number of other leading French research centers and institutions.

Analyzing in detail the "arguments" of the supporters of the creation [sozdaniye] of an ABM system with space-based elements, French specialists state that even if the creation [sozdaniye] of "permanently operating lasers" is possible in around 10 years, "future ballistic missiles could be quite easily defended against them." The creation [sozdaniye] of other types of weapons based on the principles of directed energy is "problematic" in the view of the report's authors. The space-based ABM system itself "will undoubtedly be highly vulnerable both to another analogous system and to anti-satellite weapons deployed on earth," the report notes.

Nevertheless, the Pentagon envisages a further acceleration of the work to create [sozdaniye] space strike arms. As Lieutenant General J. Abrahamson, director of the "star wars" program, has stated in the U.S. Congress, it is planned in the next fiscal year to accelerate the creation [sozdaniye] of a space plane which will be able to put armaments into near-earth orbit and independently carry out the functions of a space strike weapon as well as working in the laser weapon sphere. According to Abrahamson, the first stage of work under the SDI program is complete, and it is now planned to study more carefully the problems connected with it.

PACT FOREIGN MINISTERS' SESSION OPENS IN WARSAW

LD191133 Moscow TASS in English 1121 GMT 19 Mar 86

The meeting is attended by Petr Mladenov, minister of foreign affairs of Bulgaria, Bohuslav Chnoupek, minister of foreign affairs of Czechoslovakia, Oskar Fischer, minister of foreigh affairs of the G.D.R., Peter Varkonyi, minister of foreign affairs of Hungary, Marian Orzechowski, minister of foreign affairs of Poland, Ilie Vaduva, minister of foreign affairs of Romania, and Eduard Shevardnadze, minister of foreign affairs of the U.S.S.R.

SHISHLIN ON PACT FOREIGN POLICY COORDINATION

LD170416 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1730 GMT 16 Mar 86

[Talk by political observer Nikolay Shishlin]

[Text] In the area of foreign policy, strengthening cooperation with socialist countries has been and remains a priority direction of Soviet foreign policy. This is confirmed both in the Political Report of the party Central Committee and in the Basic Guidelines for Social and Economic Development of our country for the period of the upcoming 5-year plan, which, properly speaking, we have already begun, and for the period up to the year 2000. A significant part of the Soviet Union's domestic operations is linked to the efforts of other socialist states, especially in such important directions as accelerating scientific and technical progress, raising production efficiency, and furthering socialist economic integration.

That is to say, our domestic plans do not simply have something in common with the plans of our friends and allies -- they are an integrated part of the creative work that is being carried out in other socialist countries. Of course, this priority direction of Soviet foreign policy -- strengthening cooperation with socialist states -- is quite tangibly in operation in international affairs.

It should be said directly that the Soviet initiatives -- large-scale, all-encompassing, directed at a radical improvement of the international situation -- are a result of that huge coordination work carried out by the socialist countries within the framework of the Warsaw Pact Organization, within the framework of bilateral contacts on the implementation of a common strategic policy in international affairs that is calculated to restrain the arms race, prevent the transfer of the arms race into space, and decisively improve the international situation. Of course, an integral part of Soviet foreign policy efforts is the line that is carried out by socialist countries in individual regions -- the line aimed at turning the European Continent into a continent of peace and peaceful cooperation; those actions that are undertaken to improve the situation in the Asian and Pacific zone; those steps that are taken to extinguish the planet's flashpoints [goryachiye tochki], and improve the situation in, let us say, Central America itself.

And that status -- the fact that Soviet foreign policy comprises an integral part of the common strategic policy of the countries of the socialist community -- naturally gives it even more force and efficacy [deystvennost] and makes this policy a progressive one to the highest degree.

ARBATOV HOPES PALME COMMISSION WILL CONTINUE

PM181417 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 15 Mar 86 p 9

[Ove Saverman report: "Continued Struggle for Freedom: A Tribute to Palme"]

[Excerpt] Arlanda -- "Many Swedes now probably understand that you never become a prophet in your own country," the Soviet member of the Palme Commission, Georgiy Arbatov, said on arrival at Arlanda yesterday evening.

"Creating peace between countries with diametrically opposed political systems is a problem of survival, and few realized this as did Olof Palme," said Arbatov, who sees a future for the commission even after Palme's death. An informal meeting will now be held in Stockholm, since the commission's members are gathered here.

"We must finish the work. But it will not be finished in my lifetime -- not even in that of my children," Georgiy Arbatov said at Arlanda.

OREKHOV REVIEWS WEEK'S WORLD EVENTS

PM161701 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 16 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Boris Orekhov "International Review"]

[Text] Beacon of Hope

It is commonly said that big things can be seen best from far away. But this saying hardly applies to the Soviet Communists' 27th congress whose impact is currently affecting the world. There is no need for great distances in time or space to assess its historic significance. And it is already being assessed by the peoples as historic. The pages of all countries' newspapers are full of reactions to the congress. The subject of the congress fills the airwaves. The congress' ideas and decisions, which mark important milestones in the present crucial stage in international development, are commented on in dozens of languages. The commentators agree that these ideas and decisions will do much to determine the content of world policy and the course of affairs on our planet at the end of this century and the beginning of the next.

"Socialism and peace are synonymous," one foreign guest at the congress, for instance, said, sharing his impressions of its work. You could hardly put it more concisely and accurately. The 27th CPSU Congress once again convincingly demonstrated the indivisibility of socialism and peace, peace and creation, and once again showed everyone that the main aim of Soviet policy is a secure and just peace for all the peoples.

The congress' influence on the frame of mind of people in various countries, people belonging to various political parties professing various views of life and politics, can hardly be overstated.

As is usual in such cases, forces hostile to the cause of peace and imperialist circles tried to do everything possible to distract the world public's attention from the Soviet Communists' forum, to minimize its significance, and to find flies in the ointment. But life has demonstrated the futility of these attempts. The magnetic force of the ideas of peace and the peoples' security, nuclear disarmament, and the prevention of the placing of weapons in space is really getting through to many millions of people and winning their minds. This too is a considerable merit of the congress.

The significance, for instance, of a Soviet initiative like the unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions is clear to any unprejudiced person. Let us recall that the moratorium went into effect on 6 August last year. Guided by the interests of peace, the Soviet Union extended the term of the moratorium, which expired 31 December last year, for a further 3 months, once again proposing that the United States join in this initiative.

Recently, while the Soviet moratorium is still in effect, the leaders of six countries--Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden, and Tanzania -- have appealed to the USSR and U.S. leaders to refrain from nuclear tests until the holding of the planned summit meeting, and have offered to give assistance in observing seismic activity in the region of tests.

The appeal of the six was greeted with approval by sober-minded Western politicians. Even in Washington a large group of congressmen came out in support of it. The opinion of these legislators is based on the support of millions of American citizens who have launched a nationwide campaign with the aim of making the administration join in the cessation of nuclear explosions.

As for the Soviet Union's position, its consistency and peaceful thrust were once again confirmed in the response to the appeal from the six state leaders which M.S. Gorbachev gave on behalf of the Soviet leadership. The Soviet Union stated that it will not carry out nuclear explosions even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States.

The Soviet response contains a proposal to the American side to reach agreement on granting the opportunity for observers from both sides, on a reciprocal basis and following appropriate requests, to visit the sites of obscure phenomena so as to remove any possible doubts as to whether such phenomena are associated with nuclear explosions.

In order to fully solve the problem of tests, what is needed is a treaty banning nuclear weapon tests on an international legal basis. The USSR proposes setting about elaborating such a treaty without delay and resuming or commencing relevant talks in any form -- bilateral, trilateral, or multilateral, without linking this to other issues.

The Soviet leadership's businesslike and concrete response to the appeal by the six countries' leaders is eloquent evidence that the USSR is doing, and will continue to do, everything necessary to transfer the resolution of the urgent problem of ending nuclear tests onto a practical footing and to achieve the total elimination of nuclear arsenals. Aware of its responsibility for the peoples' fate, the Soviet Union will persistently implement its peace program, which has become a beacon of hope for mankind.

But how is the United States behaving? Finding itself in a difficult position, the Washington Administration is trying to extricate itself, resorting to maneuvers and subterfuge. What else could you call President Reagan's statement, issued by the White House, setting forth the supposedly "new" U.S. proposal? It is clear from news agency reports that the President is offering the Soviet side only the discussion of the technical problems of "verification" ["proverka"] of the Soviet-U.S. treaties that were concluded in 1974 and 1976 and have not yet been ratified, through the fault of the American side. The retification of these treaties, which should have taken place long ago, is now being made dependent on the results of such a discussion.

Moreover, it is proposed that the Soviet Union send scientists to observe the American nuclear weapon tests planned for the 3d week in April. Thus once again, instead of stopping nuclear explosions, as manking demands, they are proposing the observation of the carrying out of such explosions. The Soviet Union has already expressed its view on this: We are in favor of monitoring [kontrol] the end of nuclear explosions, but we are against continuing tests in the presence of observers as a substitute for ending them.

Concerning Reagan's "proposal," THE NEW YORK TIMES writes: "This seems to be an attempt to divert criticism by Congress and certain foreign capitals of the fact that the U.S. Administration has ignored the Soviet proposals on ending underground nuclear tests."

Yes, this is clearly a base ploy.

Fulbright Springs to Mind

A vote is scheduled for 19 March, in the U.S. House of Representatives on the question of granting military aid to the tune of $100 million, as requested by President R. Reagan, to the Nicaraguan rebels, or "contras," as they are also called.

"The most prominent advertising agency in Washington today is the firm 'Reagan, Weinberger, Shultz, and Speakes,' at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue," James Reston, the old man of American journalism, writes sarcastically in this connection in THE NEW YORK TIMES. "They are now engaged in a major campaign with the aim of convincing Congress and the American people that Nicaragua is a danger to the United States and that unless they receive $100 million for the 'freedom fighters' who are defending the U.S. border, then Moscow and Havana will threaten the security and democracy of the Western Hemisphere."

Reston's sarcasm is easily understood. Just think: The leaders of the world's mightiest capitalist state are shouting "help" and asking for America to be defended against the threat represented by the small and not very close-at-hand Nicaragua!

Nicaragua is clearly visible to everyone. There are no foreign bases there, nor is there a concentrations of foreign troops. There are only the people, who have won freedom and independence and want to be left in peace and allowed to live and work peacefully and to follow their chosen path. But free Nicaragua today is a thorn in American imperialism's flesh.

R. Reagan publicly glorifies the Nicaraguan "contras" as "freedom fighters," and G. Shultz calls them "the good guys." Many of these people were officers and soldiers in the National Guard under Somoza, who plundered Nicaragua for 45 years. The U.S. Administration states that the "contras" are a "model of respect for human rights." It is hard to imagine greater cynicism. "The well considered policy of the 'contras' is terror against the civilian population," says Chamorro, a former leader of the main organization of the "contras" who broke with the rebels last year.

But Washington does not confine itself to praising the "contras." Tension is constantly maintained on Nicaragua's borders. Following the provocative exercises carried out not long ago by U.S. naval forces off Nicaragua's coasts, a new series of maneuvers is beginning near the country's land borders, with the participation of American and Honduran Armed Forces.

It is reasonable to ask: What would happen, how would Washington react, if military exercises with the participation of foreign armed forces like those being organized in Honduras today were to take place, say, near the American-Canadian or the American-Mexican border? You can imagine the extent of the hysteria that would afflict those who have today raised their big stick over Nicaragua, intoxicated by their apparent impunity.

The arrogance of strength, as Senator Fulbright once called the leitmotiv of American foreign policy, is today being demonstrated by Washington on various continents. In Central America it is Nicaragua. In Africa, it is Angola, on whose territory bloody piracy is carried out by bandits from UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola], whose ringleader was recently received with honor and kindness in the White House. In Asia, it is Afghanistan, whose inhabitants are terrorized by killings, arson attacks, and sabotage by dushmans equipped in Pakistan with U.S. money. It is the same practically everywhere. Wherever there is counterrevolution, wherever the past raises its head, look for American imperialism.

The desire for diktat is manifested everywhere in U.S. foreign policy. Take the sphere of international organizations: Here too American diplomacy is trying to impose its will on others.

Is not that revealed by the American authorities' recent act, which has aroused the legitimate indignation of the world community? I refer to the U.S. Government's illegal demand concerning a reduction in the numbers of personnel at the permanent missions of the USSR and a number of other UN members at the headquarters of that international organization in New York. This act was naturally greeted as arbitrary, unjustified, and a gross violation by the United States of its commitment, undertaken in its capacity as the host country for UN central agencies, to ensure the necessary conditions for the normal activity of the United Nations and the unhampered participation of member states in the organization's work.

Morality and policy. These concepts are closely interlinked. The policy of imperial arrogance, permissiveness, and solving your own problems at the expense of other states and to their detriment is profoundly immoral. It reeks of the Stone Age, when the main concern was to acquire a bigger stick or a heavier stone. The aggressive international behavior of U.S. imperialism, the growing militarization of its policy and way of thinking, and its disregard for others' interests inevitably lead to its moral and political isolation and the widening of the gulf between it and all the rest of mankind.

When the Votes Were Counted

Spain was the focus of political observers' attention last week. A nationwide referendum was held there 12 March on the question of the country's NATO membership. It was preceded by a long, anxious political struggle.

The ruling Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] found itself in the limelight. And here is why. Before coming to power the PSOE leadership explained to the Spaniards, very convincingly, that NATO membership does not meet the country's national interests, limits its sovereignty, and leads to increasing subordination to the United States. These statements were made during the prolonged debate over NATO membership, which began nearly 4 years ago after the previous government took Spain into the bloc. Even then the majority of Spaniards demanded a national referendum on whether or not the country should be in NATO.

It was then that the PSOE, in the election program with which it went into the parliamentary elections in the fall of 1982, promised the Spaniards to put the resolution of this urgent question to a referendum.

But the parliamentary elections, won by the PSOE, receded into the past. The attitude of the PSOE leaders toward participation in NATO underwent an unexpected and striking evolution. Participation in NATO, they now try to convince people, "meets the country's national interests."

Nor was there any lack of political cunning. In order to urge voters to say "yes" in the referendum, the Socialists publicized in every way the idea that there is only one alternative to Spain's NATO membership. The government, they said, on leaving NATO, will be forced to orient itself onesidedly toward the United States. This thesis was clearly put forward with an eye to the growing anti-American sentiments in the country.

The fierce propagandist indoctrination of people and the farfetched arguments (such as that a victory for NATO's opponents would affect the level of employment, since it would lead to a reduction in foreign capital investments in the country's economy) worked. The unconcealed pressure exerted on Spain by NATO leaders also played its part. On the results of the referendum, the supporters of NATO membership prevailed, albeit by only a small margin.

Nonetheless the results of the referendum give grounds for speaking of a growth in sober sentiments among the country's population, a growth in their consciousness. Practically 40 percent of participants in the referendum voted against NATO. This is a sufficiently substantial figure to indicate the widespread anti-NATO sentiments in the country and the positive changes in the Spaniards' views.

Yes, the Atlanticists got their way this time. But it will now be difficult for Madrid to act, especially in the foreign policy sphere, without taking account of the sentiments of those millions of Spaniards who on 12 March said "no!" to NATO.

UKRAINE'S REPRESENTATION TO UN OPPOSES STAFF CUTS

U.S. SEEKS ADVANTAGE IN WORLD OCEAN RESOURCES

LD172344 Moscow TASS in English 2204 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 17 TASS -- A session of the preparatory commission for an international sea bed body and the international law of the sea tribunal has opened in Kingston, the capital of Jamaica, today. The delegates to the session, which is to last till mid-April, are to discuss the course of the drafting of the rules to govern the development of sea bed resources. The work of the commission is particularly topical now that in violation of the international law of the sea convention, which has been approved by 159 states, the USA has set out to ensure unilateral advantages for itself in using world ocean resources. Thus, Washington granted licences for prospecting for manganese ore deposits in the Pacific and has thus arrogated itself the functions and powers of the preparatory commission. These actions are viewed in the U.N. circles as U.S. policy aimed at undermining the convention and creating a situation of arbitrary rule in the world ocean.

BLACK SEA INCIDENT PART OF U.S. 'SPYING OPERATION'

LD190944 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0900 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] New York, 19 Mar (TASS) -- The violation of the USSR state border in the Black Sea by the U.S. warships was carried out within the framework of yet another large-scale spying operation of the United States against the USSR with complete approval of the Reagan administration.

This is reported by THE NEW YORK TIMES today, with reference to official Pentagon representatives. As admitted by these official representatives, one of the purposes of this deliberate action was to "gather intelligence information" about the USSR and its Armed Forces. With this purpose in mind, numerous eavesdropping devices and other electronic equipment was installed on board the cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron.

The order to carry out this provocative operation -- as has been reported by the Pentagon representatives -- was given directly by the Committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the U.S. Armed Forces on behalf of Defense Secretary Weinberger.

LOMEYKO ADDRESSES FOREIGN MINISTRY BRIEFING

Views Western Reaction to Congress

LD181713 Moscow TASS in English 1641 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 18 TASS -- The Soviet initiative directed at establishing a comprehensive system of international security have been approved by the world public but have not met support on the part of the United States and its NATO allies, Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the Press Department of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, has pointed out. He was addressing a briefing for Soviet and foreign journalists at the Press Centre of the Soviet Foreign Ministry today.

The leaders of Western powers, above all the United States, are looking for arguments against accords on the problems set out in Mikhail Gorbachev's January 15 statement and the CPSU Central Committee's Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress.

In response to the Soviet proposal for starting in April this year bilateral talks for comprehensive ban on nuclear weapons testing, the U.S. President offered Soviet scientists to visit the United States to measure the yield of a nuclear explosion. The offer is nothing but a rehash of his old ideas on on-site verifications of the yield of nuclear explosions that were rejected by the Soviet Union as being directed at legalizing nuclear testing. Affirming the need for concerted efforts in the search for ways to resolve regional conflicts is an important element of the Political Report's concept of an all-embracing system of international security.

The U.S. leadership reacted in a rather peculiar way to the concept, Lomeyko said. Several days ago, the U.S. President sent a special message to Congress on issues of regional security in which he sought to find moral justification and build a theoretical basis under the policy of unceremonious interference in the affairs of sovereign countries and peoples. The President resorted to anti-Soviet invectives in a bid to mask the policy of state-sponsored terrorism pursued, specifically, with regard to Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Angola and Middle East countries.

The entire package of issues of Soviet-American relations, including in the field of security, is geared to the solution of regional problems on the administration's terms. Those who are kindling regional tension, the Foreign Ministry spokesman emphasized, would like to use the presence of flashpoints in the world as an argument against improving relations with the Soviet Union, as justification of its reluctance to give a constructive reply to the detailed programme of nuclear disarmament advanced by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Decries U.S. Interference

[From the "Novosti" newscast]

[Text] In the Press Centre of the USSR Foreign Ministry a briefing took place today on current questions of Soviet foreign policy and international relations. Speaking at it, Comrade Lomeyko, head of the Press Department of the USSR Foreign Ministry, made a statement noting in particular that the Soviet initiatives aimed at eliminating the threat of nuclear war and creating an all-embracing international security system, which were heard at the 27th CPSU Congress, are meeting with the broadest support among the international public.

At the same time, the statements of many officials both in Washington and in other NATO capitals attest to the fact that for their part there is still clear reluctance to respond constructively to these proposals. Comrade Lomeyko also noted that the assertion of the need for a joint quest for a resolution of regional conflicts is an important component of the concept of an all-embracing system of international security proposed by the 27th CPSU Congress.

However, the U.S. Administration is pursuing a policy of unceremonious interference in the affairs of sovereign states and peoples. At present, a request has been sent to Congress for the allocation of a major sum for aid to the Nicaraguan contras. The United States in continuing to allocate funds for the activities of bandit formations operating against democratic Afghanistan.

[Begin Lomeyko recording] We regard this as a manifestation of a policy of neoglobalism, a policy claiming the right to interfere in the affairs of sovereign peoples, to justify by word and deed the new doctrine of globally guaranteeing vital interests, which interests in any point of the globe are deemed to be if this suits Washington. [end recording]

REPORTAGE ON REAGAN-MULRONEY TALKS IN WASHINGTON

Future of NORAD Discussed

LD190945 Moscow TASS in English 1753 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 19 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Shalnevreports:

Talks have been held in the White House between President Reagan and Prime Minister of Canada B. Mulroney who arrived here for an official visit.

The problem of the prolongation of the bilateral agreement on the North American Air Defense (NORAD) was foremost on the agenda of the talks. The point is that the Pentagon plans to actively use in its "star wars" program various facilities that have been created or are to be created there within the framework of NORAD. These plans cause grave anxiety in Ottawa. According to a UPI report, the Canadian Government insisted on including in the new agreement the item that would rule out Canada's participation in the active anti-ballistic missile system.

However, the demands of Ottawa were rejected by Washington. Speaking about the results of the talks between Reagan and Mulroney, a high-ranking representative of the administration made it clear that the new agreement on NORAD due to be signed in Washington Wednesday would not contain any special items. Apart from it, as it follows from the statements made by Reagan himself, the U.S. expects Canada to "live up to its NATO commitments", in other words, to unconditionally follow the militaristic course imposed on it by Washington.

Not all went smoothly during the visit of the Canadian prime minister to the U.S. for instance, on the insistence of Washington the situation in Central America was not discussed, because the differences over this problem were so acute that a discussion of it in the White House could well turn into a heated argument. Canada refuses to support the U.S. adventuristic policy with regard to Nicaragua and opposes the interference in the affairs of Central America and the militarization of the region.

The discussion of the questions connected with bilateral trade relations which are characterized, among other things, by the toughening of protectionist trends in the U.S., brought no surprises.

Canada To Continue Nicaragua Aid

LD182246 Moscow TASS in English 2231 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 19 TASS -- Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada, who is currently on an official visit here, told newsmen that his government would continue economic aid to Nicaragua. Contrary to the powerful pressure by Washington, which is seeking economic isolation of the Sandinist revolution, Canada, as is known, maintains broad economic and trade ties with Nicaragua. The readiness to carry out these ties, which has been reaffirmed by Ottawa, is the more noteworthy against the background of the unbridled anti-Nicaraguan campaign being carried out by Washington in an attempt at geting congressional approval for its request for a broadening of military aid to the terrorist contras gangs.

U.S. NAVAL MANEUVERS OFF LIBYA REPORTED, VIEWED

U.S. Planning 'Major' Move

LD190744 Moscow TASS in English 0741 GMT 19 Mar 86

["Preparations for Provocation" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Washington March 19 TASS -- The United States is about to stage a major act of armed provocation against Libya. The CBS TV company reports that within the next two days the America aircraft carrier will enter the Mediterranean and join there two naval squadrons, led by the Saratoga and Coral Sea aircraft carriers, off the Libyan coast.

According to the TV company, the U.S. naval armada will carry out manoeuvres on a larger scale than usual with the purpose of provoking the Libyan Armed Forces and securing a pretext for an outright military strike at Libyan territory. The TV company quotes and American official as saying that Washington just talked in the past but now is fully ready to act. According to the American press, the Pentagon has long defined targets and objectives for such a strike. Judging by the TV company's report, at present the U.S. special and propaganda services are working on "substantiation" for an armed action against Libya.

PRAVDA Commentary

PM181051 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

["Our commentary" by Yuriy Vladimirov: "Playing With Fire"]

[Text] From Friday through Sunday U.S. naval maneuvers were held in the Mediterranean near the Gulf of Sidra, off the Libyan coast, the third such maneuvers in less than 3 months. Foreign agencies, citing informed Pentagon circles, write that the latest round of militarist hustle and bustle could be a prelude to even bigger naval games that would involve more than 40 warships; 30 of them, including the aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea, are permanently kept by the R. Reagan administration in direct proximity to Libyan territorial waters, and 10, headed by the aircraft carrier America, are speeding across the Atlantic to the Mediterranean. The entire armada is gradually assembling to rehearse methods of safeguarding "U.S. national security"...thousands of kilometers away from its borders.

The gulf between the economic and military potentials of the United States and the Libyan Jamahiriyah clearly shows that U.S. fabrications about a "threat from Libya" are groundless and absurd. The aggressive preparations by the strongest capitalist power against a developing country with a population of barely more than 3 million are not due to this "threat" at all. Washington is infuriated by Libya's anti-imperialist course in the international arena and its opposition to plans for "American-style peacemaking" in the Middle East.

So, the United States, for the edification of other unruly states, is threatening to "make an example of obstinate" Libya. The United States has sometimes tried to justify its saber-rattling off the Libyan coast by using some farfetched excuse: protection of U.S. experts working in Libyan oilfields, accusations of Libyan involvement in terrorist acts, and so forth. On this occasion, Washington is once again flexing "military muscles" without even inventing a pretext.

Such actions can only be described as a manifestation of U.S. "neoglobalism." And they are being perpetrated by a power that calls itself a champion of "peace," an advocate of a political settlement of the situation in the world's "hot spots." Even the closest U.S. allies have indirectly admitted that Washington's anti-Libyan policy is dangerous. Both Libyans and world public opinion condemn the White House practice of playing with fire in the southern Mediterranean.

U.S. IGNORES EEC PROTEST NOTE ON UN POLICY

LD181858 Moscow TASS in English 1750 GMT 18 86

[Text] New York March 18 TASS -- The United States conducts a policy of outright blackmail and threats against the United Nations, is going back on obligations assumed under international agreements, tries to undermine the very system of international relations.

This fact, long since obvious to most members of the world community, has now been recognized by a large group of West European states, allies of the USA.

As the ASSOCIATED PRESS reports, the 12 EEC member countries sent a note to the U.S. Department of State. It is stressed in the note that the United States is not fulfilling its financial obligations under the United Nations Charter in full, since it does not contribute its due share to the United Nations budget.

It is said in the note that the 12 Common Market countries are seriously concerned that the violation of the agreement due to the reduction of the U.S. contributions to the United Nations undermines the mainstays of international order. They urged the U.S. Government to take the necessary measures to implement its international obligations to the United Nations Organization.

But by all indications Washington intends to ignore the calls of the allies, just as it had earlier ignored more than once similar just demands of many other U.N. member countries and also of the United Nations leadership, including United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar. The 12 EEC member countries made a request to official Washington for a special meeting of their representatives with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz on Washington's stand with regard to the United Nations. But all their efforts have been futile. George Shultz has been avoiding such a meeting for three weeks now.

In this connection the ASSOCIATED PRESS quotes a West European diplomat as saying that George Shultz is prepared to meet Savimbi (head of the terrorist splitter group UNITA [The National Union for the Total Independence of Angola], which is striving to overthrow the lawful government of the People's Republic of Angola -- TASS edit.), but he has no wish to meet the United States chief European allies.

Commenting on the conflict between the USA and its West European allies on the question of the attitude to the United Nations Organization, observers note that this is quite a natural phenomenon. The refusal of the U.S. Administration to heed the opinion of even its allies shows once again that by its policy hostile to the United Nations the USA opposed itself to entire international community.

REAGAN'S SPEECH ON CONTRA AID CRITICIZED

LD181359 Moscow in English to North America 0000 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] President Reagan, in his Sunday speech on television, found similarities between the attacks by the Nicaraguan contras against the Sandinist government and the struggle the British people waged agai t Nazi Germany in World War II, he added: It makes me a contra, too. Here's our comment.

This is not the first statement by the President that has amazed many. However, when the President links himself to the contras, who gained worldwide notoriety by their atrocities, or when he puts them next to the founding fathers, it's his business after all. The only thing one can be surprised at is the degree of Mr Reagan's disrespect for his people and for the history of his country which makes it possible for him to draw such parallels.

But when the President compares the Somoza thugs and their massacres of civilians in Nicaragua with the French resistance and the struggle of the British people against fascist Germany, this is something different. Such statements are evidence that the White House, in a bid to make Congress release $100 million in aid to the contras, is prepared to go to great lengths. One is bound to ask: What is the aim of Mr Reagan's rhetoric, since the latest statements by high ranking administration officials make it absolutely clear that, for the White House, no price is too great when it comes to attempts to overthrow the Sandinists? This seems to be precisely what Congress is afraid of. Many lawmakers believe that the $100 million requested by President Reagan are only the beginning of more radical steps along these lines. The American intelligence has said that no aid will be able to win victory for the contras, so the lawmakers fear that the fight against the Daniel Ortega government can become for the administration a cause of principle and prestige and that the only way of saving it would be to send the Marines.

Concern in Congress has grown still further since the Pentagon has announced that it's going to send military advisers to Honduras to train detachments of contras. It's easy to imagine what course the events would take if this happened. First, the advisers would train the contras, then they would take a limited part in combat operations, then their number would gradually increase and finally they'd be able to form independent combat contingents. This scenario is reminiscent of Vietnam, where American interference began with military aid and the sending of advisers. It seems that the lawmakers' minds are more occupied by such thoughts than President Reagan's reflections on what, in his view, are the virtues of the contras and the sins of the Sandinists. The more so since every argument the President has used flies in the face of the facts, including such minor issues as his accusations against the Sandinist leadership of drug trafficking. The SAN FRANCISCO INQUIRER has said it's been found that it's not the Sandinists that go in for that sort of shady deeds but the President's best friends, the contras. It appears that President Reagan had made a hasty step when he likened himself to them.

'MAJOR DEFEAT' FOR REAGAN BUDGET PROPOSALS NOTED

PM151529 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 15 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Blow Against the Budget"]

[Text] Washington, 14 Mar -- The draft U.S. federal budget for fiscal 1987 submitted to Congress by the Reagan administration has suffered its first major defeat.

On Thursday it was rejected by the House of Representatives by 312 votes to 12. As is well known, the draft budget provides for an increase in U.S. military spending to the unprecedentedly high sum of $320.3 billion. At the same time programs for vitally necessary social appropriations, on which the existence of millions of Americans depends, are being cut.

Speaking before the vote, Congressman David Obey (Democrat, from Wisconsin) stated that the draft proposed by the administration is a "mockery of a budget" that can in no way be considered a responsible approach to the country's problems. Moreover, even Robert Michel, leader of the Republican minority in the House of Representatives, who is close to the White House, called the draft budget elaborated by the administration "unrealistic."

Although major battles around the federal budget for the next fiscal year still lie ahead for Congress, observers consider the outcome of the vote in the House of Representatives to be highly symbolic.

It demonstrated that more and more legislators are registering a "vote of no confidence" in the policy of frenziedly increasing military spending at the expense of the interests of a broad strata of Americans. As a report issued here by the research group of the Democratic Party faction in the House of Representatives points out, the draft budget provides for an immediate reduction of $13 billion in the most important domestic programs. In particular, appropriations for the needs of health care and education are being substantially cut, as is financial aid to the elderly and disabled.

GORBACHEV ECONOMIC PLAN 'CHALLENGE' TO U.S. VIEWED

LD160402 Moscow in English to North America 2300 GMT 15 Mar 86

["Moscow Viewpoint" commentary by Valentin Zorin]

[Text] When I was looking through U.S. press comment on the recent congress of the Soviet Communists, my attention was drawn to a remark in the JOURNAL OF COMMERCE that some Americans wonder whether Gorbachev's economic plan is a challenge to America. By challenge, they mostly mean a military threat, a charge no closer to reality than the hackneyed claim of a Soviet threat.

Since it was setting out to double its production potential within 15 years, this country decided to double its spending on social and cultural needs, too. This program, adopted at the Communist Party congress, is meant to speed up economic growth in order to improve the quality of life for the people. As Mikhail Gorbachev told the congress, socialism rejects war unconditionally as a means of settling political and economic differences and ideological disputes between states. Our ideal, he added, is a world without weapons and violence, a world in which every nation can freely choose a way of development and a way of life. But what, then, has frightened the Americans, as the JOURNAL OF COMMERCE writes? What kind of challenge to they see in the Soviet economic program? Perhaps they simply hate to part with one of their favorite doctrines, designed to wear down the Soviet economy in an arms race. Washington has hoped for a long time to bring the Soviet Union to an economic and political disaster by forcing it to spend ever greater sums on the arms race. Successive U.S. administrations, including the present one, have for years fueled the arms race, trying to get military advantages; but the Soviet Union has managed to maintain a military-strategic balance by taking countermeasures.

The U.S. policy of arms buildup has had two economic effects. One is that the Soviet economy, despite being forced to carry the heavy burden of military spending, is in such a state that the Soviet leaders can make plans to boost economic growth and thus raise the people's standard of living. The other is that America's excessive military spending has caused its federal debts to leap high above the $1 trillion mark. The budget deficit has become not only an acute economic problem, but a political one as well. America's trade deficit is at a record high. American goods are becoming less and less competitive. Cutbacks in social programs lead more and more Americans to lose jobs and sink below the official poverty line. The challenge to the Soviet Union made by Washington in the early eighties has hit back like a boomerang. If the arms race continues and spreads to outer space, this will be the ruin of not the Soviet Union, as Washington thinks, but of the entire world, including the United States itself. In a resolution adopted at their congress, the Soviet Communists point to the increasingly urgent demand arising from the course of history and social progress that states and peoples cooperate in a constructive, creative spirit on a global scale. The real dialectic of the world's modern development lies in combining the competition, the historic antagonism between the two systems with a growing trend toward the states of the world community becoming dependent on each other. But the realization of this requires a new kind of political thinking.

ZHAO ZIYANG RECEIVES ARKHIPOV FOR TALKS

[Text] Beijing March 18 TASS -- Member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, premier of the State Council of the Chinese People's Republic Zhao Ziyang today received in Zhongnanhai Ivan Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

During the conversation the sides expressed satisfaction over a substantial progress in the development of commercial, economic, scientific, technical and cultural cooperation between the Soviet Union and the Chinese People's Republic over the recent years. Mutual confidence has been expressed that the results of the first meeting of the Soviet-Chinese Commission on Economic, Commercial, Scientific and Technical Cooperation will give strong impetus for advance in these spheres. The sides noted that there exist vast potentials for the further widening of mutually advantageous cooperation between the two countries.

Ivan Arkhipov spoke about the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, about historic importance of the decisions of the party forum for all aspects of the life of the Soviet people, for ultimate removal of the threat of nuclear war. It was stressed that the congress had confirmed again the Soviet Union's consistent striving to improve relations with the Chinese People's Republic, to widen versatile cooperation between the two countries in the interests of the Soviet and Chinese peoples.

The head of the Chinese Government said that of much interest is the course at the speeding up of the Soviet Union's social and economic development worked out at the 27th CPSU Congress. He noted that the Soviet Union and the Chinese People's Republic, the two great neighbouring socialist countries, have much in common in the system of economic management and that it would be useful to establish the exchange of experience and information in this sphere.

LI XIANNIAN ON OFFICIAL VISIT TO CAIRO

LD181408 Moscow TASS In English 1335 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo March 18 TASS -- The continued explosive situation in the Middle East is due to Israel's aggressive expansionist policy which is hampering the process of peaceful settlement in the Middle East, said Li Xiannian, chairman of the People's Republic of China, now here on an official visit. He stressed that China supports the Arab peoples, including the people of Palestine, in their just struggle to recover the Israeli-occupied territories and comes out for the convocation of an international conference on the Middle East under U.N. auspices and with the participation of all the sides concerned. The Palestine problem lies at the heart of the Arab-Israeli conflict and its solution is a must for reestablishing peace and tranquility in the region.

The PRC chairman said that all mankind is interested in easing international tensions and establishing a lasting peace on earth. In this connection we welcome the resumption of the USSR-U.S. dialogue in the hope that these talks will lead to the conclusion of agreements expected by all countries and peoples.

ANNIVERSARY OF DPRK COOPERATION PACT NOTED, VIEWED

Soiree Marks Anniversary

PM171525 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 16 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Public Soiree"]

[Text] A public soiree was held in Moscow on 14 March to mark the 37th anniversary of the agreement on economic and cultural cooperation between the USSR and the DPRK.

This document, the speakers stressed, is making a great contribution to the expansion of bilateral relations. Soviet people have always supported and continue to support the DPRK's persistent efforts aimed at their motherland's peaceful democratic union and the relaxation of international tension in the region and throughout the world.

Kwon Hui-kyong, DPRK ambassador to the USSR, noted that his country's people sincerely treasure friendship with the Soviet Union and will continue to make every effort to deepen it. He rated highly the USSR's peace initiatives.

SK181135 Moscow International Service in Korean 0930 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Commentary by station commentator Vasilyev]

[Text] Today marks the 37th anniversary of the conclusion of the agreement on economic and cultural cooperation between the Soviet Union and the DPRK. This agreement, signed on the basis of the principles of complete equality, mutual benefit, and comradely mutual assistance and support, was the first of the agreements that independent Korea concluded with foreign countries.

This agreement, signed in the glorious chronicle of Soviet-Korean friendship, was the start of the important phase that opened the road of developing relations between the two countries. In fact, this agreement was the first epochal agreement for long-range ties between the two countries.

In accordance with provisions stipulated in this agreement, a series of other documents dealing with ties between the two countries in the economic and trade fields were signed.

Over the period of 37 years, cooperation between the Soviet Union and Korea has been invariably developed and deepened in a planned manner. It has also greatly contributed to successfully developing social construction in the two countries.

This agreement has been vividly embodied in scores of plants built in the DPRK with Soviet aid. Some of these plants are such modern, large-scale industrial plants as the Kim Chaek iron works, the Pukchang thermal power plant, the Hamhung fertilizer plant, a small-type motor manufacturing plant, [name indistinct] plant, and the modern port at Najin.

Moreover, mutual trade activities between the two countries are very vigorous. The significance of the trade between the two countries lies is the fact that the Soviet Union has been one of the DPRK's major trade partners.

The ties between the two countries in the field of science and technology have played an important role in the economic ties of the two countries. USSR-DPRK ties in the field of science and technology have enabled the DPRK to develop the production of minerals in a short period of time with fewer funds, to introduce advanced technology and production processes in its agriculture and industry, to more reasonably utilize material and human resources, and to accelerate and improve the training of its national technological cadres. Ties in the cultural field have also been vigorous.

The significance of the 37th anniversary of the conclusion of the agreement on economic and cultural cooperation between the Soviet Union and Korea is also linked with other significant events between the two countries. The 20th meeting of the USSR-DPRK Intergovernmental Economic and Scientific and Technological Consultation Committee is being held in Pyongyang. This meeting is now being held with the aim of [passage indistinct].

(?Present) Soviet-Korean cooperation is being realized under a very favorable situation in which the traditional friendly relations between the two neighboring peoples have entered an era of an overall new upsurge.

What played a leading role for the parties and peoples of our two countries under such a favorable situation was the agreement reached between Soviet and Korean leaders when the DPRK party and state delegation headed by Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers Party of Korea [WPK] and president of the DPRK, visited the Soviet Union. In accordance with this agreement, mutual cooperation in the field of socialist construction and in the international arena has been deepened and improved.

Regular contacts between the leaders of the two countries has served to enhance the effectiveness of this agreement. This year alone, Soviet Foreign Minister Comrade Shevardnadze visited the DPRK, and Comrade Kang Song-san, member of the WPK Central Committee Political Bureau and premier of the DPRK State Administration Council, who led a WPK delegation to attend the 27th CPSU Congress, held talks with Comrade Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

All these contacts and talks between Soviet and Korean leaders are characterized by the fact that the views of our two parties and governments on the basic and key problems that concern all mankind today have been invariably confirmed. The DPRK has supported Comrade Gorbachev's 15 January statement and the Soviet initiatives for peace elucidated in the CPSU Central Committee's Political Report delivered at the 27th CPSU Congress.

The Soviet people have expressed firm solidarity with the Korean people's struggle to alleviate tension on the Korean peninsula and to achieve the peaceful and democratic reunification of the country.

The peoples of our two countries express their firm determination to strengthen cooperation in the future under the socialist and internationalist principles in accordance with the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance.

USSR-DPRK ECONOMIC COOPERATION HAILED

Mutual Benefits Discussed

PM171452 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 16 Mar 86 p 3

[Article written for SELSKAYA ZHIZN by APN own corespondent V. Moiseyev as part of feature entitled "USSR-DPRK: Friendship, Brotherhood, Cooperation": "Mutual Benefit" -- first three paragraphs are an editorial introduction to the feature]

[Text] The friendship between the Soviet Union and the DPRK has long-standing strong traditions. The USSR was the first to help the Korean people in building a new life. Broad horizons for labor accomplishments and victories opened up for working people in the Land of the Morning Freshness, as the Koreans call their motherland.

The national economic sectors of the DPRK's industry are developing successfully. A solid material and technical base fully in line with the requirements of the present is being created. In just one day the country produces industrial output equal to that produced by North Korea in the whole of 1946. Cooperation between our countries is strengthening and developing. Our all-around relations have risen to a qualitatively new level following the 1984 visit to the USSR by Comrade Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers Party of Korea Central Committee and DPRK president.

Pyongyang -- No matter which corner of people's Korea I have had an opportunity to visit, the tangible fruits of Soviet-Korean economic cooperation are visible everywhere. Soviet technologies are used in many sectors of the republic's industry -- primarily, of course, in the 69 enterprises built or reconstructed here with the USSR's assistance.

The Soviet Union supplies people's Korea with the machines and equipment, petroleum and petroleum products, coke and coking coal, cotton, and consumer goods it needs. In return the USSR receives magnesite powder for the metallurgical industry, motor car batteries, nonferrous and ferrous metals, light industry products, and agricultural produce.

Cooperation is developing successfully in timber and industrial chippings procurement in East Siberia. Several Korean timber procurement organizations are operating on the territory of Khabarovsk Kray and Amur Oblast. The mutual advantage of such production sharing is obvious: While possessing rich natural resources and the necessary equipment, the Soviet Union is at the same time experiencing a manpower shortage. In contrast, the DPRK needs timber materials and has the opportunity to recruit thousands of workers for timber procurement but has relatively small timber reserves.

The significance of this cooperation for the DPRK is not restricted to the opportunity to obtain timber in volumes sufficiently to satisfy more than half of the country's requirements. During their time in the USSR tens of thousands of Korean citizens have acquired the skills of tractor and motor vehicle drivers, machine operators, and so on.

Our ties in the fishing sphere have reached a high level. In accordance with existing agreements, Soviet and Korean fishing vessels carry out their operations in each other's economic zones and also enjoy the facility of obtaining fuel in USSR or DPRK ports and of carrying out repair work if necessary. There are reciprocal exchanges of fishing industry specialists and of information on questions concerning the industry's equipment, fish processing technologies, shellfish and seaweed farming, and the development of pond fishing.

The tasks facing our countries demand incessant deepening of cooperation and coordination of national economic plans. Plans for the next 5-year plan period envisage the concentration of efforts on expanding ties in the sphere of the development of power engineering, the mining and metallurgical industry, machine building, light industry, and agriculture.

There are good prospects for cooperation in shipbuilding. On the basis of Soviet technical documentation Korean shipyards will build for the USSR seiners and trawlers, "river-sea" dry cargo ships, barges, and timber carriers.

It is planned to place in the DPRK an order for the manufacture for the Soviet Union of railroad gondola cars designed by us and also to build on a barter basis a number of enterprises whose output will be delivered to the USSR.

Yakovlev Comments

[Yakovlev commentary]

[Text] Meetings have been held in Moscow between the government trade delegations of the Soviet Union and Korea. The meetings discussed issues in various fields related to the development of economic cooperation between the two countries in a businesslike [silmujogin] atmosphere. In this connection, station commentator Yakovlev writes as follows:

The Soviet-Korea trade talks ended under special circumstances, and a long-term trade agreement for the period of 1986 through 1990 has been signed between the two countries. This coincided with the 27th CPSU Congress, a significant event in the lives of the Soviet people.

In the Political Report delivered by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, at the congress, a task was put forth to comprehensively develop Soviet relations with the socialist countries, including the DPRK. Therefore, it is natural that the new trade agreement envisages the further development of Soviet-Korean trade and a deepening of reciprocal cooperation.

During the period 1981 through 1985, the trade volume between the two countries reached nearly R3.6 billion. This will more than double in accordance with the new trade agreement.

The trade talks noted the need to make continued joint efforts to fulfill the considerably expanded mutual trade pledges during the current 5-year plan, the possibilities for further expanding and deepening trade and economic relations between our countries based on equality and recripocity, and the need for the rational and complete utilization of all hidden potentials.

The trade agreement envisages a considerable increase in the supply of much modern Soviet machinery and facilities, and Soviet fuel and materials needed for the development of the people's economy of the DPRK and for its regular operation.

Meanwhile, the DPRK will increase the traditional export items of the Republic to the Soviet Union -- magnesia clinker, nonferrous and ferrous rolled metal products, cement, people's consumer goods, and the supply of products from enterprises built in people's Korea through Soviet technical support in accordance with the principle of the distribution of goods. Included in the export items are car batteries, small motors, and nonferrous rolled metal products.

The achievements which the peoples of the Soviet Union and Korea have won in the economic development of their countries guarantee the favorable conditions to expand trade based on reciprocity.

The Soviet people are greatly interested in socialist construction in people's Korea and rejoice over the successes of the fraternal Korean people as their own success.

The DPRK is presently fulfilling the long-range goals of economic construction for the eighties put forth at the sixth congress of the Workers Party of Korea. The successes are a fruition of the unyielding struggle of the Korean people and the great political vitality of the WPK. At the same time, they are a result of the equal and reciprocal cooperation between the Soviet people and the peoples of the other socialist countries.

The experiences of the past convincingly prove that friendship and cooperation have enabled the working people of the DPRK to overcome the remnants of the past colonial rule in a short period and the (?ravages) of war, and are contributing to the common interests of socialist and communist construction and to the cause of the consolidation of peace and security in the Far East.

Trade between the two countries in playing an important role in the development and consolidation of Soviet-Korean relations. During the quarter century since 1961, trade has continued between the two countries in accordance with systematic long-term trade agreements. The long-term 1986-1990 Societ-Korea trade agreement, too, will actively contribute to the further perfection, consolidation, and enrichment of Soviet-Korean trade and economic relations.

Thoroughly implementing all items of the agreement is the priority task of the trade functionaries of the two countries for the period of the new 5-year plan.

DPRK PROPOSES 'IMPORTANT' PEACE INITIATIVES

LD141803 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1145 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Vasiliy Kharkov commentary]

[Text] Moscow, 14 Mar (TASS) -- Ensuring peace and security in the Asian-Pacific region is one of the urgent tasks of the present time. The development of the situation in this vast region of the globe is convincing the states there that the only way to solve this problem is by an integrated approach uniting the efforts of all countries. A whole range of important and constructive initiatives have already been put forward on various aspects of Asian security. The DPRK is making an active contribution to this common cause of the Asian peoples.

The proposals put forward by the DPRK are marked by their specific nature and are imbued with the striving for a radical improvement in the situation on the Korean peninsula and for assisting Asia in becoming a continent of peace, stability,and good-neighborliness. Does it need to be said that if there is no calm on the whole of the Asian Continent? At the same time, south of the 38th parallel, which has artificially divided the Korean nation, the Pentagon has set up a network of military bases on which over 1,000 units of nuclear weapons are deployed. U.S. nuclear mines have been installed in the zone directly adjacent to the demarcation line. Washington makes no secret of its intentions to deploy cruise missiles with nuclear warheads in South Korea. If one adds to this the fact that U.S. vessels with nuclear weapons on board constantly call at the ports of South Korea as well as those of neighboring Japan, then it will become more clear that the nuclear threat is felt particularly acutely here.

In these conditions, the DPRK's proposals on the withdrawal of all types of nuclear weapons and U.S. troops from South Korea and on turning the peninsula into a nuclear-free zone, into a peace zone, are of particularly great importance.

As is known, the United Nations in a special resolution demanded that the United States cease its military presence in South Korea. Seeking the implementation of this decision by the world community, the DPRK introduced a number of proposals creating real prerequisites for a peaceful and independent unification of the country, for the elimination of the confrontation between North and South Korea by means of arranging dialogue and elaboration a declaration of nonaggression.

Recently, the DPRK put forward yet another extremely timely initiative that is important for the cause of peace and Asian security. It decided not to conduct any major military exercises and called on the other side to cease all military exercises during the talks between North and South. By rejecting this initiative and beginning the large-scale "Team Spirit-86" maneuvers, Washington and Seoul have gone in for a further complication of the situation on the Korean peninsula and have thrown down an open challenge to the national hopes of the Korean people and to the peace aspirations of all Asian peoples.

U.S.-SOUTH KOREAN' TEAM SPIRIT' EXERCISES ASSAILED

PM171114 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 16 Mar 86 p 3

[International observer M. Nepesov article: "The Pentagon's Nuclear Powder Keg"]

[Text] The situation prevailing in Asia and the Pacific was one of the many pressing world problems discussed at the 27th CPSU Congress. This attention is fully legitimate, because our country's territory lies not only in Europe but also in Asia. Indeed, most of it is actually in Asia. It is therefore understanbadle that we are far from indifferent about the development of the situation in this vast region, where complex knots, contradictions, and political instability [neuregulirovannost] are to be found in considerable quantities.

In particular, there has been an appreciable intensification of imperialist forces' military activeness in the Far East. Major military maneuvers by the United States and South Korea involving at least 200,000 servicemen have been in progress there since 10 February. These provocative exercises, codenamed "Team Spirit 86," will last until the end of April in the southern Korean peninsula, the Sea of Japan, and the Yellow Sea. This means that nuclear strikes will be simulated, live shells and bullets will be used, and combat aircraft and ships equipped with everything necessary to conduct far from game-like military operations will be moved to the immediate vicinity of the state borders of the DPRK, the PRC, and the USSR. According to Japanese press reports, the scenario for these maneuvers envisages the rehearsal of so-called "in-depth" and "preemptive" strikes deep inside enemy defenses.

It has come to light that, in addition to "Team Spirit 86," joint maneuvers by Japanese Army units and U.S. troops stationed in the south of the peninsula will be held this year on South Korean territory. Chon Tu-hwan's mercenqry clique, totally unconcerned that recollections of the atrocities committed by the Japanese military during the last world war are still alive in the people's memory and will never be obliterated, is giving the descendants of the bloody samurai an opportunity to trample on Korean soil again. For what purpose are the militarists in Washington, Tokyo, and Seoul conducting essentially uninterrupted military exercises of an offensive nature in Asia and the Pacific? There is only one answer: to fan anti-Soviet and antisocialist hysteria and to intimidate the forces of peace and progress in Asia.

The region contiguous to southern Korea, as well as the entire Pacific basin, have long been seen by imperialist strategists as one of the areas of military-political confrontation with the USSR, the DPRK, other socialist countries, and the Asian peoples' national liberation movements. This is the reason why the United States maintains in southern Korea a large contingent of its forces, in excess of 40,000 soldiers and officers. The greatest alarm is caused by the fact that more than 1,000 units of different nuclear weapons, including neutron weapons, have been shipped to U.S. military bases there. The transformation of South Korea into the Pentagon's nuclear powder keg is fraught with deadly danger not only for Koreans, and not only for Asia. The time has come to realize fully the grim realities of our time: Nuclear weapons are bearers of a maelstrom capable of wiping humankind off the face of the earth.

While on the subject, it should be recalled that the first explosion of a U.S. atom bomb occurred in the Far East, above the Japanese city of Hiroshima. In the light of this explosion, the simulations of nuclear strikes taking places in the course of the "Team Spirit 86" U.S.-South Korean military exercises appear particularly blasphemous. Bearing in mind the nature of present-day weapons, this is not the type of "exercises" that ought to be engaged in. The ensuring of any state's security is increasingly becoming a political task, and it can be resolved only by political means.

This is why the Soviet Union, the DPRK, and Asia's other socialist states counter the destructive imperialist policy with a sensible alternative. For example, both nuclear powers in Asia -- the USSR and the PRC -- have pledged not to be the first to use nuclear weapons. As for the Korean peninsula, the implementation of the DPRK Government's proposals to transform it into a nuclear-free zone of peace would be a major step along the path of strengthening security in Asia and the Pacific. Moreover, Pyongyang is proposing a broad range of peace-loving initiatives aimed at the country's unification and the expansion of dialogue between the North and South of Korea. Specifically, to restore railroad communications between the two parts of the peninsula, to embark on the joint working of mineral resources, and so on. Of course, these and many other proposals can materialize only after the U.S. military presence in the south of the country is ended.

SOKOLOV GREETS MONGOLIAN COUNTERPART ON ARMY DAY

[Text] To Mongolian Defense Minister Colonel General Comrade J. Yondon

Esteemed Comrade Minister! On the 65th anniversary of the Mongolian People's Army, on behalf of the USSR Armed Forces and on my own behalf, I send to you and all Mongolian servicemen fraternal greetings and cordial congratulations.

The Mongolian People's Army, born in the flames of the revolutionary struggle, fulfills with honor its patriotic duty in defense of the Mongolian people's peaceful creative labor and their freedom and independence, and makes a fitting contribution to the cause of strengthening the socialist community's defense might.

On this noteworthy day I wish you, Comrade Minister, and all servicemen of the Mongolian People's Army new successes in strengthening your socialist motherland's defense capability to greet the 19th Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party Congress.

With communist greetings,

S. Sokolov, Marshal of the Soviet Union, USSR defnese minister

DEMICHEV CONVEYS GORBACHEV GREETINGS TO GANDHI

LD181336 Moscow International Service in Russian 0945 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] New Delhi, 18 Mar (TASS) -- Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi today received Petr Demichev, an alternate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, and USSR minister of culture, who is paying an official visit to India at the invitation of its government.

Petr Demichev conveyed to Rajiv Gandhi friendly greetings and best wishes from Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and other Soviet leaders. In the course of the meeting the sides discussed bilateral relations and ways to further develop multilateral Soviet-Indian cooperation.

Also touched upon were matters of Soviet-Indian cultural ties, and the forthcoming large-scale and comprehensive USSR festivals to be held in 1987-1988 in India, devoted to the 70th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution, and India festivals in the Soviet Union dedicated to the 40th anniversary of the republic's independence. The conversation was conducted in a warm and friendly atmosphere.

Petr Demichev was received by Ramaswami Venkataraman, vice-president of India. Meetings also took place with Bali Ram Bhagat, Indian minister of external affairs; and G. Parthasarathy, chairman of the Policy Planning Committee of the Indian Ministry of External Affairs.

Petr Demichev today visited the memorials erected at the cremation sites of the outstanding Indian leaders Mahatma Gandhi, Jawahar Lal Nehrv and Indira Gandhi, and laid wreaths.

DRA STATEMENT REJECTS UN HUMAN RIGHTS RESOLUTION

LD141516 Moscow TASS in English 1456 GMT 14 Mar 86

[text] Kabul March 14 TASS -- U.S.-led international imperialism, in a bid to divert the attention of the world public from facts of violation of human rights in the Republic of South Africa or on the Israeli-occupied Arab lands, has forced into the agenda of the 42nd session of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, which is under way in Geneva, the notorious question of the alleged flouting of human rights in Afghanistan, says a statement of the Foreign Ministry of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, which has been issued here. Using its usual power pressure tactics, the United States goaded the session into adopting an absolutely unfounded resolution on that issue, the statement says.

Both at previous and at the latest session the commission adopted a number of resolutions, which fully meet the interests of protection of human rights in different parts of the world. The Democratic Republic of Afghanistan has invariably come out in support of these documents, the statement stresses. Unfortunately, the resolution, adopted by this session, "On the Situation in Afghanistan," is obviously detrimental to the prestige of that competent international organization.

The unprejudiced person cannot but see the considerable successes which have been attained by democratic Afghanistan in the observance and protection of human rights over the years that passed after the April Revolution victory. Respect for man, equality of all peoples of the country, social progress -- all that has become a reality of Revolutionary Afghanistan, and has been recorded in the basic documents of the People's Democretic Party of Afghanistan and the Government of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan.

The letter and the spirit of all basic international documents, pertaining to protection of human rights, are being observed in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan.

Distorting in the eyes of the world public the real state of affairs in the sphere of protection of human rights in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, the forces of international imperialism and reaction are meanwhile carrying out ever growing interference into Afghanistan's internal affairs. The fact of counterrevolutionary gangs being trained and sent to the territory of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan is a very gross violation of all norms and principles of international law the violation of the basic human right -- the right to live.

The following could be said about the very "Report on the Situation in Afghanistan." The report does not contain a single favorable appraisal of broad-scale transformations aimed at improving the living conditions of the working people of the country, the measures aimed at democratisation of society. Instead, the report contains a heap of slander based exclusively on malicious fabrications of mercenary assassins and terrorists being sent to Afghanistan from abroad. For instance, the report's section on the status of women and children, the system of public education in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan can be qualified only as a manifestation of political narrowness and tendentiousness. The report as a whole, the statement points out, is an expression of hostility for the people which cast off the yoke of colonialism and neo-colonialism.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan believes that the adoption of the resolution by the session of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights is a gross violation of the principles and norms of international law, the relevant provisions of the U.N. Charter, and firmly turns down the assertions made in the report which is a malicious anti-Afghan fraud.

NEWS CONFERENCE CONDEMNS WEST ON RIGHTS ISSUE

LD132135 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1530 GMT 13 Mar 86

[Correspondent M. Leshchinskiy video report from a 13 March news conference held in Kabul devoted to human rights in Afghanistan; from the "Vremya" newscast -- recorded]

It needs to be said that we have more than once told you about this in our report from Afghanistan -- in reports from scenes of action -- where for many years now an undelcared war has been waged. However in the West, anti-Afghan campaigns continue to be waged during which it is claimed that allegedly it is precisely Afghanistan's popular authorities who are violating citizens' rights and freedoms. All this was duly rebuffed at today's news conference.

In the official statement which was delivered at the news conference by David Kawian, president of the BAKHTAR news agency, new facts and figures were cited which are evidence of the counterrevolutionaries' inhuman actions. Just recently they have burned over 133 mosques, 2,707 schools and 130 hospitals. Hundreds of priests, teachers, and educational workers have died at the hands of hired murderers. At the same time, it was noted in the statement, the popular revolutionary authorities from their inception have set themselves the task of unswervingly observing human rights in Afghanistan. In revolutionary Afghanistan not only are human rights observed but the rights to education, medical services, and work are being developed in every way.

All the news conference participants unanimously condemned the so-called hearings on human rights in Afghanistan which are being organized in the West.

DRA PROTESTS PAKISTANI 'AGGRESSIVE ACTIONS'

LD131745 Moscow TASS in English 1531 GMT 13 Mar 86

[Text] Kabul March 13 TASS -- Pakistan's charge d'affaires ad interim in the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan has been summoned to the Afghan Foreign Ministry and told there that Pakistani military authorities are continuing to interfere in the internal affairs of this country, engaging in aggression and giving direct support to Afghan counter-revolutionary gangs, BAKHTAR news agency reported.

Between March 3 and 9, for example, the area of the populated locality of Sulaiman in Paktia Province repeatedly came under artillery and rocket shelling which killed 13 people, including women and children, gravely wounded another 52, ruined 20 houses, damaged 40 kilometers of irrigation canals and destroyed 280 tons of food and a large number of fruit trees.

The Afghan Government declared a strong protest over these aggressive actions by the Pakistani Armed Forces and demanded that the Pakistani authorities end them immediately.

It said the responsibility for the aggressive actions is squarely on the Pakistani authorities.

UN'S CORDOVEZ SATISFIED WITH TALKS IN KABUL

LD181221 Moscow TASS in English 1103 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Kabul, March 17 (CTK correspondent) -- U.N. Deputy Secretary General Diego Cordovez has voiced satisfaction with the results of his consultations with Afghan officials in Kabul before leaving for his third visit to Islamabad in two weeks today. He will inform the Pakistani side of the Afghan Government's views on the talks on the Afghanistan situation in Geneva. Cordovez announced that the talks in Geneva would continue soon.

PRAVDA REPORTS PDPA POLITBURO SESSION IN KABUL

PM171607 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 15 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Tass report: "A United Front"]

[Text] Kabul, 14 Mar -- A session of the PDPA Central Committee Politburo has taken place here. It was addressed by B. Karmal, general secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council, who headed the Afghan party delegation to the 27th CPSU Congress. He noted the principled, firm position which the CPSU and the Soviet Government hold with regard to Afghanistan and the fraternal and internationalist nature of the USSR's assistance to the Afghan people, who are defending their motherland's sovereignty, territorial integrity, and independence. The results of the 27th CPSU Congress' work, the Afghan leader stressed, are evidence of the process of strengthening the world socialist system and the communist and workers movement, which form a united front against the forces of imperialism and for the preservation of life on earth.

THATCHER'S RECEPTION OF AFGHAN REBEL LEADER CRITICIZED

Letter From Women's Leader

PM171657 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 16 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Tass report: "Afghanistan-Britain; Profound Indignation"]

[Text] Kabul, 15 Mar -- A. Ratebzad, chairman of the Democratic Organization of Women of Afghanistan, has sent an open letter to British Prime Minister M. Thatcher in which, on behalf of all Afghan women, she has expressed profound indignation at London's official reception of one Abdul Haq, ringleader of the Afghan dushmans.

By receiving the murderer on whose conscience are bloody crimes against his own people and by promising him support, the letter says, you are essentially acting in the role of patron of terrorists who resort to any means to return Afghanistan to the Middle Ages. Tens of millions of pounds are being sent by the British Government to the counterrevolution to continue the undeclared war against Afghanistan, whose first victims are women and children. On Afghan soil the dushmans have destroyed 38 hospitals and 111 medical centers, demolished 2,000 schools, and blown up over 250 mosques. In the brief period since the victory of the April national democratic revolution in Afghanistan, the letter notes, more has been done for the people than in the country's entire preceding history. Women enjoy equal rights in all spheres of state and public life. Free democratic elections are taking place for the first time in the country's life.

Mikheyev Comments

PM181529 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 17 Mar, 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Mikheyev "International Commentary": "London Protects Dushmans"]

[Text] The Afghan terrorist leader Abdul Haq's high-level "consultations" in London have shown that the Conservative government is intent on playing a more appreciable part in the undeclared war against the DRA.

The Tory party's political sympathies have never been a secret, particularly since Prime Minister M. Thatcher used a telescopic sight to survey DRA territory a few years back from the heights of the Khyber Pass. Last year the prime minister acknowledged during a television interview that she had granted 4 million pounds to the Afghan rebels. According to local press reports, there was discussion about further appropriations for the war against the Afghan people during the audience given by M. Thatcher to Abdul Haq. However, the details of the bilateral accord remain a secret.

The secret deal with the Afghan dushman chief was no surprise. What is new in British diplomacy in the Middle East [as published] is direct contact between the prime minister and the person who uses his 5,000 cutthroats to organize sabotage and acts of terrorism. Previously, REUTER stresses, M. Thatcher "Has invariably refused to meet rebel leaders on the grounds that they supported violence."

Fairness requires one to observe that this has not prevented and does not prevent London officialdom from acting as the protector of extremist groupings. It is no accident that the headquarters of the separatist movement to create the Sikh "state of Khalistan" has been established on the banks of the Thames. The movement's leader, the not-unknown Jo Chohan, "predicted" Indira Gandhi's assassination with striking accuracy. He has also already made threats against Rajiv Gandhi, which were broadcast on BBC radio services. Other Sikh separatists have made a niche for themselves in Birmingham, where they collect funds to destabilize the situation in India through terrorist acts. Hijackings of Indian aircraft form part of the arsenal of methods used in their "struggle."

It is not just connivance with foreign terrorist organizations. International Law, the norms of interstate relations adopted in civilized society, and the UN Charter are also being flouted.

If Sikh extremists feel themselves at ease under the protection of London officialdom, the Afghan counterrevolutionaries, too, who are using methods of terror in their fight against the people's power, have no reason to stand aside. Nor are their calculations unfounded. During Abdul Haq's talks with G. Howe, foreign secretary, and Baroness Young, minister of state at the Foreign Office, the British side morally committed itself to giving "full support" to the dushmans. Official contacts with leaders of the Afghan counterrevolution were also blessed. London thus issued an official challenge to the DRA, with which it maintains diplomatic relations. Kabul has sent an official protest to Britain regarding Abdul Haq's invitation to London.

The prospect of a political settlement is clearly so unacceptable to London that it is ready to be unstinting in its provision of generous infusions of money, which enable the mercenary dushman formations to exist. Thus London is matching Washington in becoming yet another "godfather" of the policy of state terrorism.

GORBACHEV, LE DUAN SHARE 'IDENTICAL VIEWS' ON ISSUES

[Text] An exchange of views was conducted on 14 March between Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Le Duan, general secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam [CPV] Central Committee.

On behalf of the leadership of the CPV Central Committee and all Vietnamese Communists, Comrade Le Duan warmly congratulated Comrade Gorbachev on his re-election as general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and wished him many achievements in his lofty position.

Highly valuing the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, Comrade Le Duan stressed that the documents approved at the congress are of great significance and are highly encouraging, not only for the Soviet Union, but also for all the world's revolutionary and progressive forces. Comrade Le Duan wished Soviet Communists and the entire Soviet working people splendid fulfillment of the tasks set out at the congress.

The SRV fully supports the Soviet Union's program of struggle to eliminate nuclear and chemical weapons, to establish a comprehensive international security system, and to counter the schemes of aggression of imperialism and reactionaries.

Comrade Le Duan kept Comrade Gorbachev informed of the preparations for the Sixth CPV Congress. The congress will determine new objectives for Vietnam's economic and social development.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev expressed his gratitude to Comrade Le Duan for highly valuing the resolutions passed at the 27th CPSU Congress. He stressed the unswerving solidarity of the CPSU and the Soviet people with Vietnamese Communists and the Vietnamese people, who are closing their ranks in the struggle to defend their revolutionary gains and consolidate the position of socialism in Vietnam. The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee conveyed to Vietnamese Communists and the entire Vietnamese working people his fraternal greetings, and wished them new achievements in honor of the Sixth CPV Congress.

During the exchange of views, both sides dealt with key issues in Soviet-Vietnamese relations, which have been developing on the basis of the principles of Leninism and socialist internationalism, and on the points mentioned in the USSR-Vietnam Treaty of Cooperation and Friendship. Both sides also resolutely condemned the actions of the imperialist circles and reactionaries in Southeast Asia, and affirmed their readiness to contribute to accelerating the quest for ways to resolve the lingering disputes in the region.

The Soviet Union actively supports the constructive steps of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia, designed to make Southeast Asia a zone of peace and stability, and to ensure security in the entire Asia-Pacific region.

The exchange of views proceeded in an atmosphere of friendship and sincerity, in which identical views were shared on all issues discussed.

AUSTRALIA OPPOSES U.S. CENTRAL AMERICAN POLICY

LD190949 Moscow TASS in English 0858 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Canberra March 19 TASS -- The Australian Government has repeatedly informed Washington of its firm opposition to any plans to provide military aid to the "contras" in Nicaragua, the Prime Minister of Australia Robert Hawke said at a session of the parliamentary faction of the ruling Labour Party.

Speaking in the House of Representatives of the Australian Parliament, Foreign Minister William Hayden stressed that the first and foremost principle by which Australia abides with regard to Central America is that all states in the region should have the opportunity to solve their problems individually without outside interference and that it is essential that the territorial borders of all Central American countries be respected. He said that the best way to achieve settlement of the Central American problems is support for the Contadora process.

INVESTIGATION INTO MARCOS FINANCES VIEWED

[Text] Manila March 15 TASS -- Philippine President Corazon Aquino has had a meeting here with a delegation of the International Monetary Fund.

Representatives of the fund, controlled by U.S. capital, have come to discuss with the new leadership of the country the terms of economic aid to the Philippines. The agenda of the talks includes the repayment of foreign debts, totalling almost 30 billion dollars, to Western creditors. The Aquino administration intends to ask for rescheduling debt repayment. Local observers note that the extremely grim economic situation in the Philippines is explained by the country's strong dependence on the Western financial institutions and also by the predatory policies of U.S. monopolies.

The Philippine Government continues to investigate the siphoning off of large funds from the state treasury under the previous administration. The PHILIPPINE DAILY INQUIRER writes that Marcos made large donations to the election campaign of U.S. President Reagan. Since the 1980 presidential election, about 70 million dollars were transferred from the Philippine treasury to the other side of the ocean. Trying to secure Washington's support, the newspaper says, the former Philippine president generously supplied with money the White House chief and his closest entourage, including Defense Secretary Weinberger and CIA Director Casey.

The investigation of these machinations and of the bank assets of the Marcos family abroad is the responsibility of a presidential commission set up to oversee the activities of the government under Jovito Salonga. However, as President Aquino's executive secretary said at a press conference here, the Philippine Government has reason to believe that the USA has no serious intention of facilitating the return of the property belonging to the Republic.

New York March 15 TASS -- The ABC T.V. Company reports that the U.S. Federal Court blocked the access of members of the commission led by Salonga, who arrived in Washington, to documents taken by Marcos along as he had fled from the Philippines to Hawaii. The more than 1,500 various documents taken away by the former president, it is believed, could shed light on the character and size of the operations of the Marcos family.

FILIPINO WORKERS AT U.S. BASES GO ON STRIKE

LD180812 Moscow TASS in English 0759 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Manila March 18 TASS -- TASS correspondent Alexander Kisilyov reports: The leadership of the trade union of Filipino civilian workers at U.S. military bases in this country today announced a massive protest campaign against the discriminatory practices of the U.S. military authorities there.

Responding to its call, more than 30,000 Filipino workers from seven U.S. military facilities in the Philippines, including the Pentagon's largest overseas bases at Subic Bay and Clark Field, mounted protest demonstrations, pickets and strikes.

The broadest-ever labor action was launched following the U.S. military command's refusal to accept the terms of a collective bargaining agreement suggested by the Philippine trade union. It provided for better working conditions and amenities, higher pay and bigger social welfare allowances for Filipino workers. The union also demanded that the 66 fired Filipino workers, including union activists, be reinstated in their former jobs at the Subic Bay base.

The union's Chairman Roberto Flores said its leadership was determined to go on with the campaign until the U.S. military command met all those demands.

The massive union protest, the press agreed, underlines a growing class awareness of the Filipino workers unwilling to put up with their "second-rate people" status formalized in the inequitable agreement on labor relations at the bases, which was foisted on the Philippines by the United States in 1968.

IZVESTIYA PROFILES PHILIPPINES' CORAZON AQUINO

PM171435 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 16 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 3

[Unattributed article under the rubric "Who's Who": "President of the Philippines Corazon Aquino"]

[Text] Born in 1933 in Tarlac Province, not far from Manila. She received higher philological and legal education in New York and Manila. She married Benigno Aquino, an eminent politician who was the most consistent opponent of President F. Marcos among the bourgeois opposition. B. Aquino advocated the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Philippines and the USSR. In 1969 he visited the USSR.

In 1972-1980, B. Aquino was imprisoned in connection with accusations by the authorities of antigovernment activity. In 1980, B. Aquino received permission to travel to the United States for medical treatment. He flew home from the United States in August 1983. On arriving in Manila he was killed at the airport as he left the aircraft. The circumstances of the crime have still not been definitively cleared up.

The death of her husband and Corazon Aquino's subsequent criticism of the ruling regime won her the sympathy of the middle and petite bourgeoisie and representatives of the country's poorest strata. C. Aquino was also supported by a section of the opposition-minded big bourgeoisie.

In her election statements, C. Aquino promised to take decisive steps to eradicate corruption and abuses and to improve the population's living standards. She stated that she would support relations with all countries irrespective of their social systems. Here emphasis was placed on the consolidation of relations with the United States and the ASEAN States.

Refusing to recognize the results of the 7 February election announced by F. Marcos and stating they had been rigged, C. Aquino and her supporters launched a campaign of civil disobedience. When C. Aquino was supported by the leadership of the Armed Forces, F. Marcos resigned as president and left the Philippines. On the same day, 25 February, C. Aquino was proclaimed the country's new president. C. Aquino has five children.

FURTHER ON SHEVARDNADZE'S VISIT TO POLAND

Jaruzelski Meeting Elaborated

LD181448 Moscow TASS in English 1436 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Warsaw March 18 TASS -- Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PUWP Central Committee and chairman of the State Council of Poland, today received Eduard Shevardnadze, a member of the Politbureau of the CPSU Central Committee and minister of foreign affairs of the USSR, paying an official visit of friendship to Poland at the invitation of the Polish Government.

In the course of the conversation, which passed in a warm and comradely atmosphere and in the spirit of complete mutual understanding, the sides expressed satisfaction with the fruitful development of relations between the USSR and Poland, firmly based on the unshakable principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism. The fraternal alliance between the CPSU and the PUWP that is constantly growing stronger and their comprehensive development and further improvement of Soviet-Polish cooperation in every field.

Exchanging opinions on international affairs, the sides noted that, given continued world tension, special importance attached to the cohesion of the fraternal countries and to further improvement of the efficient coordination of their actions on the international scene. In this context they noted the growing role of the Warsaw Treaty Organization as an instrument of achieving concerted foreign policy strategies and actions of the countries of the socialist community for peace, international security and disarmament.

Orzechowski Talks 'Total Success'

LD190251 Moscow International Service in Polish 1500 GMT 18 Mar 86

["Facts and Comment Magazine" commentary]

[Text] A commendable tradition of verifying our fraternal countries' progress in solving the most important issues of our time has existed for many years. It takes place at various levels: from heads of states, parties and governments to ministers. Now another exchange of views on a number of most important matters forming the basis of close cooperation between the Soviet Union and People's Poland has taken place. Talks between Comrade Eduard Shevardnadze, CPSU Central Committee Politburo member, USSR foreign affairs minister, and Comrade Marian Orzechowski, PZPR Central Committee Politburo candidate member, Poland's foreign affairs minister, have taken place in Warsaw.

Primarily it should be emphasized that the present talks, like those before, took place in an atmosphere of complete mutual understanding and again confirmed the unanimity of views between the Soviet Union and Poland on all current international matters, and their steadfast will to actively struggle for a radical positive change on the European Continent and throughout the world. The results of this meeting will undoubtedly be analyzed both in Moscow and in Warsaw, as well as in the capitals of other countries. But already today there are grounds for speaking of a total success and productive nature of the talks. Comrade Shevardnadze stressed that it could not have been otherwise, since they had been preceded by an important meeting between Mikhail Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary, and Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, PZPR Central Committee first secretary, chairman of Poland's Council of State. That meeting, it was stressed during the talks in Warsaw, laid out clear signposts and directions for developing cooperation in the future interests of peace and socialism.

In Warsaw it was said openly that Poland has lived through a difficult time. It has gone through ordeals sorely felt by every Soviet [as heard] citizen. But today, when the perfidious plans of the antisocialist forces and their imperialist patrons have been thwarted, it is possible to look to the future with optimism and to seriously address matters of long-term cooperation. This is shown by the Long-Term Program for the Development of Economic and Scientific, and Technical Cooperation Between the Soviet Union and Poland Through the Year 2000. The document, of great political significance, has made a weighty contribution to the collective efforts of the countries of the socialist community striving for a reliable defense against the subversive financial-economic machinations of the imperialist forces.

The present talks in Warsaw were influenced by the fact that they took place soon after the completion of the proceedings of the 27th CPSU Congress and on the eve of another forum of the Polish Communists. The agendas of these congresses contain different tasks and different methods of resolving them. But there is only one objective -- to strengthen the might of our indissoluble alliance and to raise the living standard of the working people of our countries. Faithful to its internationalist duty, the Soviet Union and its party have always been and will continue to be on the side of fraternal Poland and will always readily share with it -- as with other fraternal countries -- their rich experience of building a new society.

In the Soviet Union, Comrade Jaruzelski's words that everything done now in the Land of the Soviets is of great significance for the fraternal parties of the socialist community, for the international communist and workers movement, and for the destiny of all mankind, were received with gratitude. The Soviet-Polish alliance constitutes an important factor of security in Europe. It is of fundamental significance in the international situation that has arisen, namely when in some Western capitals, above all Washington, attempts are made to act from positions of strength and diktat, and an unprecedented arms race is being fanned. Considering all these factors, the participants in the talks in Warsaw declared their resolute will to oppose with every means the policy of confrontation conducted by the United States, as well as all attempts, made first and foremost in the FRG, to question the territorial-political postwar realities. This is a most timely warning.

And so, the visit to Poland by Comrade Eduard Shevardnadze, the Soviet Union's foreign affairs minister, can be completely and justifiably described as political. The talks in the Polish capital will undoubtedly contribute to a further tightening of our countries' fraternal cooperation.

PRAVDA Publishes Communique

PM181700 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 19 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

["Soviet-Polish Joint Communique" -- PRAVDA headline]

[Text] E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR foreign minister, was on an official friendly visit to Poland 17-18 March 1986 at the invitation of the Government of the People's Republic of Poland.

E.A. Shevardnadze was received by Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZRP Central Committee and chairman of the Polish State Council. In the course of the conversation satisfaction was expressed at the dynamic development of Soviet-Polish relations and the close cooperation between the USSR and Poland in the international arena.

An exchange of views took place between E.A. Shevardnadze and M. Orzechowski, candidate member of the PZRP Central Committee Politburo and Polish foreign minister, on the state and prospects of relations between the two countries in the spirit of the accords reached in the course of meetings between M.S. Gorbachev and W. Jaruzelski.

E.A. Shevardnadze familiarized M. Orzechowski with the results of the 27th CPSU Congress' work, devoting particular attention to the foreign policy program approved by the congress. He stressed that Soviet people have embarked on the active implementation of the plans outlined by the congress.

On behalf of the Polish leadership, M. Orzechowski stated that the 27th CPSU Congress decisions have received widespread support in Poland. In turn he described the progress of preparations for the 10th PZPR Congress and the discussion of the draft program and other documents submitted for examination by the party forum.

The ministers again confirmed the abiding significance of the Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Aid Treaty between Poland and the USSR for the development and consolidation of the allied relations of friendship and all-around cooperation between the two countries. These relations, which are based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism and on the unity of the objectives of the CPSU and the PZPR and of the vital interests of the USSR and Poland and the two countries' peoples, are developing successfully in all fields.

The ministers expressed the conviction that the consistent implementation of the Long-Term Program for the Development of Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation Between Poland and the USSR for the Period Through the Year 2000, of all other agreements and bilateral accords, and also of mutual commitments within the CEMA framework must serve the further deepening of cooperation and integration and the resolute acceleration of the two countries' socioeconomic development.

The sides recorded the fact that the implementation of the agreements concluded and understandings reached is proceeding successfully. At the present time all efforts must be aimed at more effective utilization of manpower and resources toward the joint resolution of paramount problems in the socioeconomic development of the USSR and the Polish People's Republic on the basis of scientific-technical progress.

The talks reaffirmed a complete unity of views in appraising the present international situation and of conclusions flowing from that appraisal in terms of the foreign policy of the two states. The ministers noted that the international situation remains extremely tense. The danger of nuclear catastrophe has not diminished. The United States and its NATO allies have not renounced the intention to secure military superiority. The siting of American first-strike missiles in certain West European countries continues. Intensifying the arms race in all spheres, the United States is striving to also extend it to outer space.

The sides again drew attention to the fact that the "star wars" program in which the United States is embroiling a number of allies, intensifies the arms race and threatens to make it irreversible in character, tends to upset strategic stability, and creates a serious threat to international security. Imperialism's militarist policy and its pretensions to world domination are the main obstacle in the way of lasting peace, security, and cooperation.

The complete elimination of nuclear weapons before the end of this century, with a simultaneous ban on space strike weapons, is the only solution acceptable to all countries and peoples. The Polish People's Republic again expresses full support for the comprehensive program for disarmament and for a peaceful future for the world advanced in the 15 January 1986 statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and in the 27th CPSU Congress documents.

It was stressed that under present conditions the halting of all nulear tests could and should be an important step on the way to freeing mankind from nuclear weapons. The Soviet Union's decision, made in response to an appeal from the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece, not to carry out nuclear explosions even after 31 March -- until the first U.S. nuclear explosion -- enables the resolution of this urgent problem to be shifted onto practical lines.

The sides expressed the unanimous opinion that the total liquidation of medium-range U.S. and Soviet missiles in the European zone on a reciprocal basis must become one of the first steps on the road toward the elimination of the threat of nuclear war. The reaching of an agreement on this issue would facilitate the liquidation of nuclear weapons on a global scale. Poland fully supports the USSR's constructive stance at the Soviet-U.S. talks in Geneva on nuclear and space weapons.

The ministers expressed themselves in favor of activating the Vienna talks on the reduction of armed forces and armaments in central Europe and they stressed in this regard the importance of the transition without delay to drafting the text of an agreement on initial reductions of troops and armaments of the USSR and United States. The socialist countries' 20 February 1986 proposals could serve as the basis for the start of this work.

Poland and the Soviet Union have made and will continue to make every effort necessary to avert a dangerous development of events, to eliminate the threat of nuclear war, and to return to detente [razryadka] in international relations.

The ministers declared once again that respect for the territorial and political realities which have taken shape as a result of World War II and postwar development is an essential condition of peace and security in Europe. The aspiration of revanchist forces, above all in the FRG, to alter the established territorial-political setup threatens the foundations of peace in Europe.

Expressing disquiet at the growing exacerbation of the situation in many regions of the world, the ministers stressed the urgent necessity to eliminate hotbeds of tension and conflict through negotiation, taking into consideration the vital interests of the peoples of the states concerned.

The ministers confirmed that the USSR and the Polish People's Republic will continue to promote the consolidation of the unity and cohesion of the socialist community states. The improvement of the all-around, allied cooperation of the Warsaw Pact member-states is an essential condition of their security and successful development, and at the same time is an important factor for the preservation and consolidation of peace in Europe and throughout the world.

The talks passed in an atmosphere of allied friendship, full mutual understanding, and unity of views on all questions discussed.

E.A. Shevardnadze conveyed to M. Orzechowski an invitation to make a friendly visit to the Soviet Union. The invitation was received with gratitude.

ARISTOV WELCOMES HONECKER AT LEIPZIG FAIR

LD161800 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1640 GMT 16 Mar 86

[Text] Leipzig, 16 Mar (TASS) -- Erich Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee, chairman of the GDR State Council, and other party and state figures of the republic visited the Soviet pavilion at the International Leipzig Fair, which opened here today. They were greeted by Boris Aristov, the head of the Soviet Government delegation and USSR minister of foreign trade, and Vyacheslav Kochemasov, USSR ambassador to the GDR.

Speaking at the USSR pavilion, Erich Honecker stressed that this exhibition embodies the outstanding achievements of Soviet science and technology. All that is presented here, he said, confirms the profound impressions of the SED delegation about the 27th CPSU Congress.

Erich Honecker further noted that in the Political Report delivered by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and also in the other congress documents, tasks directed far into the future are set out.

The GDR leader expressed the assurance that the USSR will successfully fulfill the mighty plans, which will have decisive significance for the strengthening of socialism and peace.

Erich Honecker stated the the GDR wholly and entirely supports the all-embracing program to free the world of nuclear weapons before the year 2000, put forward by the USSR. This program is the only historical chance of its kind to save mankind from nuclear disaster, and to replace confrontation with cooperation. Peaceful coexistence must become the universal norm for relations between states. The GDR vigorously favors this, together with the USSR and other fraternal countries.

The speaker pointed to the enormous significance of the comprehensive program for scientific and technical progress up to the year 2000, adopted by the CEMA countries for the further deepening of socialist economic integration.

HONECKER EXPRESSES DESIRE TO VISIT FRG IN 1986

LD161528 Hamburg DPA in German 1154 GMT 16 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Bonn, 16 Mar (DPA) -- GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker wants to visit the Federal Republic this year. This impression has increased among observers of the talks between Chancelor Helmut Kohl and Honecker occasioned by the funeral of murdered Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme in Stockholm. Government Spokesman Friedhelm Ost, who accompanied the chancellor to the Swedish capital, however, declined to answer questions on the visit when he spoke to DPA today.

Ost also said he did not want to fuel speculation regarding a visit to Bonn by Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev. Nothing is known about any such plans. However, the Kremlin leader, like Honecker, has been invited to visit the Federal Republic.

Ost said Kohl spoke twice with Honecker on the sidelines of the ceremony in the Stockholm city hall and at the reception which followed at the Swedish Foreign Ministry. The time taken up by the talks between the two men, who also sat next to one another at the ceremony, was put at around 30 minutes. The chancellor once again stressed his concern for an improvement in relations between FRG and GDR citizens. More favorable opportunities for travel can contribute to this.

HONECKER MEETS VOLGOGRAD DELEGATION IN MOSCOW

DW042034 East Berlin Television Service in German 1830 GMT 4 Mar 86

[Text] In the Kremlin today in Moscow a friendly meeting took place between the SED delegation led by Erich Honecker and the Volgograd region delegates to the party congress. Memories of many years of friendship were exchanged. They talked about numerous meetings between workers, peasants, scientists, and in particular young people of the GDR and inhabitants of the city of heroes on the Volga. Vladimir Kalashnikov, first secretary of the CPSU regional committee, informed Erich Honecker about the productive effects of the Volgograd-Karl-Marx-Stadt partnership on their all-round relations. He said that on a recent visit to the Fritz Heckert combine with a delegation he had an opportunity to see the acceleration of scientific-technological progress, particularly in robot technology. That had impressed them very much, he said, because such tasks were being discussed here at the party congress and had also to be resolved in the Volgograd region.

Erich Honecker agreed that such partnership relations were very helpful for both cities in learning from each other and enhancing cooperation. In the course of the vivid conversation during one of the breaks in the Kremlin, the visit by Erich Honecker and a party-state delegation to Volgograd in 1975 was also broached. The people of Volgograd remember very well how the GDR representatives honored the heroes killed in the battle of Stalingrad. Honecker said that the youths of both countries had established close ties of friendship, and the FDJ-Komsomol festival in Volgograd had contributed to that. Erich Honecker and the members of his delegation wished the delegates from the city of heroes best successes for their work following the party congress. Erich Honecker asked them to convey to all Volgorad people fraternal greetings of friendship.

GDR STATEMENT HAILS USSR MORATORIUM EXTENSION

LD141730 Moscow TASS in English 1704 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Text] Berlin March 14 TASS -- The Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany, the Council of State and the Council of Ministers of the German Democratic Republic today issued a joint statement hailing the Soviet Union's decision not to conduct nuclear explosions also after March 31 -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States.

This position taken by the USSR, the statement said, demonstrates its unwavering determination to put an end to the arms race and secure effective steps to disarmament.

It also facilitates the fulfilment of the unique program for the stage-by-stage deliverance of mankind from nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, the statement added.

It said further that the joint message of the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden and Greece and the reply to that message by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, reflects a desire to halt the further upgrading of nuclear weapons by stopping nuclear explosions and create favorable conditions for measures to terminate the arms race on earth and prevent it from spilling over into outer space. This stand, the statement said, is fully supported by the GDR. The state statement noted the Soviet leader's reply makes clear-cut proposals on verification. After the latest constructive step by the USSR it is now the U.S. turn to contribute to an end to nuclear blasts by stopping its nuclear testing.

ACTIVITIES OF BCP DELEGATION AT 27TH CONGRESS NOTED

Stanishev Speaks at Press Center

AU012112 Sofia BTA in English 2025 GMT 1 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 1 (BTA correspondent Nencho Khranov) -- A meeting with members of the Bulgarian Communist Party delegation attending the 27th Congress of the CPSU was held today in the congress's international press center. The members of the Bulgarian delegation were Mr Dimitur Stanishev, secretary of the CC of the BCP, and Mr Ivan Panev, member of the CC of the BCP and first secretary of the County Committee of the BCP in Plovdiv.

"We have every reason to state that the 27th Congress of the CPSU is a congress of Communists' historical optimism, and congress aiming at a peaceful future, noted Mr Dimitur Stanishev. "This is being felt with great strength in the extremely important Political Report of the CC of the CPSU read by Mr Mikhail Gorbachev. The new edition of the Program of the CPSU and the main trends for the economic and social development of the U.S.S.R. are of new theoretical contribution to the further development and improvement of the socialist society, to the growth of the national wealth, to man's comprehensive advancement, to the turning of socialism into the most attractive force for millions of people all over the world. The theoretical contribution, the creative and business-like approach to the fulfulment of the tasks standing before the Soviet society, the inspiring Leninist sincerity and critical and self-critical attitude of the 27th Congress of the CPSU are a source of strength and serve as an example for the Bulgarian Communists," stated Mr Stanishev.

"We, Bulgarian Communists, firmly support the CPSU's course of deep changes and brave decisions," continued the secretary of the CC of the BCP. The historical need to adopt this course has been determined by the objective needs stemming from the current stage on the development of the Soviet State, of the states of the socialist community. This course if truly international since it provides the only possible basis for the further dynamic interaction between the fraternal states in the economic, scientific and cultural fields, and for the maintaining of their defense potential at the necessary level."

"Bulgaria," said Mr. Stanishev, "warmly and enthusiastically supports the Soviet program for a peaceful space, for a world free of weapons and wars. This is a program which clearly demonstrates that world peace and socialism are an unbreakable entity. We raise our voice in unison with the appeals and actions of the progressive, democratic and antiwar forces -- supporters of peace, detente, disarmament and social progress."

Dwelling upon the state and future of the Bulgaro-Soviet relations, Mr. Dimitur Stanishev said that the course of cooperation in all fields between the BCP and the CPSU, between Bulgaria and the Soviet Union, is the fruitful and dynamic course of socialist internationalism, which will be pursued unflaggingly in the future. This has been confirmed by Mr. Todor Zhivkov's address to the congress which stated that our whole life -- party, state, public, and even private -- confirms this fact," stated Mr. Stanishev.

The speaker went on to brief the audience with the preparatory work for the 13th Congress of the BCP.

The secretary of the CC of the BCP dwelled upon Bulgaria's active and peaceloving foreign policy, on the country's efforts directed at turning the Balkans into a zone free of nuclear and chemical weapons, a zone of good neighbourly relations, understanding and peaceful cooperation. He emphasized upon Bulgaria's desire to maintain cooperation and friendship with the neighbouring countries, based on the principle of noninterference in other countries' internal affairs. Mr. Dimitur Stanishev stated that Bulgaria is ready to talk with Turkey at all levels with the aim of improving the relations and developing the cooperation between the two countries. However, Bulgaria refutes all fabricated problems, which are related to her internal affairs.

Filipov, Delegation Visit Georgia

AU042109 Sofia Domestic Service in Bulgarian 2000 GMT 4 Mar 86

[Text] The delegation of the BCP which is visiting Georgia and which includes Grisha Filipov, Dimitur Stanishev and Ivan Panev, laid a wreath at the Lenin monument in the center of Tblisi.

Following this, a talk was held at the council of ministers headquarters of the republic. Dmitriy Kartvelishvili, chairman of the government, briefed the Bulgarian guests on economic development, on the development of agriculture, science, and culture in Georgia, as well as on the work of the Georgian working people in implementing the tasks assigned by the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th congress.

Comrade Grisha Filipov discussed preparations for the 13th BCP Congress and dealt in particular with the qualitatively new stage of development in Bulgarian-Soviet relations, namely on the establishment of joint production trusts.

The Bulgarian delegation visited the Elva scientific-production trust for electronic computers and calculating machines. The members of the Bulgarian delegation held a very useful and meaningful talk with the members of the Georgian Academy of Sciences Presidium. In the Komsomol city near Tblisi, the Bulgarian guests visited the Republic Center of Figurative Arts, and Comrade Grisha Filipov planted a tree in the lane of guests of honor.

The BCP delegation visited the Palace of Festive Ceremonies and the national museum of Georgia, as well. The delegation returned to Moscow tonight.

USSR DEPUTY MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY

AU272208 Sofia NARODNA MLADEZH in Bulgarian 25 Feb 86 p 3

[Interview with Leonid Ilichev, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, by unnamed NARODNA MLADEZH correspondent; date and place not given]

[Text] "I am glad to take advantage of this opportunity which enables me to address the younger generation in fraternal Bulgaria from the pages of your newspaper. You people here manifest a constant interest in the life of people in our country, in its Communist Party, and in the Soviet state. It is with satisfaction that I note the interested approach of Bulgarian youths to international problems and I consider this a confirmation of the active stand of those who are the militant reserves of the fighters of communism, for a world without wars, for clear skies over our earth."

This is the opening statement with which Leonid Fedorovich Ilichev, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, delegate to the 27th CPSU Congress, began his interview with our correspondent in the USSR.

[NARODNA MLADEZH]: Can you describe the characteristic features of the new edition of the draft CPSU Program as regards USSR foreign policy at the present stage of development?

[Ilichev]: The CPSU Program which is now still valid was adopted at the 22d CPSU Congress in 1961, as you know. The quarter of a century elapsed since then has confirmed the correctness of this program's fundamental, political postulates, as well as our party's and the Soviet state's general line on the international scene. Naturally the basic postulates laid down in the aforementioned program remain valid and are preserved in the new draft program, which has been submitted to the CPSU congress. This is why the first characteristic feature of this program can be described as a continuation of the existing CPSU Program.

However, time goes on. Within the last 25 years, and I presume that the majority of your readers are of the same age, or approximately 25 years old, the colonial empires collapsed and dozens of new states were established on their ruins. An approximate military-strategic balance was achieved between the USSR and the United States. The world has changed and it is fully understandable that the time has come to analyze the experience accumulated and the new phenomena of international life on a scientific basis, in order to be able to determine the chief trends and goals of our policy under current historical conditions in a more precise and specific manner. The analysis of the new, contemporary world and of its development from a Marxist-Leninist point of view, the critical evaluation of certain former postulates, which are outdated, and the innovative approach to the crucial problems and to the strategy and tactics of our country on the world scene can be defined as the second characteristic trait in the foreign policy of the CPSU and of the Soviet state.

The draft program is characterized by another trait as well. The Central Committee commission that worked on the text of the new draft program based itself on the Leninist instructions stating that the CPSU Program must express our basic views, based on principle, and our long-term political goals, that this program must be an unmistakable and accurate presentation of the goals for which the CPSU is struggling and which it will struggle for within the foreseeable future. This is precisely why the draft CPSU Program is based on a strictly realistic approach that precludes going into unnecessary details, which are likely to tie our hands and to prevent creative, innovative actions.

In other words, the chief emphasis is placed on the determination of the strategic trends in the party's work and on its objective evaluation of its own opportunities and future prospects. It is particularly important to stress that in saying all this, we must add that the foreign policy portion of the draft program (and this is quite understandable) is aimed at a peaceful manner of settling the historical controversy between the two opposed social systems into which the contemporary world is divided. We are convinced that socialism is capable of and obliged to prove its advantages by the strength of the creative example and not by the force of weapons.

[NARODNA MLADEZH]: The new draft CPSU Program stresses the enhanced role of the developing countries in the worldwide political and economic sphere as a characteristic feature of our present-day epoch. Now can you describe the importance of the developing countries in the joint struggle for peace and international security?

[Ilichev]: The forceful mass presence of the young states on the world scene is a qualitative leap in the system of international relations, which made this system a truly worldwide system for the first time in history. The world's political structure changed as a result of this. The participation of all peoples from the East in the settlement of the fate of all mankind, was predicted by Vladimir Ilich Lenin, became true. If we consider the world of the developing countries and the trends that are prevailing in this world, in their entirety, the answer to your question can be quite definite: The newly liberated countries, as some of the most political forces of the world, are indubitably playing a positive role in the joint struggle for peace and for international security. In other words, in the deployment of world forces, these countries belong to the antiwar and anti-imperialist forces.

Out party, the CPSU, has always devoted great attention to the consolidation of the relations between the Soviet Union and the newly liberated countries. The new draft CPSU Program devotes an entire section to this question, in which the basic trends of further development of these relations are mapped out.

The alliance of the forces of social progress and of national liberation guarantees a better future for mankind. It is on this basis that the Soviet Union will further develop its relations with the newly liberated countries.

Going back to the thesis that the solution of numerous international problems also depends upon the newly liberated countries, I would like to say that this is not only due to their number, according to which they represent more than -thirds of the states existing in the world today. It is because in their zone dangerous conflicts are erupting today, conflicts whose influence reaches far beyond their borders, exacerbating the already tense international situation. Without the participation of the newly liberated countries the main problem of our contemporary epoch the problem of war and peace cannot be solved. International security demands today that peace should be ensured not only in Europe, but also in Asia, Africa, and Latin America, as well as on the oceans. To consolidated international security this is the cause of every country and every nation, the cause of broad internationalcoalition of peace-loving forces in our world.

WEINBERGER, UK'S YOUNGER DISCUSS 'STAR WARS' TIES

[Text] London March 18 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Pakhomov reports: Casper Weinberger, U.S. secretary of defence, who is on a tour of Western Europe on the eve of opening in the FRG of a scheduled meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group, is currently staying in the British capital. Whitehall has made no official statements on the visit, yet the TASS correspondent was told at the British Defence Department that Caspar Weinberger has met with his British counterpart George Younger to discuss a number of military problems, including arms control and Britian's participation in the research programmes within the framework of the U.S. "Strategic Defence Initiative."

In the opinion of local observers, the discussion of the question of "arms control" actually centred on coordinating Washington's and London's efforts to block any progress on this field. The arrival of the American hawk to the banks of the Thames has coincied with the confirmation by the British Government of its refusal to give a positive response to the Soviet peace initiatives directed at curbing the weapons race and eliminating nuclear weapons stage-by-stage.

The Tory Cabinet's servile following of Washington's lead, its obstructionist policy have been strongly criticised by Denis Healey, foreign secretary in the Labour Party "shadow cabinet." Speaking in a BBC television interview, he accused the government of surrender and of invariably yielding to American pressure in its wish to accommodate itself to the Reagan administration's stand.

Meanwhile, Denis Healey stressed, even many American experts, who earlier took part in talks with the Soviet Union, consider this stand to be totally "unrealistic." The Labour figure has strongly condemned the support by the British Government of the refusal of the USA to join in the Soviet moratorium on nuclear explosions.

As far as the discussion of the "star wars" plans at the meeting of Caspar Weinberger with George Younger is concerned, the talks, in the opinion of observers, centred on a further broadening of cooperation of the USA and Britain in implementing that programme directed at militarizing outer space.

REPORTAGE ON FRENCH POLITICAL SITUATION

Chirac Asked To Form Government

LD181959 Moscow TASS in English 1944 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Paris March 18 TASS -- French President Francois Mitterrand today offered the post of prime minister to Jacques Chirac, the leader of the Rally for the Republic Party, and suggested that he should form a new government of the country. Representatives of the right-wing parties that earned the majority of votes at the parliamentary elections held last Sunday, are expected to enter Elysee Palace, Jacques Chirac will shortly give an answer to the president's proposal.

Parties Support Appointment

LD190555 Moscow TASS in English 0550 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Paris March 19 TASS -- The Rassemblement pour la Republique (RPR) and the Union for French Democracy have accepted the proposal of Francois Mitterrand, president of France, to appoint RPR President Jacques Chirac to the post of prime minister.

This has been stated by Jean Lecanuet, leader of the Union for French Democracy, who took part in a meeting of leaders of right-wing parties in Paris.

The meeting was convened for discussing the decision taken by the president on Tuesday to suggest to Jacques Chirac that he form a government. Today the RPR president will start consultations with French politicians with the aim to form a new Cabinet which will include representatives of right-wing parties.

IZVESTIYA Comments

PM181159 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 18 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Report by unnamed "own correspondent": "France; Results of Elections"]

[Text] Paris -- Elections to the National Assembly have been held in France. According to preliminary figures, the two biggest right-wing parties -- the Rally for the Republic [RPR] and the Union for French Democracy [UDF] -- have collected about 42 percent of the votes and, together with the other right-wing groups, will have 291 seats, while an absolute majority is 289 seats. In the previous National Assembly, the RPR and the UDF had 86 and 62 deputies respectively. The Socialist Party together with the Left Radical Movement has received approximately 33 percent of the votes and has 216 deputies (previously it had 285). About 10 percent of the voters voted for the Communist Party [PCF] and it will be represented by 35 deputies. For the first time, representatives of the extreme right-wing "National Front" -- 32 deputies -- will sit beneath the vaults of the Bourbon Palace.

People here are drawing attention to the fact that the election campaign and the elections themselves left many French people indifferent. Nearly one voter out of every four (about 23 percent) abstained. In accordance with the electoral reform carried out by the authorities, for the first time during the Fifth Republic, the elections were held in one round under the proportional representation system, not the majority system. The number of seats in the new National Assembly has increased from 491 to 577. Elections to the regional councils were held at the same time.

The results of the elections reaffirmed that the policy of the Socialist government and above all their inability to solve the unemployment problem has caused dissatisfaction among the electorate. This has led to the point where the right-wing forces will henceforth have the majority in the National Assembly. But counter to expectations they obtained only a slight majority -- just two seats -- and many of them do not conceal their disappointment at the election results.

A statement from the PCF Politburo stresses that the rightists' victory will have adverse consequences for the working people. The "stringency" policy which the Socialist government pursued, the statement notes, has weakened France, increased unemployment and social inequality, and thus opened the door to the rightists.

The country's democratic public and politicians of various orientations are expressing alarm and concern at the fact that representatives of the "National Front" have joined the National Assembly. Scarcely had the results been made known before the National Front's leader, Jean-Marie Le Pen, hastened to announce that the extremists intended to take part in the country's administration.

Since the elections, for the first time in the entire history of the Fifth Republic a situation has formed in France whereby the president (a Socialist) and the parliamentary majority belong to different political camps. This, commentators stress, raises the complex problem of their "cohabitation."

The president has to appoint a prime minister (from the right-wing majority) who must form a government. Observers note that the slight majority which the rightist possess (not counting the extremists) complicates their task and, conversely, expands the president's opportunities for maneuvering.

FRENCH BUSINESSMEN END VISIT TO MOSCOW

[Text] Moscow March 14 TASS -- A delegation of French businessmen ended a visit here today, which marked a noticeable step forward in broadening and strengthening commercial contacts between the USSR and France. The trip was arranged by the Franco-Soviet Chamber of Commerce.

During their nearly week-long visit the members of the delegation, including 80 representatives of 50 French firms and banks, were able to familiarize themselves with prospects for the Soviet Union's economic development as well as its import needs and export possibilities and make business contacts with various Soviet organizations and departments such as the chamber of commerce and industry of the USSR, the Ministry of Foreign Trade, foreign trade associations, the State Committee of the USSR for Science and Technology, and Moscow city organizations.

Jean Fevrier, secretary-general of the Franco-Soviet Chamber of Commerce who led the delegation, said before flying back home that such trips enable French firms to have a better knowledge of the Soviet market. High-level contacts and diverse meetings also help French companies acquaint a broad circle of Soviet specialists with their products. This is especially important to small and medium-size firms whose financial possibilities to study external markets are limited, Fevrier said. He added that two-thirds of the delegation members represented precisely such firms.

Seeking to extend and consolidate relations between the two countries, the Franco-Soviet chamber, its secretary-general said has been stepping up its promotional and informative work in different areas of France. It has also started organizing symposiums by French firms in the USSR. Fevrier said he estimates that more than 60 symposiums and other Soviet-French expert meetings will be held in the Soviet Union this year, where French companies will be able to demonstrate their products and technical expertise.

ARISTOV RECEIVES AUSTRIAN ECONOMY CHIEF

PM141019 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 14 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Text] USSR Foreign Trade Minister B.I. Aristov received R. Sallinger, president of the Austrian federal chamber of the economy, on 13 March. During the meeting the sides exchanged opinions on questions of Soviet-Austrian economic cooperation in connection with the exhibition of "Modern Austrian Industrial Technology" to be held in Moscow in April of this year. H. Grubmayer, Austrian ambassador to the USSR, took part in the talk.

ARD CORRESPONDENT 'RUNS INTO' YURCHENKO IN MOSCOW

LD141847 Hamburg DPA in German 1722 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 14 Mar (DPA) -- Vitaliy Yurchenko, the double defector and KGB officer (49) rumored dead in the West, is in fact alive. He surfaced surprisingly in the bar of the Press Center at the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow today (Friday). The allegedly dead man acknowledged that he is working with the security service for foreign representatives of the USSR. The entrance to the Press Center, which is accommodated in the building of the semi-official NOVOSTI Press Agency, responsible for foreign propaganda, is guarded by uniformed police and can as a rule only be passed with a special card.

PRAVDA, the party organ, had on Tuesday denied the version circulating in the West that Yurchenko had been executed. The newspaper announced that Yurchenko, who "had been mistreated for 93 days in the CIA's torture chambers" is now working on his "memoirs."

Lutz Lehmann, the Moscow ARD correspondent ran into Yurchenko by chance today (Friday) in the bar of the Press Center. He readily allowed himself to be interviewed in front of the camera. When asked whether he was really Yurchenko, he said: "Yes, I am Vitaliy Yurchenko. Should I show you my passport?"

Yurchenko said that he had spent a few weeks in hospital for treatment after his press conference in Moscow last November. "Then I was recuperating, and now I'm working in my office again and am living here in Moscow." As to whether he had had any difficulties with the Soviet authorities, Yurchenko said: "No, I have none, had none, and shall have none."

He was, he said, living with his family in Moscow and also goes to the theater there. His work in the USSR Foreign Ministry is "the protection of our representatives abroad." He is working at his old place of employment. There, he is busy "applying" his experiences "for the better protection of our representatives abroad."

Yurchenko answered the question as to whether he would travel abroad again by saying that he "would do this from time to time." He would not be visiting the United States again. On the PRAVDA announcement that he is working on his memoirs, Yurchenko said: "I am making a few notes so that I can recall my story." But he does not know whether a book or some articles will come of it. "I am not a reporter or an author...I do not need the publicity."

On Western reports of his exection, Yurchenko said: "I am here, alive, and this is the best confirmation that I am alive."

KOMAROV, FINLAND'S LAINE DISCUSS JOINT TRADE

SUPREME SOVIET DELEGATION ARRIVES IN CAIRO

LD181845 Moscow TASS in English 1831 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo March 18 TASS -- A delegation of the USSR Supreme Soviet, headed by Vice President of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet Pavel Gilashvili, arrived here from Moscow on an official visit today. The delegation includes deputies of the USSR Supreme Soviet Sergey Losev, Anatoliy Mayorets, Nikolay Popov and Dzhanikul Yusupov.

At Cairo Airport the Soviet guests were welcomed by the speaker of the People's Assembly of the Arab Republic of Egypt Rif'at al-Mahjub, chairman of the People's Assembly's Foreign Affairs Commission Muhammad 'Abdal-allah and other officials.

AL-QADHDHAFI CITED AT 'ANTI-IMPERIALIST' FORUM

[Text] Tripoli, 17 Mar -- The conference of anti-imperialist forces has begun work in the Libyan capital. Taking part are about 300 delegations from various countries, including representatives of the Soviet Committee for Solidarity with the Countries of Asia and Africa.

M. al-Qadhdhafi, leader of the Libyan revolution, who addressed the opening of the conference, expressed concern at the activation of the reactionary forces struggling against the planet's freedom-loving peoples. In this connection, he called for the consolidation of joint efforts in countering the aggressive plots of U.S. imperialism, racism, and Zionism.

M. al-Qadhdhafi denounced the U.S. Administration for steering a course of "neoglobalism." The United States, he said, is terrorizing the peoples by its nuclear missiles and military fleets and has created a ramified network of military bases throughout the world. The arsenal of U.S. imperialism's weapons includes aggression and the seizure of other people's lands, economic subversion, and the physical elimination of politicians inconvenient to Washington. Essentially, al-Qadhdhafi pointed out that the United States, which uses its stooges and allies as an instrument for achieving hegemonist goals, stands behind all criminal actions of the present day on a state scale, be they Zionists' crimes against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, the genocide practiced by the Pretoria racists against the black majority in South Africa, or the bloody reprisals wrought by the fascist regimes of Latin America against the freedom fighters.

IRAQI DELEGATION MEETS COMMITTEE MEMBER

TASS VIEWS WISNER NEWS CONFERENCE IN CAPE TOWN

LD151014 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1225 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, 14 Mar, (TASS) -- "Good relations" are being strengthened between the United States and the RSA, Frank Wisner, deputy assistant secretary of state for African affairs, has stressed. At a news conference in Cape Town, he told journalists that during "fruitful" talks with South African Foreign Minister R. Botha they discussed the RSA's new "proposals" for settling the Namibian problem.

Washington is trying to impose on Africa these "proposals," which make the withdrawal of Cuban internationalists from Angola a condition for holding a general election in Namibia. The aim of these far from new proposals is to weaken People's Angola in the face of South African intervention and to remove SWAPO from the settlement process. The State Department envoy's tour of southern Africa, following the recent U.S. visit by Savimbi, ringleader of the anti-Angolan terrorist group UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola], demonstrates that Washington has not given up its policy of "quiet diplomacy" combined with strong pressure on the "Frontline States." The administration will use all means to "change the political orientation" of the countries of southern Africa, Secretary of State Shultz said at congressional hearings.

Frank Wisner's task is also to present in a good light the administration's African policy, which has come under fire in the past days in Congress. U.S. military aid to the UNITA group will draw the United States into an armed conflict in Angola, warned Richard Moose, former U.S. assistant secretary of state for African affairs, speaking on Thursday at the congressional hearings. He stated that the RSA authorities are seeking direct U.S. armed intervention in Angola in order to release forces for the suppression of unrest among the African majority inside the RSA.

PRAVDA DERIDES S. AFRICAN 'MANEUVER' ON NAMBIA

PM171035 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 16 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Article by Igor Tarutin: "Empty Gesture"]

[Text] P. Botha, president of the Republican of South Africa (RSA), recently addressed parliament with proposals on the Namibian problem. He expressed "readiness" to set about fulfilling the UN resolutions on granting Namibia its independence effective 1 August this year.

But having begun on a good note, the chief of the racist regime quickly ended on a bad one. He once again repeated Pretoria's long-standing demand: that the Cuban contingent be withdrawn from Angola before RSA troops leave Namibian territory.

It is a question of the so-called "linkage" between two issues that have nothing in common with one another. An attempt is being made to artificially make the liberation of Namibia -- which the RSA is suppressing contrary to all international norms -- conditional on the Angolan people's renunciation of their legitimate right to turn to their friends for assistance in protecting their independnece and sovereignty, which is fully in accordance with the UN Charter.

This old RSA trick has already once been rejected by Angola, by the South West Africa People's Organization [SWAPO] (the organization fighting for Namibian independence), and all the "Frontline" States.

It has been condemned by the OAU and the United Nations. However, as we can see, Pretoria is once again putting forward its absurd demand.

Why did the racists need to make a gesture with "new" proposals? To all appearances, several aims are being pursued at the same time. One of these aims is to pressure Angola. This is being done at the very moment when the United States has switched to direct intervention in Angolan international affairs, increasing aid to the anti-government UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] terrorist group. It is striving to destabilize the country from within through the counter-revolutionaries and to gain concessions from it, notably on the Namibian question. And Pretoria is bringing parallel pressure to bear from outside, speculating on Angolans' interest in eliminating the hotbed of tension on their borders.

At the same time, aware of the unacceptability of this "linkage," the racists are marking time in order to strengthen the positions of their proteges from among the "internal" puppet Namibian parties. A "transitional government" made up of these parties has already been knocked together in the hope of transferring power to it and bypassing the United Nations.

They try to conceal these behind-the-scenes intrigues by putting forward various "initiatives" such as the present one. The aim of this "marking time" is to create the appearance that the RSA is also supposedly striving for a settlement and offering various proposals to that end, that it is only a question of Angola's and SWAPO's refusal to compromise. Imperialist propaganda, incidentally, gladly clutches at this straw. A clear shortage of arguments is now apparent in the West in favor of continuing cooperation with the apartheid regime, which has unleashed cruel terror within the country and engages in piracy abroad. Even now some have begun depicting Botha's proposal as a "positive step." But maneuvers of this kind will delude no one.

CPSU, TANZANIAN PARTY AGREE ON COOPERATION

[Text] Dar es Salaam, 18 Mar (TASS) -- A plan for party ties between the CPSU and the Revolutionary Party of Tanzania (CCM) for 1986-87 was signed in the capital of Tanzania today. It provides in particular for an exchange of delegations and information on party work experience.

Speaking at the signing ceremony, F.P. Muro, deputy head of the International Department of the CCM Secretariat, highly praised relations between the CPSU and CCM. He pointed to the community of views between the two parties on many international problems, including the question of offering help to the peoples of southern Africa and Namibia in their liberation struggle against the inhuman apartheid regime.

F.P. Muro declared CCM support for Soviet peace initiatives aimed at curbing the arms race and reducing and eliminating nuclear arsenals. He expressed his conviction that the signing of the document on interparty cooperation would serve the cause of strengthening friendly ties between the Soviet Union and Tanzania.

REPORTAGE ON REACTION TO U.S. NICARAGUAN POLICY

Reagan's Address Criticized

LD170958 Moscow TASS in English 0939 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 17 TASS -- The Government of Nicaragua has stated a protest against the accusations voiced by President Reagan in a U.S. national television appearance. In the statement circulated here by the embassy of Nicaragua in the United States, the assertions by the head of the Washington administration are qualified as "instigatory rhetoric based on false premises and on overt distortion of facts."

Contrary to the President's assertions, the statement points out, the expansion of the aid to the "contras" runs counter to the efforts which are being made by the Contadora Group with a view to avoiding war through a peaceful dialogue and talks. To suppose something else is to try to deceive the Congress and the U.S. public opinion in order to win support for the policy of military interference in Nicaragua. The statement of the Nicaraguan Government points out the need for a "serious and responsible" approach by the United States to the problems of Central America.

Ortega Ready for Talks

[Text] Stockholm March 17 TASS -- Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega had denounced U.S. criminal policy against his country. Speaking at a news conference in the Swedish capital where he attended the funeral of Olof Palme, he said the U.S. Administration's striving to overthrow the Sandinist government is "disquieting."

Ortega said that by executing an aggressive policy against Nicaragua, a policy protested the world over, the United States is flagrantly violating human rights. The Nicaraguan Government, he said, will never sit down at the negotiating table with bandits from counter-revolutionary gangs.

Ortega expressed his government's readiness to normalize relations with Honduras. He called, in particular, for setting up a special international commission under the Contadora Group and under the support group, which would monitor the situation on the Nicaraguan-Honduran border. The Nicaraguan president also said he is ready to hold talks with Ronald Reagan on a political settlement in Central America.

Ramirez Condemns 'Diktat'

LD151129 Moscow TASS in English 0827 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] Managua March 15 TASS -- The United States has absolutely no right to meddle in Nicaragua's home affairs, said Vice-President Sergei Ramirez of Nicaragua. Addressing a press conference in Managua after a meeting with U.S. congressmen from the Republican Party, he pointed out that the Nicaraguan Government was ready for peace talks with the USA to end bloodshed and normalise bilateral relations but will never subordinate to its high-handed diktat and will not agree to "dialogue" with Somozista mercenary gangs financed by the CIA. The Nicaraguan Government, Ramirez said, has notified the U.S. delegation that it considers the current debate at the U.S. Congress on new appropriations running into many millions for the Somozistas to be an unlawful and immoral act in conflict with the basic norms of international law.

Tinoco Attacks 'Terrorist' Funds

[Text] Managua March 15 TASS -- The consent of the U.S. Congress to grant 100 million dollars to the Somozista terrorists would involve a fresh aggravation of tensions in Central America and would be detrimental to the efforts of Nicaragua and Costa Rica aimed at ensuring security along the common border, said Victor Tinoco, first deputy foreign minister of the Republic. Speaking to newsmen, he pointed to the great significance of the agreement reached between the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica to set up an international commission for control and observance in the border zone, which has become an arena of provocative sorties by the American mercenaries. While the Latin American countries are proceeding the path of dialogue and strengthening peace, the USA is banking on a toughening of its policy of war and aggression in the region, Tinoco stressed.

FMLN LEADER NIDIA DIAZ ON SITUATION IN EL SALVADOR

PM141311 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 8 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Statement by Nidia Diaz, member of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front [FMLN] leadership, in response to questions by IZVESTIYA correspondent A. Kamorin in Moscow; date not given, first paragraph is editorial introduction]

[Text] During the days of the 27th CPSU Congress, Nidia Diaz, member of the [El Salvador] FMLN leadership, was in Moscow. IZVESTIYA correspondent A. Kamorin met with her and asked her to talk about the Salvadoran patriots' struggle.

[Diaz] The 27th CPSU Congress undoubtedly marked a qualitatively new stage in Soviet society's development along the path of communism. The humanism of the plans put forward at the congress for the further improvement of socialism and the Soviet Union's adherence, again confirmed during these days, to the ideals of peace and social progress will have a great influence on strengthening the forces of democracy and national liberation.

The proposition put forward in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report on the fair, political settlement of international crises and regional conflicts is particularly important for us participants in the struggle for El Salvador's independence and democracy. We are consistent supporters of peace, and from the very beginning of our struggle we have sought the opportunity to resolve existing contradictions by political means. However, in 1981 we were forced to go over to armed struggle for our people's rights. At the same time we once again submitted proposals to the ruling regime for a peaceful settlement. That settlement was thwarted by the interference of the United States, which, following its strategic line of the "military solution" of El Salvador's problems, supported a large-scale war against the patriots.

Despite this, our peace proposals remain in force. For us, a political solution in El Salvador means the elimination of our motherland's ignominious dependence on American imperialism; an end to the bloodshed, abductions, and destruction; the restoration and development of our country's economy; and a guarantee that Washington will not interfere in our internal affairs. We are prepared to have a serious dialogue with the Duarte regime on all these questions. As recently as 13 December last year, our revolutionary organization again proposed that a dialogue should begin.

But the authorities, while demagogically declaring their "dedication to dialogue," are following in the wake of a U.S. policy which offers only one solution to the Salvadoran problem -- a military one.

Guided by this doctrine, the United States is increasing the scale of its military aid to the ruling regime. There are U.S. advisers in the country who are not only training goons, but are actually participating in combat actions. Moreover, the White House is prompting Duarte to carry out so-called "social reforms," and the efforts to implement them have demonstrated how utterly futlie they are and have reemphasized the antipeople nature of the puppet regime. The failure of the "reforms" is pushing the authorities onto the path of fiercer repression. In these conditions our peace proposals are the only way to end the Salvadoran people's suffering.

The FMLN bases its activity on a combination of military and political struggle. In the political sphere we are focusing attention on strengthening the unity of the people's mass organizations and all forces advocating independence and democracy. The creation of the National Union of Salvadoran Working People -- the biggest mass trade union organization in the country -- was a considerable step forward on this path.

In conditions of worsening economic crisis, regular violations of human rights, and increasing U.S. interference, working people are seeking to unite their efforts in the struggle to eliminate the causes of the conflict -- poverty, exploitation, and repression.

In the military sphere the plans of Duarte and his masters, aimed at destroying the resistance forces, have totally failed. Today our detachments are operating on 90 percent of national territory. The forces that have been sent to fight us are sustaining considerable losses; On the average, 25 men and officers per day. We have learned to combine daily partisan actions with massive strikes against the goons. District partisan forces and a people's militia have been organized and are being strengthened. On the other hand, there are obvious symptoms of demoralization in the ruling regime's forces: There is a lack of unity in the Army command, and desertion and insubordination are increasing.

Our struggle is a people's struggle. El Salvador is a small country with an area of 21,000 square km and a population density of 234 people per square km. As you will appreciate, it is very difficult to wage covert combat actions in such conditions. But thanks to the people's support and their active involvement in our struggle, we are not only continuing to operate but are constantly increasing the scale of operations. The masses know that the FMLN is struggling for a just cause, and that is the guarantee of ultimate victory.

As for the foreign political conditions in which the battle for El Salvador's freedom is unfolding, it must be noted above all that the USSR's consistent, peace-loving policy, which meets with a broad response on all continents, is increasingly altering the correlation of forces in the world arena in favor of the forces of democracy and progress. Consequently, it is aiding our struggle as well.

We want only one thing -- we want Salvadorans to have the chance to exercise their right to self-determination without foreign interference in our affairs. The United States today is one of the main warring sides in El Salvador. In an attempt to conceal its intervention, Washington claims that Nicaragua is supplying us with weapons. This is a downright lie. We get our weapons in battles, and our warriors are trained at our own training bases. People not only in Central America but all over the world are increasingly realizing this.

CUBA 'DENOUNCES' CALL FOR SOVIET UN STAFF CUT

LD150643 Moscow TASS in English 0637 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] Havana March 15 TASS -- The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Cuba has described the demand of the U.S. Administration on the reduction of the personnel of the U.N. missions of the USSR, the Ukraine and Belorussia in New York as another attempt to bring pressure to bear on the U.N. and restrict the rights of the U.N. member states.

A statement circulated here stresses that those actions constitute a gross violation of the norms of the international law. Their purpose is to subordinate the U.N. to the diktat of Washington. The U.S. Government seeks to hamper the struggle of the countries of the socialist community and all the progressive forces within the U.N. framework for peace, for the termination of the arms race, for the respects for countries' independence, for the social progress of peoples on behalf of the Cuban Government the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Cuba strongly denounces this step.

COMMENTARY ON CHILEAN POLITICAL SITUATION

LD180000 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1954 GMT 17 Mar 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Valeriy Korzin]

[Text] In accordance with the so-called constitution which the Chilean junta compiled in 1980, General Pinochet should remain in power until 1989. But, it would seem that the seat beneath him is beginning to rock much earlier than that. The United States, in the UN Human Rights Committee, has expressed disquiet at the human rights situation in Chile. As they say, there you have it. Quite recently, Pinochet was gushingly praising his cordial relations with Washington. Less than 1 year has passed since he met Motley, the former assistant U.S. secretary of state, and said in Santiago that the West should be grateful to the Chilean dictator for the overthrow of Allende, that the overthrow of the legitimate government led to an improvement in the general atmosphere in Latin America. There you have it. Washington suddenly seems to have seen the light. Well, as you know, it is rare in politics that something happens quickly, even if at first glance something appears unexpected.

The situation is heating up in Chile. Action by the people is taking on an increasingly organized nature. Recently, a member of the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front said that 1986 will be decisive for the consolidation of forces waging the struggle against the regime existing in the country. Naturally, they cannot fail to know this in Washington. There have been reports that in recent months the White House has been trying to influence Pinochet, to make him get down to it and create a semblance of democratic change, even attempting to persuade him to allow the possibility of some kind of legal opposition, of course, acting under control. THE NEW YORK TIMES ran a front page report on this topic. The United States is afraid, it says, that Pinochet's reluctance to permit a non-communist opposition will strengthen the position of the communists. That is what it is all about. Apparently, the head of the junta, having dug in his heels, has ventured to disobey his mentor and patron and has hit below the belt.

I am far from saying that tomorrow, or at some time in the near future, Pinochet will, like Duvalier, be secretly taken out by a U.S. aircraft, thus saving both a bankrupt dictator and the U.S.' interests. But one cannot exclude the idea that the public condemnation of the Chilean junta and its leader that the United States has come out with will turn out to be the first bell for a change of window dressing, much like what happened in Haiti.

Donald Regan,the White House chief of staff, in an interview with NBC tried to dispel any doubts. The U.S. Administration has no intention at all, he said, of destabilizing or overthrowing the Pinochet regime. In fact, too much links Pinochet with Washington. If Regan's assurances correspond to reality, this means that the condemnation of the head of the military-fascist dictatorship in the UN Human Rights Committee was simply the usual propagandistic ruse.

PRAVDA Publishes Speeches by Congress Delegates

Dagestan Party Chief

PM051635 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86
Second Edition p 7

["Speech by Comrade M.Yu. Yusupov, First Secretary of Dagestan CPSU Obkom" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 4 March afternoon session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Comrade delegates! The Communists and all working people of Dagestan, as in the entire country, have given a very enthusiastic welcome to the Political Report of our party's Central Committee, delivered by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The inspiring and mobilizing force of the ideas of this scientifically substantiated program document is of lasting significance for further strengthening our motherland's economic and defense might.

The report by Comrade Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, reflected the theoretical elaborations of the CPSU Central Committee Political Report on fundamental questions of the building of communism.

We wholeheartedly support the set strategic course of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and the party's dynamic work on strengthening order and discipline and reinforcing healthy principles in all spheres of life. The changes occurring since the Central Committee April (1985) Plenum convincingly confirm the correctness of this policy and the vital need for it.

In Dagestan, as throughout the country, the working people's activeness and their understanding of their responsibility for implementing the set tasks are increasing. The volume of industrial production increased 29 percent during the 5-year plan.

But we see that considerably better use could be made of reserves for accelerating socioeconomic development. A demand for the efficient utilization of the potential of each republic and region and for an increase in their contribution to the unified national economic complex has rightly been advanced at the party congress.

From these positions it has to be admitted that certain sectors of the national economy are not working efficiently enough in the republic and are developing at a slow pace. At the recent report-and-election meetings and conferences Communists pointed to poor work in intensifying livestock raising, including fine-wooled sheep raising and also vegetable growing, horticulture, and viticulture. The oblast party organization is disposed to resolutely rectify the state of affairs.

For this, more efficient use must be made of irrigated land, of which there are 300,000 hectares in the republic. But we are still not getting the proper return. Our efforts will be aimed at modernizing old reclamation systems and improving their standard of operation. At the same time, it is necessary to accelerate the opening up of the land stock for reclamation in the arid steppe zone of our region. In our view, the proposals being advanced here to commission additional water sources deserve greater attention.

But it is unforgivable to delay the implementation of measures to utilize the water resources of local rivers, including the Terek and the Samur. At present more than one-third of their flow is not being used — enough to irrigate an additional 700,000 hectares of land. What is hindering this?

Planning organizations have been working for decades, but the question of regulating the flow of these rivers with regard to the interests of water management and the preservation of the Caspian's unique fish wealth is not being resolved. The USSR Gosplan and the USSR Ministry of Land Reclamation and Water Resources do not devote proper attention to this important national economic problem. We consider this an abnormal situation which must be rectified.

We support the proposal set forth in the draft Basic Guidelines for the efficient development of the fuel and energy complex in conjunction with the active implementation of an energy-saving policy. The planned accelerated construction of nuclear stations is perfectly substantiated. At the same time, in regions that have been opened up economically, in our opinion, fuller use must be made of the existing hydroelectric power resources — a considerable reserve for obtaining cheap energy and comprehensively resolving the national economy's problems. This is also important because high efficiency is achieved in nuclear and thermal stations when they are used in combined operation with hydroelectric stations.

Such stations include the recently constructed Chirkeyskaya GES with a capacity of 1 million kilowatts and the Miatli GES, commissioned on the eve of the 27th CPSU Congress, which together will make it possible to save more than 1 million tons of ideal fuel per year.

The republic possesses great water power resources. Hydroelectric stations with a capacity of 5.5 million kilowatts could be constructed on its territory. Their construction would not involve the flooding of useful land. However, the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification has relaxed its attention to the creation of groundwork and the pace of hydroelectric power construction. In our view, the ministry does not always detect in time or anticipate trends leading to a deficit in the energy balance now in our region, now in another, as has happened in the North Caucasus region. We believe that the corresponding conclusions must be drawn from this.

The high level of research into energy resources, many years of cooperation with specialists in Leningrad, Kharkov, and Zaporozhye, and the existence of a skilled collective of thousands of hydroelectric construction workers make it possible to commission the first unit of the Irganay GES in the current 5-year plan and to create the conditions for commissioning two more stations in the next 5-year plan. This is a realistic task, and we will work actively in this direction.

The utilization of the existing free labor resources is a great reserve for increasing the republic's contribution to the national economic complex. This problem is particularly acute in the mountains, where approximately one-third of the republic's population lives. We must be more active in inducing people to stay there, despite the great costs and complexities, constructing roads and sociocultural establishments, developing mountain-valley and terrace farming, and making more efficient use of mountain pastures.

The question of people's employment in the mountains and in small cities can be resolved by creating small enterprises and branches to manufacture output that is not materials-intensive. Some experience has already been accumulated in this regard. Some ministries have already joined in this work; but far from all are doing so. Certain ministries do not always move to resolve territorial tasks and questions of social development.

We fully share the criticism voiced at the congress that questions are not resolved properly in many components of our apparatus — thus proposals dictated by state interests are not supported — and that there is still a lot of departmentalism. We hope that the USSR Council of Ministers will call ministers more strictly to account and enhance their responsibility for the prompt resolution of questions raised locally.

Unemployment among people is also a breeding ground for negative phenomena. There are many people in the republic with a consumer mentality, inclined to moneygrubbing, parasitism, and embezzlement. Vigorous measures are now being taken and will be taken to combat this evil.

Difficult work still lies ahead. We must overcome the unscrupulousness and connivance of some of our cadres and create everywhere an atmosphere of universal implacability toward persons living on unearned income.

But this question also arises: Why in our society, which has proclaimed the principles of honesty and social justice, do we not find ways to openly control such persons' sources of income? We think that legislative measures must be formulated to control income. (applause)

Undoubtedly, we above all bear the responsibility for resolving the problems which have piled up. The oblast party organization will take measures to restructure cadres' awareness and to prevent parochial and parasitic sentiments and will not put off the resolution of acute and urgent tasks.

Comrades! We have perceived with great satisfaction the points in the Political Report to the effect that the party will continue to indefatigably strengthen the fraternity and friendship of our country's peoples and display special sensitivity and circumspection in everything that concerns the development of national relations.

Today our republic is a graphic example of the triumph of Lenin's nationalities policy. It is precisely as a result of development within the framework of the unified Soviet state that our small ethnic groups have entered the orbit of modern civilization. Could this have been achieved under different conditions? No; history knows no such example. The small peoples of Dagestan, as of the entire country, could realize their potential in this way only under socialism.

The leading role in uniting all nations and ethnic groups in the struggle for communism and in their international cohesion belongs to the great Russian people. Dagestanis have felt this at all stages of socialist building. There are approximately 70 nations, nationalities, and ethnic groups living in our mountain region. Literature, newspapers, and magazines are published and radio broadcasting is conducted in 11 languages. In Dagestan there are seven national theaters, five VUZes, and a branch of the USSR Academy of Sciences.

The Russian language, which has become the universally recognized means of the peoples' interaction and mutual enrichment, has played an incalculable role in ensuring that broad scope has been created for the development of culture and education and that national languages function at a high level.

We also mention this because bourgeois propaganda is stepping up slanderous attacks on our party's nationalities policy. The ideologues of anticommunism, furiously defending imperialism's class interests, are seeking to divert public opinion away from their own very deep sores and their inability to solve the nationalities question.

Socialism's enemies are gambling on undermining the unity and friendship of the USSR's peoples. But these attempts are in vain. No one will ever succeed in shaking our friendship and fraternity. (applause)

To speak of the existing reality, the whole world is witness to the nationalism, racism, and chauvinism raging in the United States, Northern Ireland, the Republic of South Africa, and other capitalist countries. This is combined with a policy of diktat and of robbing and enslaving other countries and peoples pursued by imperialism.

Under these conditions we believe that the country's press, radio, television, and scientific and creative organizations must expose the anti-Marxist concepts of the nationalities question in a better-reasoned and more assertive manner and show more convincingly the practice of national relations in the USSR. Our very reality is a worthy reproof to falsifiers of various kinds. Dagestan today is proving to be a real discovery for many representatives from abroad.

The international and patriotic education of the population, particularly young people, is assuming great significance under present conditions. However, we do not always take account of the fact that inter-nation relations are manifested in everyday life in relations between specific individuals. Educational work is poorly aimed at the real person, at fostering in him the culture of inter-nation contacts. We have much to do here.

As our party's entire experience shows, the exchange of cadres helps to broaden and deepen friendship and fraternity between nations and ethnic groups. Delegates have already spoken about this. This work is now being enlivened. Unfortunately, at a certain stage there was a reduction in attention to it. This problem is of great significance.

For example, people in every city and rayon of Dagestan remember the influence exerted on the republic's development by teachers, doctors, party and soviet workers, and cadre workers who came from many RSFSR oblasts and other republics. They played an incalculable role in developing the economy and training cadres and in the working people's international education. In turn, many of our national cadres are receiving training in the country's industrial centers. These fruitful traditions must be developed in every possible way.

Under conditions of the acceleration of scientific and technical progress large centers can exert a greater influence on the development of all regions and the training of cadres for them. In our view, not only local party and soviet organs but also the USSR Ministry of Education, the USSR Ministry of Health, the USSR State Committee for Vocational and Technical Education, and other departments must be more active in implementing these principles of the party's cadre policy.

Comrades! We firmly believe that the grand plans outlined by the 27th party congress will be fulfilled. Dagestan's Communists and working people will devote all their strength and knowledge to further strengthening our socialist motherland's might. (applause)

Kokchetav Obkom's Sagdiyev

PM101544 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 Second Edition pp 4, 5

["Speech by Comrade M.R. Sagdiyev (First Secretary of the Kokchetav Kazakh Communist Party Obkom)" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 5 March morning session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Comrade delegates! Kokchetav Oblast's Communists and working people, like all Soviet people, totally and fully approve the propositions and conclusions of the Central Committee Political Report to our party's 27th congress and the CPSU's domestic and foreign policy. At rallies and meetings being held at this time, they declare their adamant determination to implement the beloved Leninist party's plans for the acceleration of our country's economic and social development and the strengthening of peace and cooperation between peoples.

The lofty patriotic and labor enthusiasm of our people, the businesslike mood, and the discussion — direct, frank, and exacting in the party fashion — that is taking place at our congress provide the best and most accurate assessment of the political line and practical activity of the CPSU Central Committee and its Politburo. (applause)

People are very satisfied with the desired changes that are taking place within the party and the country and with the healthy moral and political climate which is being increasingly established in all spheres of activity. The absolute majority of our people like the measures to step up exactingness and to strengthen organization, discipline, and law and order. We perceive in all this a clear consistency in implementing the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum's decisions, which enjoy the unreserved support of all Soviet people.

Comrades! Vladimir Ilich Lenin said: "We value communism only when it is economically substantiated." Yes, we Marxist-Leninists are well aware that the resolution of the fate of socialism and its communist future is increasingly shifting to the economic sphere. And this is precisely why it is necessary to accelerate our development, introduce more actively the achievements of scientific and technical progress, improve the methods of economic management, and strengthen discipline and organization.

Much has been done, but much more still remains to be done. This was convincingly stated in Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov's report "On the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR in 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000."

The last 5-year plan did not prove easy for us. But even under these conditions, the party organizations strove with the utmost persistence to make fuller use of the production and economic potential and to mobilize labor collectives for the solution of complex and responsible tasks. This made it possible to overfulfill industrial production plans and to increase the production of consumer goods. In the last few years measures to implement the Food Program made it possible to ensure growth in the production of agricultural output and secure positive changes in the countryside's social development.

At the same time, it must be self-critically admitted that the oblast could have done much more in these years, and reserves for economic growth could have been brought into play more quickly. The reasons for the slowdown in acceleration are that we are still timid in overcoming the old work style, have failed to ensure effective party influence on the national economy's most important sectors, are insufficiently exacting toward cadres, and analyze poorly the causes of omissions. We have failed to establish everywhere an atmosphere of lofty responsibility and compliance with state, plan, and executive discipline, and also to fully eliminate inertia and obsolete methods of leadership. As a result, in terms of the 5-year plan results, the kolkhozes and sovkhozes were in debt to the state as regards grain, meat, and milk procurements, and many of them operate at a loss.

We are still utilizing poorly the oblast's rich potential. This is also why we fail to obtain proper returns on the sizable capital investments, particularly in the agro-industrial sector. Also causing concern is the fact that different end results are obtained by rayons and farms with approximately the same conditions and potential.

The oblast party organization clearly perceives the unsolved problems. They were discussed with the utmost directness, keenness, and frankness at the oblast party conference and the 16th Kazakh Communist Party Congress. We are taking measures to remove shortcomings and eliminate "bottlenecks." The emphasis is being placed on ensuring that party organizations, labor collectives, and our cadres work creatively and display initiative and persistence in attaining the set goals.

As Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev noted at the party-economic aktiv conference in Tselinograd, the paramount party concern and key problem for us virgin-landers is the increasing of grain production and procurement in every possible way. Our main task is to produce at least 3.6-4.0 million metric tons a year in the oblast, mainly of strong, durum, and valuable wheat, which will now be cultivated mostly by intensive technologies.

Considerable opportunities exist to increase grain production in the oblast. This is indicated by the experience of many kolkhozes and sovkhozes. "Zlatopolskiy" sovkhoz, for example, has for 10 years now harvested each year, under all weather conditions, an average of at least 21 quintals of grain crops per hectare, while the figure for the oblast as a whole is only 11-12 quintals. All this testifies that the reserves for increasing grain production are far from exhausted. Oblast schools of advanced experience have now been set up on the basis of the best farms. A number of other measures are also being taken to scale the projected heights.

However, there is much that is holding us back. There is the low yield of grain crop varieties, the lack of the necessary equipment, the shortage of the necessary fertilizers, and imperfect forms of labor organization and pay.

Last year we widely employed intensive technologies in wheat cultivation, but, to our chagrin, failed to obtain the planned yield. This can be attributed to several factors.

First, intensive techniques for grain crop cultivation applicable to our zone's soil and weather conditions have still not been fully optimized.

Second, the leaders of fertilizer-producing ministries do not heed the voice of the virgin-landers and fail to supply the full range of fertilizers. Yet the application of compound fertilizers containing a high percentage of nitrogen instead of phosphoric fertilizers results in extended wheat vegetation, a shortfall in yield, and a decline in grain quality.

Third, wild oats are now a real scourge for virgin land crop farming. The farms are experiencing a great shortage of herbicides to combat them.

Fourth, the "Saratovskaya 29" variety has been cultivated for almost 30 years in the virgin lands, but there is still no replacement for this type of wheat. The grain growers expect from the scientists specializing in selection work new earlier-ripening and higher-yield varieties of spring wheat meeting all the requirements of intensive techniques.

There have been many occasions when our party congresses and CPSU Central Committee plenums have raised the question of the need to have a system of highly productive agricultural machines in the agro-industrial complex. Single years and 5-year periods go by, however, and, as in the past, there is no sign of this extremely necessary highly productive equipment.

Take, for example, the "Step" wide-cut harvesting unit. It is a good harvesting machine. It is impatiently awaited on sovkhozes and kolkhozes. But when will it actually go out into the fields? Its production is being delayed because of unsolved interdepartmental questions and complex multisectorial production sharing, which involves 105 supplier plants under 19 ministries and departments. Even PRAVDA wrote about this recently. The time has come to ask the Ministry of Tractor and Agricultural Machine Building and Minister A.A. Yezhevskiy to finally get things moving and solve the question of creating as soon as possible the capacities necessary for the production of this unit. (applause)

Stockraising remains a highly complex sector. Despite our efforts, no noticeable advances have occurred in the sector's development. The main factor holding back the production of output is the lack of a firm feed base. We have neither early-ripening high-yield corn varieties and hybrids nor sophisticated equipment for feed harvesting and preparation; there is also a shortage of feed storage facilities. We also lack precisely elaborated techniques to resolve comprehensively on a scientific basis and under the conditions of intensification questions concerning reproduction, breeding work, and the struggle against infectious diseases among animals. The situation now is this: There are as many ideas as there are scientists. What a range of systems and methods have been applied in the virgin lands in the last 3 decades! The problem is that they were transplanted from other zones and regions in the country mechanically, without sufficient scientific substantiation, and regardless of local conditions and potential, and therefore failed to survive. Consequently the proper results did not materialize.

The V.I. Lenin All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences and its president, A.A. Nikonov, together with numerous research institutes and their branches, are being slow to restructure their activity in the spirit of the increased tasks. The time has also come for agrarian scientists to switch to intensive methods of work and draw closer to production. (applause)

The comprehensive mechanization of stockraising is severely lagging begind. It must be said openly that throughout its existence the USSR Ministry of Machine Building for Animal Husbandry and Feed Production (L.I. Khitrun) has proposed essentially nothing new in the way of equipment for stock units. The units and machines being produced for feed procurement and processing are imperfectly designed and their productivity is low. But even this equipment is in short supply.

These problems in stockraising need not have been discussed today had the relevant ministries and departments ensured the prompt and conscientious fulfillment of resolutions adopted by the CPSU Central Committee and USSR Council of Ministers for the development of this vitally important sector.

We are also highly perturbed by the question of retaining cadres in rural areas. It was absolutely correctly said in the Political Report that constant concern for rural working people's working and living conditions offers the most reliable guarantee of all our successes. Much has been done in the process of opening up the virgin lands: new settlements have appeared, railways and asphalt highways have been laid, Central Television can now be received, and mighty power transmission lines have spread.

But this is now insufficient. Demands are growing. The contrast between rural and industrial labor and between rural and urban living conditions remains extremely large. Questions of the remuneration of cultural workers satisfying the spiritual requirements of rural working people also await solution. The USSR Ministry of Culture and the USSR State Committee for Labor and Social Problems must carefully consider why cadres of cultural enlightenment workers cannot be retained in the countryside.

People today want to work and live well and to enjoy skilled medical help, multifaceted development, and active leisure. This, in turn, calls for well-appointed housing, schools, hospitals, preventive medical clinics, and culture and sports complexes.

Powerful construction organizations and a solid industrial base are needed in the countryside in order to resolve the vital problems as soon as possible. At present, construction on kolkhozes and sovkhozes is done basically by relying on farms' own resources. Moreover, it is still inadequately supplied with material resources. Another point: The problem of transportation remains as acute as ever on kolkhozes and sovkhozes. Because of the shortage of automobiles, farm specialists often use trucks for official purposes, and this is extremely uneconomical. This has been repeatedly said at different levels, but there are no changes for the better yet. We place great hopes in the USSR Agro-Industrial Committee as regards the solution of these and many other urgent questions.

Comrades! We are well aware that the party's innovative course must be matched by more efficient methods of organizational and political work. The party obkom, evaluating its activity since the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum, considers that as yet only the first steps have been taken in reorienting the thinking of our leadership cadres and restructuring their work style in the spirit of contemporary demands. The oblast's party organizations, as required by the CPSU Program and the party statutes, currently give exceptionally great importance to the realization of the human factor and the education of Communists and all working people in a spirit of lofty morality, ideological commitment, purity, propriety, and civic activeness.

Comrades! Unanimously approving the draft Basic Guidelines for the economic and social development of the USSR, Communists and all working people in Kokchetav Oblast will work creatively, enthusiastically, and with the utmost effort to implement the historic decisions of the 27th congress and the tasks of the 12th 5-Year Plan. (applause)

["Speech by Comrade G.S. Kostenko (Bricklayer and Installation Worker from Construction and Installation Train No 544 of the 'Tsentrobamstroy' Trust, Amur Oblast, and Holder of the Three Classes of the Order of Labor Glory)" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 4 March afternoon session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Excerpts] Comrade delegates! Here in the Kremlin Palace of Congresses the tasks outlined by the party are particularly clear to me, a working woman. They are understood by all Soviet people and call for vigorous actions from us. There is a sense of Leninist professionalism, principledness, and an acute political thrust in everything. And the tone in this was set by the Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The report's propositions and conclusions leave no one indifferent and are ardently supported and approved. Every day we receive reports about this from Amur Oblast and from the labor collectives of the Baykal-Amur Main Railroad [BAM] named for the Lenin Komsomol.

The great attention which the party Central Committee is devoting to the development of the country's eastern regions is clear from the report by Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

The working people of Amur Oblast and all of BAM's builders greet with great satisfaction the course adopted by the party of ensuring the accelerated development of the Far East, the economic opening up of the BAM zone, and the improvement of working and living conditions for those who are opening up this tough area.

In the distant taiga and under permafrost conditions, transport construction workers together with sponsors from the union republics, Moscow, and Leningrad have laid the steel tracks from Baykal to the Amur a year ahead of schedule. This means that we now have the keys to natural riches.

Twelve years ago, embarking on opening up the new region, we all clearly realized that we had to be patient. And we were. But the time for the entire railroad to be permanently commissioned is approaching. The timetable for the commissioning has been set, but conditions for normal work and life have by no means been created everywhere as yet.

One gets the impression that the Ministry of Transport Construction and the Ministry of Railways are more concerned with laying tracks and give little thought to those who will drive the trains or repair the locomotives and railroad cars.

It is not entirely clear to us today what the labor collectives that have been created will do after the track is constructed. After all, we have come to this region for good. I think that the Basic Guidelines and our plans for the 12th 5-Year Plan should define more clearly the prospects for opening up the BAM zone. People must know specifically what enterprises will be built and where. After all, they plan their lives on that basis. Otherwise, they will leave, which is already happening today.

One other thing: For a long time there was enormous interest in the BAM. This helped us to work well. But since the opening of through train traffic, which was reported nationwide, many people's interest in the construction project has cooled. Some people clearly thought that the work was finished. Leaders of ministries and sponsoring republics, krays, and oblasts have stopped visiting us. Supplies and the allocation of the necessary funds have taken a turn for the worse. Well-known artists and sportsmen visit us less and less regularly. Iosif Kobzon is the only great master who still visits Tynda regularly. (applause) In the last 10 years not one major work has appeared about the "project of the century," which has given the motherland more than 20 heroes of socialist labor.

I want to warmly support Comrade Petrov, the party veteran who spoke here, and express the hope that masters of culture will create more works about people at construction projects such as the BAM. They deserve this just as much as the heroes of the first 5-year plans. (applause)

The opening of train traffic along the BAM is only the start of the opening up of this region. That is why I think that there is no reason for attention to the construction project to be relaxed.

SED's Honecker

PM281523 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Feb 86
Second Edition p 6

["Speech by Comrade Erich Honecker, General Secretary of the SED Central Committee and Chairman of the GDR State Council" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at the 26 February afternoon session of the 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Dear Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev; dear comrades, delegates, esteemed guests: It is with great joy that I convey to you, all Soviet Communists, the whole Soviet people, the fraternal fighting greetings of the SED [Socialist Unity Party of Germany] and of the people of the GDR. (applause)

The 27th CPSU Congress is an outstanding event on the course of the Soviet Communists for the organization of a new, the truly free, human society of socialism, a course which is full of struggle and glory. Looking toward this course are all those in the world who endeavor for a life of the peoples in secure peace and in progress. We, your friends and comrades-in-armes, are at this moment filled with a particularly deep feeling of close and indestructible unity with the party and country of Lenin. (applause)

We are most profoundly impressed by the businesslike mood, creative spirit, and historical optimism of the deliberations of the 27th party congress. With its decisions concerning the systematic, all-sided perfection of socialism and the main direction of the socioeconomic development up to the year 2000, it will set forth a program of action by whose implementation the intellectual and material potential of the Soviet Union will immensely increase. This is of fundamental significance for the well-being of the Soviet people, and at the same time it will decisively affect the course of world affairs.

To express it with the words of our unforgotten comrade, Ernst Thaelmann, the leader of the Communist Party of Germany: The triumphant advance of socialism in the Soviet Union is our strongest argument. (applause)

Audaciously and with determination you, dear Soviet comrades and friends, are working to accelerate the pace in the building of socialism and enhance the economic potential, and to this end you are applying on the broadest possible basis the most modern findings of science and technology. You are posing for yourselves tasks of a new dimensions which even today convey an idea of the profound transformations that will take place in your country in the coming years.

As a result of the development of the creativity and the enery of the Soviet people, the utilization of the advantages and propellant forces of socialism, your party will be able — and the 27th party congress convincingly heralds it — to master this great job. From all our hearts we wish you full success in that respect. (applause)

Since the Red October the Soviet country has experienced an unprecedented upward surge and manifested its historical role as the trailblazer of social progress. It went through the hardest tests of the class struggle and defeated all enemies who tried more than once to halt the advance of and eliminate socialism. People in our contry will never forget the liberation deed performed by the Soviet people under the leadership of its Communist Party through the victory over Hitlerite fascism by which it saved mankind and thus also the German people from perishing in barbarism. (applause)

Guided by the bright ideals of communism, the Soviet people proves its worth as the vanguard in the building of a new world. The course and the results of the 27th CPSU Congress will have a profound impact on the whole socialist community. In view of the tasks which our countries must solve in the new, higher phase of their development, the collective theoretical and practical cooperation and the mutual exchange of experiences are required more than ever before. The 27th CPSU Congress will convey valuable impulses for this even more effective cooperation. Our party will also derive from it important ideas for its future work. Inherent in the unity and cohession of our socialist community is a strength that cannot be replaced by anything else. The SED and the GDR will continue to contribute toward constantly consolidating and enhancing it. (applause)

Dear comrades, in the name of our delegation I would like to state that we fully support the Peace Program outlined here by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. It has deeply impressed the planet's people because it is evidence of the Soviet Union's love of peace, its constructive will, and its new approach to tackling the most burning global problem of the present time — averting a nuclear catastrophe both in space and on earth — and to translating concrete disarmament measures into reality. This comprehensive program aimed at liberating the world from all nuclear weapons up to the year 2000 offers a historical chance that must not remain unused. Never since Lenin's Decree on Peace was international approval of peace policy emanating from socialism so great as in connection with these significant proposals.

The people do not want a "star wars" project as pursued by the United States with which it increases the risk of man's self-destruction; they want lastingly secured peace. The people do not want to be tortured by the fear that the amassment of always new weapon systems will lead some day to a catastrophe. They want reliable guarantees for a peaceful prospect of the current and future generations. This pertains especially to Europe where two world wars in this century have left their bloody and devastating imprints on the life of many peoples.

At the side of the Soviet Union and the other brotherly states, the GDR will persistently use all its strength to preserve peace in the cosmos and on earth. This aim can be achieved only on the basis of equality and identical security for all. The people who are guided by reason and realism must unite and act together, disregarding existing differences. This corresponds to the profound truth stated by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. He said that mankind must not jointly be destroyed in the fire of nuclear war, it must live together, and the states with different social systems must learn to get along well.

I can state for the GDR in full responsibility that war will never again emanate from German soil, from GDR territory. The first socialist workers and farmers state will at any time live up to its task as a cornerstone of socialism and peace in Europe. (applause)

Dear comrades, in our country life is fully devoted to preparations for the 11th SED Congress that will take place in April this year. For months already a broad discussion has been going on among the people in the course of which all important foreign and domestic policy problems have been discussed and the confidence between the party and the masses has constantly deepened. A competition movement full of initiative creates positive prerequisites for the decisions of our party congress on the further forming of the developed socialist society.

The current 5-year period again demands a dynamic increase in economic achievement which can be guaranteed only through comprehensive intensification of production. We envisage from 1986 to 1990 to achieve a gross national product of about M1.3 trillion, with 90 percent of the increase to be achieved through increased labor productivity. The annual GNP increase rates will be 4-5 percent. In this way it will be possible to demonstrate the unity of economic and social policies and to increase the material and cultural living standard of the people according to plan. Connected with it are great efforts to strengthen the material-technical basis, the comprehensive opening up of domestic raw materials and their higher refinement in the development and production of the newest production equipment and the modernization of basic assets.

We pay great attention to the further shaping of our socialist educational system. In our views the close connection of the scientific-technological revolution with the advantages of socialism is a decisive factor. The most important thing is the broad utilization of the most modern technology, with high technology — for example, microelectronics — ranking first. We note with pleasure that it is in particular the young people who make themselves increasingly familiar with this test field.

We always proceed on the assumption that man proves to be the decisivae production force when the requirements of science and technology grow. Along with the workers' performance their working and living conditions will also improve. Our people's-owned combines where science and production are directly interrelated constitute the main force for mastering the scientific-technological revolution. They cooperate most closely with the institutions of the GDR Academy of Sciences, universities, and colleges on the basis of financial autonomy.

In this way the country's intellectual potential is focused on the implementation of the party's economic strategy. In the most important areas we have to hold existing and gain new international top positions.

In our view the long-term program of the development of cooperation between the GDR and the USSR in the fields of science, technology, and production until the year 2,000 is a decisive basis for the continuation of the unity of economic and social policy in the second half of the eighties. The high goals make the close connection of the intellectual and material potential absolutely necessary.

Our cooperation with the other fraternal socialists countries has been contractually agreed until the turn of the millenium. We always consider our cooperation as being an essential contribution to increasing the strength of the whole socialist community and to further strengthening the material basis of its peace policy. (applause)

Dear comrades, inspired by the ideals of socialism and communism, of peace and the peoples' happiness, together we work for great and noble goals. In this sense, I wish all Soviet comrades and friends and the great Soviet people the best success in the implementation of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. (applause) Long live the fraternal militant alliance of the SED and CPSU. (applause) Long live the struggle for socialism and peace. (prolonged applause, all rise)

Lebanon's Junblatt

PM030959 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 March 86
Second Edition p 9

["Speech by Comrade Walid Junblatt, Chairman of the Progressive Socialist Party of Lebanon" (PRAVDA headline) — date and place not given]

[Text] Respected comrades!

There is no doubt that the main task of all truly progressive forces of peace is to fundamentally solve the problem of the arms race. This will make it possible to remove the threat of a nuclear catastrophe capable of destroying human civilization and life on earth itself.

Problems must be solved only by peaceful means, with consideration for people's legitimate rights. Only in this way can we stop the international bloodshed and constantly increasing violence.

As representative of the progressive Arab forces of Lebanon, which is situated in the Middle East, I believe it important to stress the following:

First: We are in favor of an unconditional and unreserved withdrawal of Israeli troops from southern Lebanon and fulfillment of the UN resolutions on this issue. We believe that the conditions of a truce between Lebanon and Israel must be observed, because they form the only possible framework of relations between them.

Second: A serious dialogue must be begun in Lebanon in order to find solutions to the complex and contradictory internal problems, having laid down our weapons and guarded our citizens' lives from constant threats.

Third: In our opinion, there can be no solution to the conflict between Israel and the Arab world if the Palestinian people are not guaranteed their legitimate rights, including the right to form an independent state on the soil of their motherland. The 1947 UN resolution on the Palestinian question could serve as the basis for this process.

It should be noted that the rights of the heroic Palestinian people can only be represented by a united Palestine Liberation Organization, an organization which rejects separate solutions and capitulation and acts objectively in alliance with progressive Arab forces headed by Syria.

Fourth: A peaceful solution must be found to the Iran-Iraq conflict, and the bloodshed which is causing great damage to both countries must be stopped. This war is having a negative influence on solving the problems of the Arab world and the Islamic states.

Fifth: Lebanese patriots decisively spurn any U.S. threats addressed to the Arab peoples. We are principled opponents of any terrorist actions, by whatever side they may be committed.

The bold and well-considered program put forward by Comrade Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, at the 27th CPSU Congress is, in our opinion, a qualitatively new, revolutionary move along the path toward further strengthening the positions of socialism in your country and strengthening friendship and cooperation between people.

On behalf of all Lebanese patriots and the Progressive Socialist Party of Lebanon, I express deep gratitude to the great Soviet people and their vanguard — the CPSU — for giving us comprehensive help and support.

Please accept best wishes for a beautiful future for your people and universal peace. (prolonged applause)

Salvadoran Front Leader

PM061305 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Mar 86 Second Edition p 11

["Speech by Comrade Ferman Cienfuegos, Member of the Leadership of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front of El Salvador" (PRAVDA headline); date and place not given]

[Text] Comrades! On behalf of the command of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front of El Salvador, permit me to convey our combat greetings to the 27th CPSU Congress, which signifies a historic turning point in the affairs of the Soviet people and a new, qualitative stage in the development of socialism.

The CPSU Program sets the paramount task of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development on the basis of utilizing the achievements of the scientific and technical revolution and improving management of enterprises and a system of popular self-management. The implementation of this task requires high socialist awareness by the people. We are certain that the CPSU Program adopted by the congress will be successfully fulfilled.

We consider it necessary to note that the entire world greeted with great joy and hope the 15 January 1986 statement by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, which outlines paths for the gradual reduction of nuclear weapons right up to their complete destruction within the next 15 years, which would undoubtedly serve the cause of strengthening peace throughout the world. This statement inspires the hope in all people of good will that peace will be preserved, and this would meet the interests of all peace-loving peoples.

The people of El Salvador, together with the revolutionary people of Nicaragua, are heroically fighting on the frontline of the anti-imperialist struggle in Latin America.

We are offering resistance to the interventionist actions of the U.S. ruling circles, which are waging an undeclared war against us, trying to deny the victory of genuine democracy in our country and hamper our country's economic and political development on an independent and sovereign basis in accordance with a people's right to determine their own destiny.

Our small nation, which numbers about 5 million people, with great enthusiasm and revolutionary vigor is doing everything to strengthen the rebel forces and consolidate the broad political front opposing the Duarte government.

Capably combining the political and armed forms of struggle, the patriots of El Salvador are increasing resistance to the antipeople regime.

Our successes are possible thanks to close ties with the broad masses who, under the leadership of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front of El Salvador, are mastering military skills and accumulating experience in offensive operations to better withstand imperialist and counterrevolutionary operations. Using the simplest kinds of combat equipment and combining various forms of struggle and organization, they are thereby developing a new type of revolutionary combat action.

Strikes and protest demonstrations in the country, produced by El Salvador's severe economic situation, are now becoming widespread. These demonstrations by working people, which are full of revolutionary spirit and militancy, will inevitably lead to extensive clashes with the Duarte government.

Thus, conditions for a revolutionary situation are ripening everywhere in the country, in which the enemy has exhausted opportunities for political maneuvering and a popular alternative has developed of creating a broadly representative government that could lead the country to peace.

Despite the interference of U.S. imperialism, which threatens direct intervention, our people have faith in victory. Invaders would be met with stubborn and heroic resistance and would be inevitably thrown out of our country.

Comrades! On behalf of the delegation of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, we express our affection and admiration for the Soviet people. We wish you great achievements in the cause of implementing the party program.

Long live the 27th CPSU Congress!

Long live the friendship between the peoples of El Salvador and the Soviet Union! (prolonged applause)

Sandinist Leader Arce Castano

PM060949 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Mar 86
Second Edition p 8

["Speech by Comrade Bayardo Arce Castano, Vice Coordinator of the Executive Commission of the National Leadership of the Sandinist National Liberation Front of Nicaragua" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at the 3 March morning session of the 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Comrade members of the presidium!

Esteemed comrades!

On behalf of the national leadership of the Sandinist Front, its members, and the government and revolutionary masses of Nicaragua, permit me to convey from the distinguished rostrum of the historic 27th CPSU Congress our ardent fraternal greetings to the Leninist party, all Soviet people, and Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, and express gratitude for the Soviet people's solidarity with the struggle of the Nicaraguan people. (applause)

This congress is taking place at a time when international tension has reached an extreme point and when the danger of the destruction of mankind has developed as a result of imperialist ambitions. We believe that mankind is experiencing a decisive moment in its history.

Our people, government, and the Sandinist Front fully approve the precepts of the new edition of the CPSU Program. In our opinion, there is no more important task today than preserving peace. At the same time, peace and detente are not the only alternatives to war. There is also the struggle against hunger and backwardness in Third World countries and the reorientation of their resources, which are now being spent on military preparations, to the goals of economic development.

We Nicaraguans share the view of all rational people in the world that the Peace Program advanced by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev on 15 January this year, which envisages the gradual destruction of nuclear weapons over a 15-year period, is realistic and, in our opinion, revolutionary. (applause) It reflects the interests of all mankind. (applause)

We Sandinists support the appeal: Detente for the sake of development. The successes attained on the path of strengthening peace will indisputably improve the standard of living of people throughout the world, particularly the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

We are convinced that our duty is to mobilize state, political, and public forces throughout the world to implement the proposals of the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, which the congress has ardently supported. Nicaragua highly assesses the Soviet Union's resolute opposition to attempts by the U.S. Administration to make implementation of detente agreements conditional on the settlement of so-called regional conflicts. These arguments by the Reagan administration simply conceal a lack of desire for peace and impudent persistence in conducting its policy of war not only on earth, but also in space.

Comrades! Just as the people of Lenin fought the White Guards in the first years after Great October, the people of Sandino, having become the victims of the U.S. policy of imperialism, are today repelling the attacks of the contras, which are supported by the Washington administration and act on its orders. U.S. imperialism is striving to stifle the young revolutions in Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

The people of Sandino have resisted the aggressive policy of imperialism for 5 years now. They are fighting mercenaries, for whom President Reagan is asking an additional $100 million. Our people are not afraid of a trade and economic blockade. They do not yield to the intimidation of continuous military maneuvers and repulse provocations in which spy planes are used. They are fighting against sabotage directed at destroying the industrial infrastructure, the mining of ports, and blackmail of international financial institutes aimed at depriving Nicaragua of credits. They are overcoming socioeconomic difficulties that have developed as a result of aggression which has inflicted enormous material losses on our country, put it a difficult economic situation, and led to great human casualties.

Our people are fighting, shedding the blood of their warriors, workers, peasants, women, and young people. If the United States were to suffer losses of their population in the same proportion, they would amount to 1 million people. However, despite difficulties, the revolution continues to desire strength from the masses and the close links of the Sandinist Front with the people. Nicaragua is successfully resisting the mercenaries — the basic shock force of the North American aggressor. The revolution is developing in a war situation. So the peasants, after receiving land, take rifles into their hands to defend the revolution.

By overcoming difficulties, the revolution raises the patriotic spirit of everyone involved in the national economy. It motivates efforts directed at increasing product output. And this gives us an opportunity to withstand and survive. (applause)

Economy, efficiency, and thrift — these are the slogans of workers and peasants engaged in production.

Despite the destruction and war, our democracy, which our people have never before known, is being refined. We have drawn up the draft of the first democratic constitution in Nicaragua's history. It will legislatively consolidate the realistic course of a mixed economy and political pluralism, as well as a policy of nonalignment, which the Sandinist Front is conducting.

Comrades! It can be said that our primary tasks were and remain: defending the regime from mercenaries and preparing to repulse possible direct U.S. intervention; ensuring the survival of our economy in crisis conditions; strengthening the vanguard role of the Sandinist Front; developing our government's broad international ties; achieving peace in Central America on the basis of mutual respect and political decisions that do not encroach on the dignity of peoples, primarily of Nicaragua and El Salvador.

We will never agree to talks with the U.S. Government that would mean our recognition of the legality of its interference and hegemonistic pretensions. (applause) We clearly understand that the Sandinist revolution is defending the right of Third World peoples to self-determination and to an independent choice of the path of development, particularly in contemporary conditions, when developing countries are carrying the monstrous burden of foreign debt.

That is our contribution to the cause of peace.

Comrades! Speaking from this rostrum, I express gratitude to the Soviet people, the CPSU, and the Soviet Government for their effective solidarity and cooperation during all the years of imperialist aggression against our country. (applause) The close and fruitful relations between our governments and parties are developing in the spirit of friendship and mutual respect. They are based on revolutionary principles, are unshakeable, and able to endure any test. (applause)

In the historic year of the 27th CPSU Congress, the people of Sandino are marking the 25th anniversary of the formation of their vanguard — the Sandinist National Liberation Front of Nicaragua — and the 60th anniversary of the beginning of Sandino's struggle against U.S. intervention. We assure you from this rostrum that the Sandinist people's revolution, as part of the world revolution, is historically irreversible (applause), and that our people and its vanguard will resolutely proceed with weapons in hand toward final victory and strengthen international solidarity. (applause) Long live friendship between the Soviet Union and Nicaragua! (applause) Long live peace! (applause) A free homeland or death! (prolonged applause, all stand)

Palestinian CP Leader

PM061153 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Mar 86 Second Edition p 8

["Speech by Comrade Sulayman al-Najab, Member of the Palestinian Communist Party Central Committee Politburo" (PRAVDA headline); date and place not given]

[Text] Dear comrades!

Our party delegation conveys greetings to you from the Palestinian Communist Party Central Committee, Palestinian Communists, working people, and patriots both in the occupied territory and beyond its borders, and also wishes for success in the work of your party's 27th congress.

The 27th CPSU Congress has great historical significance. It is being held in the conditions of a complex international situation and at a turning point in your country's development. The congress has to adopt basic party documents: the new edition of the CPSU Program and the revised CPSU Statutes. The convocation of the congress was preceded by intensive, dynamic work on the part of the party leadership, the whole party, and all Soviet people. Consequently, all revolutionary forces of our time and countries the world over show great interest in the progress of your congress work and in its decisions.

The documents presented for discussion by the congress and the Political Report delivered by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, define the basic tasks: to accelerate and intensify the process of economic and social development, which is aimed at ensuring the well-being of the Soviet individual and his security, and to defend peace throughout the world and people's freedom. There is an indissoluble dialectical connection between these two tasks.

We deeply believe that your party congress will successfully carry out these tasks and will help to achieve necessary and positive changes in the life of your country and in the international arena. The CPSU is armed with Leninist principles, follows these principles, and is loyal to Marxism-Leninism. It is precisely because of this adherence to principle that your party enjoys the trust of all Soviet people and plays a prominent role in the international communist and revolutionary movement.

We fully support the initiatives and proposals of the CPSU leadership and the Soviet state, which are aimed at solving complex international problems. The latest Soviet initiatives, which envisage the total elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of this century, constitue a specific, realistic program for all peace-loving forces on earth and form the basis of their unity; they inspire and direct this action and provide an opportunity to fulfill mankind's dream: a world without weapons.

Dear comrades! The Middle East is one of the most dangerous hotbeds of tension and consequently is a threat to general peace. The connection between the problems of the peoples of this region, and primarily the problems of the Palestinian people, and the international situation and questions of war and peace is becoming increasingly clear.

Washington's rulers give an important place to precisely this region in their aggressive policies. They mainly rely on the aggressive "strategic alliance" concluded with Israel's rulers, the spearhead of this alliance being directed against patriotic regimes in the region, mainly in Syria, Libya, and Democratic Yemen. The aim of this alliance also consists in preventing a just solution to the national problem of the Palestinian people, depriving them of their legitimate rights, and thereby implementing "strategic unity" in the Middle East, that is, subordinating the entire region to its military and political domination and turning it into a bridgehead for nuclear missiles aimed at the Soviet Union.

In order to achieve these aggressive aims, the rulers of Washington and Israel count on using the Camp David agreements, and also insufficient Arab solidarity, which weakens any rebuff of their aggressive, piratical actions. They make use of the split within PLO ranks, particularly since its official leadership signed the Amman agreement with Jordan — this deal directed against the national program and aims of the Palestinian people.

The Israeli invaders are continuing their "iron fist" policy in occupied Palestinian lands and are resorting to acts of brutal oppression of our people and their fighters, to murder, and exile from the motherland. They are stepping up their actions to seize Arab lands and establish Zionist settlements on them, and they rob our people. They encourage fascist activity by bands of Zionist extremists. There is a serious danger of new mass atrocities and the banishment of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians from their homeland.

With a great sense of responsibility for the national cause of its people, for the ensuring of just peace in the region, and for peace throughout the world, the Palestinian Communist Party resolutely defends our people's right to a homeland and to the fomration of an independent state on the West Bank of the River Jordan, including the Arab section of Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip. We express our satisfaction with our total unanimity with the fraternal Communist Party of Israel on this issue and with our joint struggle for the good of both peoples.

Regarding the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, our party firmly and consistently defends PLO unity on an anti-imperialist, anti-Zionist basis and on the basis of observing the national unity program and the program of self-determination and adhering to the decisions made by the meeting of Arab heads of state in Fes. We support the Soviet proposals for a settlement of the Middle East conflict, the core of which is the Palestinian problem, and we are in favor of calling an international conference with the participation of all sides, including the PLO, on an independent and equal basis.

Our party and all Palestinian patriotic forces highly appraise the principled position of the friendly Soviet Union in supporting our people's rights and their struggle and efforts aimed at defending PLO unity and strengthening its combat ties with anti-imperialist forces in the region and throughout the world.

Pursuing a principled policy and waging a stubborn, selfless struggle for its people's rights, our party is constantly developing and strengthening its authority and influence within the ranks of the Palestinian patriotic movement. It is also strengthening its international relations with friendly communist and worker parties. In the forefront of these parties stands your glorious party loyal to Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

Dear comrades! In one of his replies to journalists, M.S. Gorbachev defined the basic task of your party as follows: "Today, in the eighties, we set the task of giving powerful impetus to the cause begun by the Bolshevik party almost 70 years ago." We are absolutely sure that the Leninist party will fulfill this task with the same Bolshevik determination, devotion, and revolutionary purity!

Long live the 27th CPSU Congress!

Long live the unity of the international communist movement and the unity of revolutionary forces throughout the world!

Long live peace throughout the world. Long live communism! (prolonged applause)

Iran's Tudeh Party Delegate

PM051918 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Mar 86 Second Edition p 11

["Speech by Comrade Ali Havari, First Secretary of the Iranian People's Party Central Committee" (PRAVDA headline) — date and place not given]

[Text] Dear comrades! On behalf of the Iranian People's Party Central Committee and all members and supporters of this party of the Iranian working class, allow me to convey the most sincere congratulations to the glorious CPSU and to all working people of the great Lenin's motherland in connection with a historic forum — the 27th CPSU Congress.

The 27th CPSU Congress is a most important historic event of our time and has epoch-making significance.

The importance of this forum is determined by the documents submitted for discussion — the drafts of the new edition of the program and changes to the CPSU Statutes, and the draft Basic Guidelines for the economic and social development of the USSR in the 12th 5-Year Plan and the period through the year 2000.

The 27th CPSU Congress serves as an embodiment of the Leninist strong will and of the bold, well-considered decisions of the generation of Soviet Communists which, relying on the powerful foundation of developed socialism's achievements and the vast economic, scientific, technical, and cultural potential of the first socialist state in the world, has set the aim of raising the Soviet people's standard of living still higher and ensuring peace throughout the world.

The scale of change and the acceleration of Soviet society's socioeconomic and spiritual development, on which the CPSU's attention is concentrated, is so ambitious that the period of practical implementation of what is planned will undoubtedly go down in history as an era of profound change and a qualitatively new stage in the history of socialism.

With a powerful industry and developed, mechanized agriculture at its disposal and occupying, as it does, leading positions in many scientific and technical spheres, the Land of the Soviets has all the necessary conditions for making a powerful leap, unprecedented in history, in its development and entering the 21st century with an industrial potential double that of today. The USSR not only meets in practice the requirements of harmonious economic development and further growth of Soviet people's living standards, but has also been able — relying on its vast economic, scientific, and technical potential and showing strong will in its defense of socialism's achievements — to achieve military and strategic parity with the United States, which is the main guarantee of preserving general peace. The Leninist foreign policy of the USSR and other socialist countries is conducted with consideration not only for the requirements of the socialist states' development, but also for the interests of all peoples on earth. Peoples' correct understanding of this policy helps to further broaden the struggle in defense of peace and against the main source of tension and wars — imperialism, and primarily Amereican imperialism. This struggle has become an important, effective factor in preserving general peace.

The USSR's determination and strong will in the struggle for peace were clearly apparent in the statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on 15 January, which set out clear-cut, constructive proposals aimed at the gradual, step-by-step elimination of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the 20th century. All the peace-loving proposals and initiatives, as well as the practical actions of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, help to expose in the eyes of the world public the fabrications of a "Soviet military threat."

Dear comrades! Three years have passed since the beginning of the cruel offensive on the Iranian People's Party — the party of our country's workers class. Thousands of our party's activists and rank-and-file members have been thrown in jail and are subjected to cruel repressions. Hundreds of our comrades have been sentenced to long (between 10 and 30 years) imprisonment. Trials of Tudeh Party members in camera continue even today. These repressions have been brought down not only on our party but also on our comrades-in-arms — members of the Fedayeen-e-Khalq (the majority), and also other progressive Iranian organizations.

The fratricidal Iran-Iraq war between the peoples of the two neighboring countries is now in its 6th year — the result both of imperialist intrigues and of a policy pursuing an unrealistic aim harmful to the interests of our country — the export of "Islamic revolution." As a result of military operations, on the Iranian side alone 700,000 people have already been killed and crippled, while 2 million have been made refugees. Hundreds of towns, villages, industrial enterprises, and other economic units have been destroyed. The war serves only the interests of U.S. imperialism and its NATO allies and helps to increase the imperialist military, political, and economic presence in the important region of the Persian Gulf, which is rich in resources. The Iranian Tudeh Party is opposed to the continuation of the war and urgently calls for the speediest possible end to this tragic conflict.

Our country is today gripped by deep socioeconomic crisis. Millions of people have no work and inflation and price rises are increasing. There are no democratic freedoms. All this has created difficult conditions for the Iranian working people, who several years ago carried out a revolution which was a significant event in the history of our country.

Despite many difficulties, the Iranian Tudeh Party has not laid down its arms. As before, it holds high the banner of struggle to achieve the lofty aims of the vanguard party of the Iranian workers class — freedom, independence, and social justice.

Our country's people will never forget the fraternal assistance and sense of disinterested friendship shown by the great Leninist party and the Soviet state throughout the history of relations between the USSR and Iran.

Once again congratulating those present in connection with the 27th CPSU Congress, the Tudeh Party expresses its sincere gratitude for the fraternal, disinterested feelings of solidarity shown our party by Communists in the Soviet Union.

Long live Marxism-Leninism!

May the fraternal solidarity of the Iranian Tudeh Party and the CPSU strengthen! (prolonged applause)

Iran's Fedayeen-e-Khalq Leader

PM071115 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86
Second Edition pp 9-10

["Speech by Comrade (Farrokh Negyakhdar), First Secretary of the Central Committee of the Iranian Fedayeen-e-Khalq — Majority" (PRAVDA headline) at the 27th CPSU Congress — date not given]

[Text] Dear comrades! On behalf of the Central Committee and all members of the Iranian Fedayeen-e-Khalq — Majority, we congratulate you on the occasion of the 27th Congress of the CPSU — the great party of Lenin.

Each success of the USSR and the other socialist countries brings closer the victory of the peoples struggling for independence, democracy, and social progress. That has been the reality of life from the time of the October Revolution through to our day.

The Soviet Union, guided by the Communist Party, plays an exceptionally important and decisive role in defending universal peace and supporting the struggle for the peoples' liberation. From the October Revolution's victory through to the present time, all revolutionary, democratic, anti-imperialist, and progressive movements, whereever they have waged the struggle, have always relied on the USSR's active and effective support.

The Fedayeen-e-Khalq — Majority resolutely supports the initiatives and responsible practical actions of the Communist Party and the Soviet state, particularly M.S. Gorbachev's recent proposals aimed at reducing and completely eliminating nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction. Our organization resolutely condemns the U.S. Administration's aggressive, adventurist course and, above all, R. Reagan's attempts to militarize space and the crude interference in the affairs of Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Angola, Cambodia, and other countries.

The Iranian people have correctly assessed the position of the USSR, which issued a firm warning about the impermissibility of interference in Iran's affairs on the eve of the 1979 February revolution, and also the Soviet Union's assistance at a time when the United States had declared an economic embargo on our country.

The futile and tragic Iran-Iraq war has been going on for 6 years now. It only benefits imperialism. Hundreds of thousands of workers and peasants have already fallen victim to this war. The military operations have been used as the excuse for the further deterioration of our people's living conditions and the destruction of the country. We actively oppose the war and advocate its end and the establishment of peace between the two neighboring states.

We are struggling to ensure that democracy is established in our country and that the persecution and repression of representatives of the democratic forces there are ended. The Fedayeen-e Khalq — Majority advocates the granting of autonomy to the Kurdestan people, the repeal of reactionary laws, and the cessation of the degrading treatment of women. Our organization actively supports the working people's demands for a 40-hour week, the creation of trade unions, and the right to strike. We favor the transfer of the land to the peasants who cultivate it and the elimination of large-scale land ownership. Our organization struggles against big capital and supports the creation of the kind of socioeconomic system which would meet the Iranian working people's interests. We demand an end to the country's economic dependence on imperialism and urge the strengthening of OPEC to oppose the imperialist monopolies. The Fedayeen-e-Khalq — Majority urges that the hostility in relations with revolutionary Afghanistan be removed and friendly ties be established with all progressive and nonaligned states.

Thus, the Fedayeen-e-Khalq — Majority is an Iranian working class organization of the new type, which, based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, sets for itself the goals of struggling for peace, democracy, independence, and social progress. On that path we are carrying out comprehensive cooperation with the People's Party of Iran. The Fedayeen-e-Khalq also strives to involve the country's other democratic forces in cooperation and alliance in the struggle for the common goals.

Cmrades! Despite exceptionally complex conditions, the Fedayeen of the Iranian people, relying on their active and disciplined revolutionary organizations within the country, continue to hold aloft the banner of working class struggle. We study the Leninist, Bolshevist style of work and, in light of specific conditions, use it to maintain our organizations as centers of leadership of the people's struggle at enterprises, in cities, and in rural localities.

In the 15 years since the Fedayeen-e-Khalq — Majority party was created, our enemies have not succeeded in making us capitulate, despite their criminal actions. Hundreds of our best comrades have lost their lives, but the Fedayeen-e-Khalq has raised the banner of struggle even higher. We believe in the inevitable failure of all attempts by imperialism and reaction, including the use of reprisals against revolutionaries, to reverse the course of history. We are confident that the working people will be victorious.

Dear comrades! We, the Fedayeen of the Iranian people, are convinced that the socialist society in your country will develop successfully. We rate highly the Soviet Union's position favoring the speediest end to the Iran-Iraq war, making the Iran-USSR border one of peace, friendship, and mutually beneficial cooperation, and supporting the Iranian people's finding their own path to freedom and prosperity.

May the friendship between the peoples of Iran and the USSR strengthen!

Glory to the CPSU! (prolonged applause)

Honduran CP's Padilla

PM071433 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 Second Edition p 10

["Speech by Comrade Rigoberto Padilla, General Secretary of the Communist Party of Honduras" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at the 27th CPSU Congress — date and place not given]

[Text] Dear comrades! The Communists and Honduran revolutionaries have instructed me to convey to you, the CPSU, the motherland of Lenin, warm, cordial greetings in connection with an event which will undoubtedly be a milestone in Soviet people's social and political life — the 27th congress of your great party.

The problems which are being discussed at this great congress are of vital interest not only to you. They perturb the peoples of the whole world. Is it not for this reason that guests have assembled in Moscow from various countries belonging to different races and speaking different languages? We all highly prize the efforts of the Soviet Union and its Communist Party aimed at barring the way to the warmongers.

We welcome the resolute initiatives of Comrade M.S. Gorbachev aimed at saving mankind from self-annihilation and providing for specific steps which would free the world from nuclear armaments by the beginning of the third millenium. This noble aim accords with the aspirations and hopes of all peoples of the world.

We are following with alarm and indignation as the Reagan administration — the loyal servant of the military-industrial complex — insists on new appropriations to continue its senseless adventurist and interventionist policy and the arms race, which it wants to crown by the "star wars" system, the notorious Strategic Defense Initiative.

This problem is acquiring a dramatic nature. Hitler with his fascist stooges once marched across Europe before beating his head against the wall of Soviet heroism. And we could remind Reagan of the lessons of history. But it would still be best if this terrible experience were not repeated. After all, its price would not simply be too high; there would possibly be no one left at all to draw lessons from it. Today we are faced with a dilemma — to be or not to be. A great gain of human genius — atomic energy — must be placed at the service of all. It should not become an instrument for our own annihilation.

For the "Third World" countries and for our Latin America there also exist other problems: the struggle against backwardness and economic dependence, the abolition of the gulf separating us from the most developed countries, the establishment of a new international economic order which would put an end to the harsh exploitation of our countries by the imperialist states and establish fair conditions for trade exchange. It is also essential to resolve energy problems, the problem of hunger and health protection, and, finally, the problem of the foreign debt which is devouring all our assets and which can no longer be paid, because in Latin America alone it has exceeded the fantastic sum of $370 billion.

Honduras is a small country with 4 million inhabitants situated in the very heart of Central America.

The leaders of our people's struggle for indepence. (Valye) and Morazan, used to say that Honduras' privilege is its geographical position. Washed by two seas, it is at the center of the continent's maritime trade routes. The country is now essentially occupied by the U.S. Army and has lost its political independence. Moreover, there is a danger that we will lose our national countenance entirely. The privileges of which (Valye) and Morazan spoke have brought us misfortune, because they have attracted to us the avid gaze of North American imperialism. Our country, like Thailand, Pakistan, and the Republic of South Africa, has been turned into a bridgehead for mercenary troops to attack neighboring countries. Masking its occupation behind military maneuvers, U.S. imperialism is deploying its bases and Marines in Honduras.

This is a dirty, shameless war which Reagan and the Pentagon generals do not even conceal. It is a war aimed at undermining and destroying the Sandinista revolution. It is being waged at the same time as constant attacks on the Cuban revolution and attempts to "stifle in the cradle" the Salvadoran revolution.

Reagan in his cynicism calls the mercenaries operating in Cambodia, Angola, Afghanistan, and Nicaragua "freedom fighters"! But he knows he cannot lay his hands on Central America without suppressing the freedom of its peoples. That is why, since 1981, we have experienced harsh repressions. Hundreds of our activists have been seized and tortured and have disappeared in secret torture chambers. Constitutional guarantees are being shamelessly flouted and human rights violated.

On the pretext of combating "terrorism," Reagan and his stooges like Israel are practicing international terrorism. Closing their eyes to the profound social, economic, and historical roots of the people's struggle in Latin America, they are trying to explain the demonstrations against tyrants like Pinochet, Stroessner, or Duvalier by the confrontation between East and West and clamor about the alleged interference of Moscow, Havana, or Managua.

The USSR's only blame consists in setting us examples of selfless, heroic labor and a consistent policy of friendship among the peoples. We follow the Soviet Union, carried along by its example, said one of our party's founders, (Kaliks Errera). The Honduran Communists, now compelled to operate under the conditions of the underground, are struggling for the cohesion of the country's revolutionary forces. We are seeking to expand the alliance with all democratic circles of Honduras which resolutely oppose U.S. occupation, repressions, and the arms race and advocate a fitting peace in the region. We state our firm solidarity with Cuba and Nicaragua and the right of all peoples of Central America and the Caribbean, in particular Haiti, to free self-determination without outside interference. We are extending a hand to all those patriotic circles of the armed forces and the Catholic church which want to see Honduras democratic, respectful of its neighbors, and independent.

Comrades! We see in the USSR and its party our hope and a firm shield for the peoples struggling for freedom and independence. We express once more our thanks, admiration, and fraternal solidarity!

Long live the eternal friendship between our two countries!

Long live proletarian and socialist internationalism! (prolonged applause)

Afghanistan's Karmal

PM011744 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Mar 86 Second Edition p 11

["Speech by Comrade Babrak Karmal, General Secretary of the PDPA Central Committee and Chairman of the DRA Revolutionary Council" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at the 28 February morning session of the 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Dear Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev!

Dear Soviet comrades and friends!

From this rostrum — the loftiest rostrum of peace and progress — I convey to you, the delegates to the 27th CPSU Congress, the party of the great Lenin, and to all the noble Soviet people ardent greetings from the fighting PDPA. (applause) Each CPSU Congress is a truly historic event, a turning point for all progressive mankind. Participation in the congress provides invaluable schooling in genuine patriotism and internationalism, schooling in building a new society. (applause)

The Political Report delivered by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and the other documents submitted to the congress are permeated by scientific profundity, adherence to principle, humanism, and the great force of life's truth. (applause) In putting forward the concept of the all-around acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development, the CPSU has called upon the Soviet people to elevate the efficiency of creative labor to a qualitatively new level. These great strides are dictated by the creative nature of the Soviet system and are particularly topical in the current complex and explosive international situation.

The CPSU demonstrates a Leninist approach to the solution of global problems. "Peace to the peoples" — the party inscribed this great slogan on the banner of October in 1917. (applause) "Peace to the peoples" — the CPSU confirms this in its program right now and calls on mankind to arrive at the year 2000 without nuclear weapons. (applause) How much meaning there is in the fact that this year, the year of the 27th CPSU Congress, has been declared an International Year of Peace. (applause) That is the order given by history itself! Peace is the chief delegate to the 27th congress. (applause)

Here in Moscow there is freedom, genuine justice, democracy and human happiness. (applause) Socialism is the creator of peace. Over there in the West is an arms race, a policy of war, aggression, reaction, discrimination, oppression, and exploitation. Imperialism is the source of war, and the Afghans have come to understand this very well and have felt it with their whole being during the years of the undeclared war unleashed against us. We have the right to arraign international imperialism before the court of the peoples on a charge of mass murder, unprecedented mockery of humanity, and the destruction of factories, schools, hospitals and homes. And while accusing international imperialism, we are combating it!

The April Revolution was accomplished 8 years ago and brought freedom to our people. All these years people's power in the DRA has been forced to wage a bitter class struggle and a just war. But even under unprecedentedly difficult conditions, the Afghan people, under the leadership of their vanguard — the PDPA — thanks to the all-around assistance of the Soviet Union, and overcoming age-old backwardness, have achieved great successes. (applause)

Revolutionaries the world over well remember V.I. Lenin's catch phrase: "Any revolution is only worth something when it knows how to defend itself..." (applause) The concluding part of that phrase is also remembered: "...but a revolution does not learn how to defend itself all at once." The development of our revolution was not a smooth process. But we learned a great deal. We ourselves became different people. In the struggle against the enemies, we have been relying more and more on the energy of the masses. Armed forces of a new kind have been created. Today more than 60 percent of the members and candidate members of the 150,000-strong party are fighting in the ranks of the Armed Forces against counterrevolution. And we believe, we are convinced that victory will be ours! (applause)

Despite the war, the first 5-year plan for the country's socioeconomic development has been elaborated. Land and water reform is being carried out; construction is developing; free education and medical care are expanding. The movement for the elimination of illiteracy is expanding. The new political system engendered by the revolution is operating increasingly efficiently. Elections of people's representatives to the local organs of power are proceeding successfully. The ranks of the mass public organizations and of the National Fatherland Front, in whose activity the ideas of our revolution and the desire for the consolidation of all patrioitic forces are most fully expressed, are swelling.

We are taking steps for the democratization of the state apparatus. Equal rights have been granted to all citizens of our country, regardless of their social standing, nationality, sex, or religion. With each passing day the social base of the people's power is growing broader. The Great Jirga and the Supreme Jirga of the Tribes fully supported the revolutionary system and our party's domestic and foreign policy. The free Pushtun tribes which are putting up resistance to the aggression of Pakistan's militarist regime have also declared solidarity with the April Revolution. The world has seen for itself that the ominous conspiracy of U.S. imperialism is directed not just against the DRA but also against the peoples of our neighboring countries.

The shortsightedness of the ruling circles of Pakistan, which is falling prey to the aggressive policy of the United States, is astonishing and striking. Iran's course is, in essence, hostile to our revolution. To our deep regret, socialist China is also pursuing a shortsighted policy toward the people of Afghanistan. We must all seek paths leading to mutual understanding. The situation surrounding Afghanistan can be normalized only through political negotiations, the results of which will also settle the question of the withdrawal of the limited Soviet troop contingent.

We have a saying: Before building a house, choose your neighbor. Our courageous ancestors bequeathed to us the exhortation: For the sake of preserving freedom and independence, always be with Russia. (applause) And this very day sees the 65th anniversary of the signing of the historic treaty of friendship between Afghanistan and Soviet Russia. (applause)a Our friendship, illumined by Great October and the genius of Lenin, shines for us Afgans like the sun of liberty. Since the April Revolution it has assumed a truly fraternal character. (applause)

The entire history of the Land of the Soviets is a history of internationalist, sincere, genuinely disinterested, fraternal assistance to the fighters for national liberation. Our people will never forget the tremendous and totally incomparable assistance of the USSR. (applause) Only the motherland of Lenin is capable of establishing such relations with a developing country. (applause) Only a true friend and brother can so selflessly assist in the building of a new society and in repulsing external aggression. (applause)

Once again I express the appreciation of the revolutionary Afghan people to the CPSU Central Committee, to you, the congress delegates, and to all the Soviet people, the internationalist people. (applause)

Long live the great Soviet people — indestructible bulwark of peace, freedom, and progress throughout the world! (applause)

May the indestructibe fraternal Afghan-Soviet friendship be eternal! (applause)

Long live the party of Lenin! (applause)

Long live proletarian internationalism! (prolonged applause, all rise)

Ukrainian Deputy Minister Dismissed for Fraud

[Unattributed report under the rubric "After IZVESTIYA Action": "Punished for Fraud and Toadyism"]

[Text] "Ukrainian SSR Deputy Minister of the Construction Materials Industry Failed Apartment Test" (No 51)

This was the headline under which a report was published by A. Dolenko on how the Ukrainian SSR Supreme Soviet Presidium had examined the results of a check on complaints from N. Safronova, a worker at the Slavyansk ceramics combine, Donetsk Oblast, on abuses of his official position by M. Popereka, Ukrainian SSR deputy minister of the construction materials industry, in resolving his daughter's apartment problem.

By an order of the Ukrainian SSR minister of the construction materials industry, M. Popereka has been relieved of his duties as deputy minister. The Ukrainian SSR Ministry of the Construction Materials Industry party committee, having examined the personal case of CPSU Member Comrade Popereka, imposed a severe sanction on him with an entry in his report card. A joint resolution of the Ukrainian SSR Ministry of the Construction Materials Industry Collegium and the Presidium of the Trade Union of Construction and Construction Materials Industry Workers republican committee has strictly sanctioned Yu. Dzhim, director of the Slavyansk ceramics combine, and sanctioned I. Skomorozhin, deputy chairman of the combine trade union committee, for the gross violations of housing legislation they have committed, for lack of principle and for rendering assistance in reregistering M. Popereka's apartment in his daughter's name.

The Donetsk Oblispolkom and Slavyansk Gorispolkom and the Donetsk Oblast internal affairs administration have examined cases of violations of housing legislation at the Slavyansk ceramics combine and the regulations for registering citizens and exchanging housing in Donetsk. The culprits have been made answerable.

Alma-Ata Officials Punished for Shortcomings

LD191010 Alma-Ata Domestic Service in Kazakh

[Text] The republic's People's Control Committee has examined serious shortcomings in the use of metal-cutting machine tools with computerized control and robot technology in several enterprises in Kazakhstan under the USSR Ministry of Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry. It was noted that expensive equipment is often acquired by enterprises without proper study of the economic and technical expediency of its use, the load coefficient for machine tools is low, and the rates at which new generation technology is being introduced are needlessly drawn out. The Chimkent production association for the production of forge and press equipment recently installed computerized machine tools worth over R5 million; so far, no savings have been effected as a result of their introduction. At the "20 Years of October" machine tool works in Alma-Ata, during the inspection period, nearly one-third of the metal-cutting machine tools and all three robot technology complexes were not working and the load coefficient for machine tools with programmed control was half of that envisaged in the industry. There was practically no use of collective forms of organization and remuneration for the labor of operators, machine tool operators, and their auxiliary personnel. One of the main reasons for the shortcomings at the enterprises which were checked is the absence of a precise program for the accelerated introduction of high-efficiency equipment and the restructuring of engineering production in light of modern requirements.

(Blyunkov), chief engineer of the Chimkent industry association and (Bulygin), director of the Alma-Ata machine tool building factory were severely punished by the committee for tolerating these deficiencies. They were instructed to report the shortcomings of their own enterprises and collectives and to outline measures to eradicate them. The USSR Ministry of the Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry is to be notified of the results of the check.

Aid Needed in Sakhalin To Deal With Cyclone Effects

1600 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Summary] As we have already reported, Sakhalin and the Kuriles have been affected this week by a deep and extensive cyclone, which brought a sharp deterioration in the weather and caused great difficulties for the population and economic organizations. Here is an interview given to our correspondent by the chief of the oblast headquarters for countering national disasters, Nikolay Viktorovich Arsenyev, first deputy chairman of Sakhalin Obkom.

[Arsenyev] "Leaders of oblast departments and rayon and town executive committees were warned in good time about the approach of the cyclone by the oblast hydrometeorological service; this enabled enterprises to take certain measures and face the onslaught of the elements in a well-organized way. During the passage of the cyclone, enterprises working on a continuous basis — pulp and paper plants, power stations, mines — continued to work. Work on clearing streets and main thoroughfares in towns and settlements was organized on an around-the-clock basis. There were food supplies for the population and water and heating supplies continued to work. Their normal operation was ensured by emergency teams which displayed courage and heroism in extreme conditions.

"Thus, in the town of Makarov a team worked in almost nil visibility to repair a transformer substation and restored power to the town in 2 hours. A very difficult situation arose on the stretches of railway between Tikhaya and Arsentyevka and between Tomari and Penzenskaya where snowdrifts were as deep as 3 to 5 meters and heroic work finally cleared a way through to Tikhaya station for a passenger train which had been held up for 6 hours.

"The population of the oblast tackled the elements in a steadfast and well-organized way. The cyclone has now moved away into the Sea of Okhotsk. Work is underway everywhere to clear snowdrifts from streets and pavements, from railway lines at stations and enterprises. Schools, movie houses, eating places, and shops are working. Life is returning to normal in the rest of the oblast [as heard]. But for these difficulties to be coped with more quickly help is needed from ministries and their subsidiary enterprises in the form of provision of snow-clearing equipment, fuel, and lubricants, roofing and other materials. It should not be forgotten that these enterprises are nearly always working in extreme conditions."

Increase Planned for Social Consumption Funds

LD181314 Moscow TASS in English 1231 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 18 TASS — TASS commentator Boris Prokhorov writes: The 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union has reaffirmed the party's and the Soviet Government's policy of giving priority to increasing social consumption funds which guarantee all citizens an equal opportunity to enjoy the principal social benefits.

The funds provide the money for free medical services, free education at all levels, free or cut-rate room and board at health resorts, the upkeep of children at nursery schools, the noncontributory pension scheme, scholarships, and all manner of allowances.

Plans endorsed at the 27th party congress call for the average monthly pay of wage and salary earners in the country in the next five years to be raised 13 to 15 percent, while the social consumption funds are to grow between 20 and 23 percent.

Importantly, the tax rates, rent, public transport fees, and retail prices of staple foods and basic manufactured goods will remain as low as they are.

Even today, the social consumption funds are responsible for about one-third of all material benefits and services granted to the Soviet people. But the share will keep growing in the future as well.

Although the socialist principle of distribution is "to each in accordance with his work" (which is observed in what concerns pay), the benefits finanaced out of the social consumption funds are distributed among the people irrespective of their contributions to society through work.

But it was emphasized in the CPSU Central Committee's policy report to the 27th Party congress:

"We hold that they (social consumption funds) are in no way charity. They play an important role in providing equal access for members of society to education and culture, equalizing conditions for the raising of children, and easing the life of those who may, for one reason or another, need a grant or continuous assistance."

The social consumption funds mean additions to the budget of any Soviet family but the importance of these varies from family to family.

In small high-income families they come, as a rule, to not more than 15 percent of their budgets, while in lower-income families, with more aged people and children, the figure is 40 and sometimes 50 or more percent.

This illustrates one of the funds' paramount missions, which is to level out living standards for the children and the elderly.

No wonder that the social consumption funds here are often called justice funds.

This explains why they are being increased at priority rates. A quarter-century ago payments out of these funds amounted to 27 billion roubles, while ten years ago the total reached 90 billion roubles and last year it was close on 150 billion roubles.

Soviet society is thus increasingly becoming a society of genuine social justice.

Moscow Prosecutors Told To Listen to Complaints

[Unattributed report under the rubric "After Criticism" and the headline "Reacting Clearly to Press Signals"]

[Text] The rejoinder "How To Verify in the Future" (PRAVDA 1 February) was discussed at a session of the Moscow Oblast Prosecutor's Office Collegium. The attention of M. Avdyukov, oblast deputy prosecutor, was drawn to the inattentive attitude he displayed to the verification of press signals and the statements by war veteran S. Shekhanov, which were discussed in the rejoinder. For this same shortcoming R. Abramova, Odintsov City deputy prosecutor, was severely reprimanded, and A. Krivonosov, prosecutor at a department of the oblast prosecutor's office, who carried out the verification, was disciplined. N. Fufayev, Odintsov city prosecutor, was previously relieved of his duties and expelled from the prosecutor's office organs.

The conference of city rayon prosecutors and staffers at the Moscow Oblast prosecutor's office apparatus drew the attention of all operatives to the need to react more clearly to complaints and statements from citizens and press signals. The editorial bureau was informed of this by A. Titov, RSFSR deputy prosecutor.

Azerbaijan Conference Views Technical Training

[Text] A republic-level practical and scientific conference is currently discussing the further development of the use of technical training means in the training and educational process. The conference is being held in accordance with the demands of the reforms program effected in the general education and vocational training schools.

Kamran Ragimov, minister of education of the Azerbaijan SSR, and the other speakers who addressed the conference pointed out that the main task at the present time is to consolidate the polytechnical aspect of education and increase the productivity of the work training and vocational (?education) given to students. This is the direction pointed out to the teachers by the decisions adopted by the recent 27th CPSU Congress.

The scientific conference has noted that the most current technical training means are being used in Azerbaijan SSR on a gradually broadening scale.

Kadyr Ismail-Zade, first secretary of the Imishiinskiy Rayon Party Committee, opened the meeting.

The conference participants heard a report by Mikhail Mamedov, a department chief affiliated to the board of the Society for Knowledge, on the theme "The Scientific Voice of Atheism." They also heard reports by [names indistinct]. Experience was exchanged on a large scale during the seminary conference.

Commentary Stresses Value of Scientific Atheism

LD071439 Dushanbe Domestic Service in Tadzhik

[Commentary by Musamir Gulakhmadov, candidate of philosophy: "Atheist Education and the Requirement of Time"]

[Excerpt] In his works Socialism and Religion and The Attitude of the Workers' Party to Religion, V.I. Lenin has put together Marxist teachings on the reactionary nature of religion. He showed that religion and the traditions of the past have a reactionary nature which harms the construction of the new society in every way. V.I. Lenin put forward the need for the elimination of religion, [word indistinct], and its remnants. The conscientious worker today, V.I. Lenin wrote, who has been brought up in large-scale industry and who is influenced by urban life, rejects with resentment religious superstitions, leaves its [word indistinct] to the hypocritical bourgeoisie, and begins a new life for himself.

It is obvious that before the victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution most religious sects forced large masses of the workers to observe religious tenets and reactionary traditions. For example, long before the Great October Revolution the people of Central Asia were under the influence of the reactionary ideology of Islam; their entire lives were determined by the dogmas of the Koran and the laws of Sharia. In addition to this, religious superstitions in the Central Asian republics, coupled with other remnants of the past, were appearing in the life and [words indistinct] as traditions, customs, and habits. After the victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution, a resolute struggle was waged against religion, bourgeois morality, superstitions of the world of private ownership [as heard], reactionary traditions, individualism, and antagonism.

The victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution paved the way to freeing the Soviet people from some of the remnants of the past and the reactionary superstitions of religion. Socialism eliminated forever private ownership, exploitation, national oppression, [word indistinct] antagonism, social inequality, and the social and [word indistinct] roots of religion. In addition to the socialist and economic renewal of society, socialist construction brought about comprehensive transformations in social (?conscience) which resulted in the total victory of scientific atheism. The victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution, the construction of a socialist society, the (?spread) of scientific and cultural successes among the masses, and the mobilization of workers, kolkhoz workers, and the intelligentsia were the reasons behind the freeing of millions of people from the influence of religion and religious sects.

In our republic today, any measure regarding antireligious propaganda in works, factories, establishments, kolkhozes, and sovkhozes will widen the atheist (?world outlook) of the Soviet man and will create in him a hatred and resentment of religion and superstitions. In particular, education in secondary schools and institutions of higher education, party and Komsomol [words indistinct], atheist clubs, [words indistinct] (?universities), atheist universities, lectures and talks, seminars, and other forms of antireligious propaganda provide broad opportunities for people to consciously realize the reactionary nature of religion.

In recent years, antireligious propaganda has been steadily expanding in the towns and villages of the republic and its fruits have helped the formation of atheist beliefs in young people more than ever before. In our country, including in Tajikistan, every condition has been prepared to carry out scientific atheist propaganda among the broad masses of people. The national education system, party and Komsomol political education, [word indistinct] propaganda, universities, the state press, radio and television, schools, political literature, cultural and enlightenment institutions, cinema, theater, literature and industry, [word indistinct] of sport, talks, and other effective ideological methods have been employed to implement this task. The Communist Party and the Soviet Government have assigned the task to party, soviet, and Komsomol organizations and ideological workers to educate the Soviet man with the lofty ideals of communism and the principles of scientific atheism, and to nurture their endless loyalty to the teachings of Marxism-Leninism. The 26th CPSU Congress and the subsequent plenums of the CPSU Central Committee, and the 19th and 20th Congresses of the Tajik Communist Party put forward the need for further accelerating scientific and atheistic propaganda and pointed out the effective way of carrying it out. The 20th Congress of the Tajik Communist Party stated: Party organizations have a duty to teach about the resolute struggle against superstition and other traditions and customs of the past and the observance of communist ethics.

At present in our republic, 3,084 general secondary schools, 409 preschool establishments, 10 institutions of higher education, 105 special secondary schools, vocational and technical schools, 4,275 public libraries, clubs, people's theaters, cultural and rest-gardens and museums are taking valuable part in the atheist education of workers. The role of the House of Scientific Atheism of the republic's Knowledge Society in speeding up atheist propaganda is not small. At the initiative of the House of Scientific Atheism, scientific atheist propaganda has steadily increased among the workers of the republic's towns and villages in recent years and in this connection, scientific and theoretical conferences, question and answer evenings, [word indistinct] antireligious literature, individual talks, etc, are being held effectively. The education of workers in scientific atheism and the nurturing of communist beliefs in them are being carried out at a time of irreconcilable struggle between bourgeois and socialist ideologies. V.I. Lenin (?realized) the need for this struggle and wrote: Bourgeois ideology or socialist ideology; there is no middle road.

The Communist Party, accepting this teaching of great Lenin, always pursues an irreconcilable struggle against bourgeois ideology. The Communist Party's struggle against bourgeois ideology in our country has resulted in great achievements. Now, the new man possesses a communist world outlook, ethics, beliefs, loyalty, culture, and enlightenment.

Murakhovskiy Presents Prizes to Tractor Drivers

[TASS report: "For the Successors of Pasha Angelina"]

[Excerpts] The traditions of the shock workers of the first 5-year plans are continued today by many of the country's female machine operators, who are setting examples of highly productive labor on kolkhozes and sovkhozes. The 30 winners of the 1985 all-union socialist competition who achieved the effective use of equipment, the improvement of the quality of work, and the saving of resources have been awarded prizes named for the renowned tractor driver Praskovya Nikitichna Angelina.

V.S. Murakhovskiy, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and chairman of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee, presented the prizes 13 March. Warmly congratulating the recipients, he wished them successes in fulfilling the decisions of the 27th party congress.

Briefs

Azerbaijan Ceremony — A literary and cultural evening was organized in the Azerbaijan SSR State Academic Drama Theater Hall last night to mark the 80th birthday anniversary of Suleyman Rustam, a popular poet and socialist work hero. Comrade Kyamran Bagirov, first secretary of the Azerbaijan Communist Party Central Committee, and other party and government leaders attended the jubilant ceremony. Popular poet Bakhtiyar Vahabzade spoke about Suleyman Rustam's life and creative work. Geydar Aliyev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers Presidium, sent a congratulatory telegram to the meeting. Silayev Outlines Machine Building Bureau Tasks

[Interview with I.S. Silayev, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, by B. Konovalov under the rubric "27th CPSU Congress: Strategy of Growth": "The Tasks of the Bureau for Machine Building" — place, date not given]

[Text] Question: Ivan Stepanovich, a Bureau for Machine Building was set up under the USSR Council of Ministers in the course of the restructuring of the national economy which is currently under way, and you have been instructed to head it. The 27th CPSU Congress decisions assigned it big and responsible tasks. On what principles is the bureau's work built?

Answer: The organizational period is now approaching completion. It was decided that the bureau, which is intended to coordinate and manage the activity of machine building sectors, should not be too large. It will not be a ministerial "superstructure" but an organ whose purpose is to enhance the role of the state in managing the machine building sectors and to implement a unified technological policy. There is an urgent need for such an organ. This is why the bureau's organizational structure is functional, ensuring the management of groups of sectors producing related equipment for, say, the agro-industrial and the fuel and energy complexes.

The bureau began its work with the implementation of directives concerning changes in the management structure of machine building. In the course of this restructuring, the numerical strength of the management apparatus was reduced and the all-union industrial associations which were part of the ministries were abolished. This strengthens the independence and responsibility of the actual producing component — the production and science-and-production associations. It is planned to create 430 production associations and 150 science-and-production associations in the machine building sectors. This will make it possible to organize work in the ministries according to the two-tier system of management, under which production associations and science-and-production associations must have direct links to deputy ministers, and also to the functional administrations — technical, financial, and planning. This means that associations will be free of petty departmental supervision, while the leadership of ministries will be able to concentrate on the solution of major fundamental problems.

Today the enterprises working under the two-tier system of management are already producing more than 50 percent of all machine building output. A number of sectors — the Ministry of Power Machine Building and the Ministry of Construction, Road, and Municipal Machine Building — have transferred entirely to the two-tier system of management.

Question: Science plays a special role in raising the standard of machine building. The machine building complex is now being served by a large number of institutes and design and planning organizations. But the return is still small, and the standard of development projects is poor. What measures will you implement to enhance the efficiency of science?

Answer: As a result of the restructuring that is now under way in science, approximately 75 percent of sector institutes have already been incorporated in science-and-production associations or production associations. This will strengthen the ties between science and production and will reduce the time taken to create new technology. The incorporation of institutes in science-and-production associations and production associations will set in motion economic levers for boosting the return from scientific workers.

The work of umbrella sector institutes must also be restructured in the new fashion. They must seek, conduct research in their field, study world experience, analyze it, determine the development prospects for their sectors, and shape the makeup of new equipment. The scientific subdivisions of science-and-production associations and production associations will engage in specific development projects on this basis.

Moreover, sector science must work in close contact with VUZ and academy science, which often produce important fundamental solutions that can substantially improve the specifications of new equipment or even fundamentally alter its makeup. The institutes and design bureaus under our ministries will participate in the work done by intersector scientific and technological complexes which are in the process of being formed, and also in the implementation of the Comprehensive Program for Scientific and Technical Progress in CEMA Countries Through the Year 2000 along the priority avenues most closely linked with machine building.

In order to raise the technical standard of all our machine building, it is necessary to change the actual approach toward the solution of this task. At present, as a rule, when the development of a new product is tackled, people look at similar products. There is nothing bad in this in principle — all existing experience, including experience abroad, must be analyzed. But if at the start of the development process we compare the planned product with models that are in series production abroad and take them as "the highest world standard," we are automatically building in a lag.

Until now the USSR State Committee for Science and Technology and the USSR State Committee for Standards (particularly at the certification stage) have set the required standards for new equipment. According to the rule being introduced now, the sector umbrella institutes in machine building are fully responsible for the correct evaluation of the technical standard of products.

Scientists must analyze the current world situation, forecast the future, and develop technological policy accordingly. Unfortunately, this has not always been the case so far. For example, when we examined some new motor vehicles and tractors from this viewpoint, it appeared that by the time series production begins they will no longer match the highest world standards in terms of some of their specifications, such as interior comfort or fuel consumption. Measures are now being taken to correct the situation.

In the future the Bureau for Machine Building will monitor the correctness of evaluations by sector umbrella institutes. All new major developments will be examined by our bureau's technical council, analyzed, and, if necessary, corrected by means of directives.

Question: Priority has now been given to the development of machine building as the basis for enhancing labor productivity in the entire national economy. The 27th CPSU Congress decisions plan a substantial acceleration of its growth rate and a sharp improvement in the quality of machine building output. What strategy are you elaborating to achieve these goals?

Answer: The 27th CPSU Congress criticized quite sharply the quality of output by machine building sectors and noted the poor reliability of many machines and mechanisms. Our bureau's attention is focused on these questions.

The following strategy has been chosen: that equipment shortcomings should be brought to light not by the consumer, which is rather expensive for the country, but by its creator and producer. There are modern methods making this possible, and they are well known. They include model-building and trials at test sites which reproduce standard conditions of use and extreme external effects. A different tradition has hitherto dominated many sectors — make a prototype and an experimental consignment and conduct trials under field conditions; this will bring everything to light, it is claimed. But what can be brought to light during, for example, harvest time which lasts only 2 weeks?

In our view, it is necessary to adopt more boldly the experience of the aviation and space industry and to have test centers supply all the necessary data regarding the reliability of machines in the process of design and manufacture and at the post-assembly stage. All the conditions which may be encountered during future use ought to be simulated at the test sites — hot and cold weather, shock labor work loads, dust, vibration — to put it briefly everything that may affect the reliable functioning of machines and mechanism. We must approach series production with open eyes, having complete information about the features of machines.

Such restructuring has already begun in the work of many machine building sectors. For example, a complex of text sites for the "Don" combine harvester is being created under the All-Union Institute for Agricultural Machine Building. The task we are setting is to conduct comprehensive test site checks and field trials in order to be certain that the series-produced "Don" combine harvester will work without breakdown during the harvesting period.

Test site trials must become the main ones by the end of the 12th 5-Year Plan. The task which must definitely be solved is to guarantee the expected reliability even before series production begins.

Of course, very much depends on the way in which any model, even the best single prototype, is embodied in series production. Here we intend to rely mainly on economic levers. There will be comprehensive evaluation both of design and technological standards and of the quality of actual manufacture of machines in the process of certification for the top-quality category. Today it is clear that high quality can be achieved only if it is guaranteed at all stages of production. This is why we are now setting the task of making the certification of production correspond to the potential to produce high-quality machine components. This will require the periodic inspection of machine tools and the entire technological complex in order to ensure the required precision of component processing. At present this is done only during maintenance shutdown periods. Between maintenance shutdowns, the poor work by a machine tool is in practice discovered only through the quantity of substandard output. Matters must not be allowed to go that far. What is necessary is strict and systematic monitoring of the condition of all types of equipment. This is already being done at the Volga motor vehicle plant, for example, and this type of preventive work must become the law for other plants too.

Question: But, Ivan Stepanovich, very much also depends on the actual pool of machine tools. There is now a sharp imbalance between deliveries of new machine tools and the scrapping of obsolete ones. Equipment renewal is progressing very slowly. What is the way out of this situation?

Answer: Yes, the country's pool of machine tools is continuing to grow but, unfortunately, not only on the basis of the latest machine tools. It was justifiably remarked at the congress that our country now has more machine tools than machine tool operators. This situation must be resolutely altered, because it results in the operational part of fixed capital being highly underutilized and we are simply immobilizing capital investments.

The renewal process must occur from two directions. There must be energetic introduction of new productive and robotized equipment making it possible to organize multi-machine operation and to have at least the night shift operating without human intervention. On the other hand, obsolete equipment must be even more energetically withdrawn from current production.

This has already been written into our plans. Emphasis is placed on the production of new types of more productive and efficient technological equipment. There will be a simultaneous reduction of the number of obsolete equipment, basically universal machine tools. Already in 1986, for example, the Ministry of the Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry will produce 130,000 machine tools, which is 20,000 fewer than last year. But to compensate for this, their total productivity will be higher than that of last year's 150,000 machine tools.

At the same time, while only small quantities of old and worn-out equipment were written off in the past, renewal will be sharply accelerated now. A major single-occasion write-off of obsolete equipment is planned for 1986. Annual write-offs in the future will be 2-2.5 times higher than in the 11th 5-Year Plan.

Question: It is fair to say that machine tool building is the main bearer of technology in machine building. Unfortunately, the main attention in our country is focused on the development of metal-cutting equipment. It is becoming increasingly automated and productive; yet even so, much metal goes into swarf. How is this situation to be changed?

Answer: Unfortunately this is true. Metal-cutting equipment is traditionally at the focus of attention of the Ministry of the Machine Tool and Tool Building Industry. It is necessary to break with this attitude; much more attention must be devoted to methods of plastic deformation, metal extrusion of finished products under high pressure, and other waste-free technologies. Equipment for this purpose must be rapidly created.

The necessary prerequisites do exist. Now it is up to the machine tool builders. Good powders are now avaliable for the molding of complex components without any resulting swarf. There is, however, a shortage of good automated pressing equipment for powder technology. Because of the lack of necessary equipment, machine building is still making inadequate use of laser technology for the processing and hardening of key components.

It is necessary to create more quickly equipment for metal-saving technologies. Our ministries are vastly in arrears to the country in this respect, also. The bureau is working on these questions. We perceive our bureau's task as being to accelerate the priority development of the output of equipment that would ensure the materialization of resource-saving technologies.

Question: Unfortunately, the capacities of enterprises producing output for general machine building purposes are still underdeveloped. Specialization in this sphere promises great benefits. Furthermore, the sector's independent development has resulted in the very slow unification and standardization of machines and mechanisms produced by the various ministries. Interdepartmental barriers are too powerful. What measures are being planned to change this situation?

Answer: Yes, there are vast hidden reserves here to accelerate the development of machine building. The 5-year plans are now being finalized. The bureau's most important task is to ensure a reliable "linkup" between machine building ministries. The damage resulting from lack of departmental coordination is still great.

It is necessary to create major intersector and automated production units which would work for all 11 ministries. We are working on such a program. It will be drawn up in the second half of 1986. It will, however, be necessary to demolish quite a few departmental barriers, and we firmly intend to do so. Here and there we have already managed to pool ministries' efforts for the solution of tasks that are vitally important for the country.

The problem of creating efficient machines for railroad track maintenance, for example is now very urgent. It has been decided that this equipment will be produced as a result of the elimination of interdepartmental "lines of demarcation." We are organizing specialized production of standardized components at enterprises under the jurisdiction of several ministries, while the umbrella sector — the Ministry of Heavy and Transport Machine Building — will develop capacities for assembling the rolling stock.

As for the standardization of products made by various ministries, we are only just beginning this work, while being perfectly aware of its importance. The task has been set, for example, of manufacturing piston rings for the engines of different types of vehicles — motor vehicles, tractors, combine harvesters.... It is now planned to standardize them. Specialized production will be concentrated basically in two enterprises. They will produce piston rings for all motor vehicles, combine harvesters, and tractors. Matters are now being held up by machine tool building. The problem of creating high-precision and highly productive automatic lines has arisen. We have decided that Moscow's 50-Letiye SSSR automatic lines plant will play the main role in the production of this equipment.

Hitherto it has been rather complex to organize production sharing and standardization, but we are at long last discovering a common language with the ministries. If need be, we can also make decisions in the form of directives. The bureau is empowered to issue government instructions for the solution of specific questions concerning the activity of the entire machine buulding complex.

Question: Will we see, at long last, a simplification of the procedure for formulating documentation for the production of new machine tools and other machines? After all, under current regulations it is necessary to collect about 100 concurring and confirming signatures for every project....

Answer: Yes. The USSR Council of Ministers resolution "On Improving Procedures for the Elaboration and Coordination of Technical Documentation During the Creation and Putting Into Production of New (Modernized) Machine Building Products" was published last January. This resolution eliminated the need to collect a multiplicity of signatures.

The development engineer [razrabotchik] and the client are now the key figures in the process of creating new machines. But their responsibility has been enhanced. The client is no less responsible than the development engineer for high technical standards. The evaluation of the equipment that has been created will be carried out by an independent state commission of experts.

At present development engineers are largely prevented from aiming for high technical standards in their products by the inertia of partners who have to supply various materials or components. It often happens that the design engineer writes: I would like to use your materials, but they must function under such-and-such conditions. The answer is: No, our materials are not suitable for these conditions. And that is all.... Consequently, he is forced to use old-fashioned materials and components which, of course, reduces the standard of new equipment. Now, however, having received the request for materials and components from the main product's design engineer, the partners must confirm their acceptance and, if necessary, commission supplementary work or even a completely new development project. A contract based on the request must be signed within 1 month. Our task is to implement this directive more swiftly.

The government resolution reinforces the contractual basis of relations between client and development engineer. Essentially it gives consumer-orientation the force of law. Now the manufacturer of new equipment knows that the client will monitor his work and will aim to ensure the fulfillment of set conditions, because he is responsible to the state for this.

Question: We are now suffering great losses due to the lack of equipment design competitions and competitive trials of machines that have been created. We have only a few test sites and essentially lack a well-organized machinery for equipment evaluation by state experts. Let us recall that during the difficult war years, despite the fact that our resources and potential were limited, several aviation design bureaus developed fighter prototypes of their own. Only the two which won the competitive contest went into series production. Why is it that now, when we have considerably more resources and funds, we have essentially abandoned competitive contests and have left matters in the hands of umbrella organizations?

Answer: We do have a competition system to a certain extent. Recently, for example, the order to develop engines for future passenger aircraft was deliberately placed with two design bureaus in order to pick the best and more economical solution.

Generally speaking, the country's design bureaus and institutes have their well-established profile and specialization — and there is no getting away from this. But wherever their potential overlaps, there is good reason to organize competitions, particularly in view of the fact that we always have a competitor — foreign firms — and our equipment is always compared against their products.

In my view, there is a particularly urgent need for all-union competitions in the spheres which lag behind world standards. This will not be eliminated by administrative measures alone. Creative competition can rapidly resolve the problem. Therefore, it is necessary to give some thought as to how and in which spheres the competitive system of work should be organized. This work will definitely be useful.

The country's economic growth rates depend on machine building to a decisive extent. And it is natural that the problems of machine building development were analyzed comprehensively and in depth at the 27th CPSU Congress. We regard the provisions and conclusions in the keynote reports and delegates' proposals and criticisms directed at machine builders as a guide to action and are embarking on their implementation.

Academician Aganbegyan Interviewed on Economy

Viennese Article

AU112153 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German
11 Mar 86 p 3

[Erich Feichtinger report from Moscow]

[Text] The party congress reports given by Mikhail Gorbachev and Nikolay Ryzhkov broached several sensitive economic and social topics, including the issue of wages and prices. We asked Abel Aganbegyan, member of the USSR Academy of Sciences and one of the most prominent economists in the USSR, about his opinion on these remarks. Ryzhkov, for instance, said it is "of outstanding importance to raise the efficiency of the wage system." He demanded: "The earnings of each employee must strictly correspond to the results of his work." In his Political Report Gorbachev said the state's wage policy "must guarantee strict dependence of wages on quality and quantity of work."

Aganbegyan's comments on this: "The economic experiment has already changed the creation of wage funds. Enterprises receive an additional 0.4 percent per 1 percent of productivity growth for the wage fund and the rights of the enterprises in allocating the wage fund are being expended. Extra allowances of up to 30 percent can be granted."

Increasing Wages by 25 to 30 Percent

In many sectors tariffs and wages were fixed 10 to 15 years ago. In the meantime, certain adjustments and a leveling process were carried out, Aganbegyan says. Now it is envisaged to increase wages in production by 25 to 30 percent over the next 5 years. This is, however, not going to be done at the cost of the budget, but out of the enterprises' own resources. The planned wage increases in the nonproduction sector will, of course, be financed by the state budget.

And the prices? Here Gorbachev announced they must "become an active instrument of economic and social policy." Aganbegyan: "In the June session of the Central Committee a radical change was discussed. The direction of price changes has already been determined. In this process, the social necessity of the product must be taken into account, then quality, technical level, and several other factors."

The Soviet price system is very complicated. There are, after all, 20 million different products and goods. "It takes years to prepare a price reform; thus, there will be no such reform in the near future. As of January percentage bonuses for best quality or reductions for bad products on the basis of the existing prices have, however, been introduced."

All this only applies to industrial and wholesale prices. What about retail prices? "In the opinion of many scientists these prices also have to be improved. But we do not plan any more profound reforms in the near future. A price rise for bread, meat, and milk, which cost the state millions in subsidies, has been discussed. In case of a price increase, a compensation would, however, be granted so that the population's real income would not be affected. I would like to emphasize that this is not the official position, but the opinion of individual scientists."

And your personal opinion? "I think the price system should be radically changed. State subsidies should be abolished — except for those concerning goods for children, pharmaceuticals, and books."

Revitalization of Small Business

Abroad they always speak of imminent unemployment in the USSR. How does this appear in connection with intensification? "The majority of those workers who have to do monotonous, dirty, unattractive work are older people, who only attended a primary school. We are already wondering who will replace them. Even for very high wages the young people are not willing to do this work. With the new technology we want to make labor superfluous in these particular fields. New, young employees who go into enterprises want more intellectual work. By the way, in many sectors the enterprises are functioning with only one shift. Therefore, we still have enough jobs."

A revitalization of small business was also discussed. "We not only discuss it; there are also measures to implement it. There is, for instance, an experiment in the service sector. People are working on a contractual basis in order to repair television sets, for instance. Here there are two possibilities. The first: The enterprise gets 40 percent and the worker can keep 60 percent of his income. The second: They say you have to deliver R100 per month, the rest belongs to you and nobody asks you how much you have earned."

Positive Experiences in Other Countries

Aganbegyan referred to the positive experiences which were gained in the GDR, in Bulgaria, and in Hungary with individual initiative and stressed: "These are, of course, only additional resources. They cannot be made the main economic basis."

The large-scale economic experiment has been carried out in the Soviet Union for some time. What are the experiences that have been gained to date? "First of all, one has to say that the experiment is going in the right direction — the expansion of the rights of enterprises and production associations. Second, it has led to positive results: Delivery plans have been better fulfilled, prime costs have been reduced, and the rate of labor productivity increase has increased. The results concerning quality incease and introduction of new technical achievements were not so good. In general, however, the experiment has not yielded the amount of good results that we need."

Therefore, the experiment must not only be developed, but also deepened. "We need more radical measures. We have to integrate the State Planning Committee, the banks and ministries, and the supply system. The solution: One has to pass from the experiment to the cohesive control of all these institutions. But in addition to the large-scale experiment, there are also smaller tests, for instance, at the Belorussian railroads and in an automobile factory at the Volga, which was adapted to complete internal financing."

Why was the reform of 1965 not continued? "This was in the Eighth 5-Year Plan period, a great period with accelerated economic development. But there were setbacks and stagnation in purely administrative management. Therefore, this reform was not continued. Now we are, of course, faced with different requirements than in 1965."

KYODO Report

OW130859 Tokyo KYODO in English

[Text] Moscow, March 13 KYODO — An economic scientist close to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev says the Soviet Union must take drastic action to turnabout its economy. In an interview with KYODO news service Wednesday, A.G. Aganbeygan of the Soviet Academy of Science admitted that the Soviet economy has been on the decline in the past 15 years.

Aganbegyan, an economic "reformer" close to Gorbachev, said the Soviet Union must take drastic steps to put a stop to the economic decline. In this connection, he said the recently closed 27th Soviet Communist Party convention was a turnabout gathering.

Aganbegyan said new technology has brought about revolutionary changes in production facilities. Investment in the machinery industry in the 11th economic plan — from 1981 to 1985 — marked a 20 percent increase from the previous plan, he said. In the 12th economic plan from 1986 to 1990, he added, machinery investment will increase another 80 percent. He said half of the existing facilities will be scrapped in 1990 and two-thirds of production will be turned out by new machinery.

Aganbegyan said reform of management control is also necessary, citing reduction of central planning, production in response to consumer demand, abolition of medium-sized organizations that deal with various ministries, and more private enterprises as important measures to be taken.

Aganbegyan said the reform is in its first stage at present and will not be achieved for another five years when the 12th economic plan is near completion.

Referring to the introduction of private businesses mentioned by Gorbachev at the party convention, Aganbegyan said private service and repair businesses will rise to the same level as those in other socialist countries.

Touching on the wage system, he said higher wages will be given to enterprises where workers are industrious, save resources and produce high quality products.

Speaking on state subsidies of foodstuffs, which have been squeezing the Soviet Union's national finances, Aganbegyan said authorities have no intention of raising food prices. He said there are historical circumstances involving the state subsidy system, adding that even if price hikes were reconsidered, authorities would take steps to avoid reducing Soviet citizens' real earnings.

Public utility rates will be lowered, he said.

The Soviet Union wants to reduce military spending, because, as Karl Marx said, military expenditures are like throwing part of national income into the river. That is why the Soviet Union has proposed a ban on nuclear weapons by the year 2000, he said.

He also said that the Soviet Union's goal is to develop untapped natural resources in Siberia by itself, but indicated that Japan could expand economic cooperation with the Soviets.

Early March Farming Weather Shows Warming Trend

PM181153 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 15 Mar 86 p 4

[USSR Hydrometeorological Center report prepared by agrometeorologist L. Platonova: "Weather and Crops"]

[Text] Snow cover has diminished over the USSR's European territory as a result of mild weather. It has disappeared south of a line running through Kishinev, Kharkov, Elista, and Guryev. There is no snow either in the Transcarpathian region, Lvov and Kaliningrad Oblasts, or the west of the Lithuanian SSR. However, the soil is still frozen in many regions. It has completely thawed out in the Crimea Oblast, Krasnodar Kray, and areas of the North Caucasus autonomous regions, where daytime temperatures have risen to 8-14 degrees. Winter grain crops have resumed growth there and the buds of sweet and sour cherry, plum, and apricot trees have begun to swell.

Winter weather conditions persisted over the remaining bulk of the European territory in the first 10-day period despite a thaw of 2-8 degrees. Fields everywhere had snow cover. In the Northern region, most oblasts of the Central and Volga-Vyatka Regions, and the northern half of the Volga Region snow cover was in excess of 30cm.

It became considerably warmer in the Transcaucasian republics. Maximum air temperatures rose to 15-22 degrees and in Armenia and the east of Georgia to 5-12 degrees. This weather caused fruit crop buds to swell everywhere. Sap began to rise in vines.

The weather in the republics of Central Asia and southern Kazakhstan were mild. The average air temperature for the 10-day period in the southern half of the Turkmen SSR, the Tajik SSR, and the Uzbek SSR was 5-8 degrees, with a maximum of 18-24 degrees. Active growth was proceeding in fruit crops. Mulberry, apple, sour cherry, pear, apricot, peach, cherry plum, and almond trees were burgeoning everywhere in those regions and in places buds had opened.

The first 10-day period of March was milder than usual in West Siberia and north Kazakhstan.

Mild weather persisted in the Far East in the first 10-day period of March. The average air temperature was 3-7 degrees above the perennial mean, 1-2 degrees above in Khabarovsk Kray.

Pace of Farm Work Increases as Spring Nears

PM141100 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 13 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 2

[V. Gavrichkin "Agricultural Review"]

[Excerpts] According to USSR Central Statistical Administration [CSA] figures, as of 1 March kolkhozes and sovkhozes had prepared the following equipment for work: 89 percent of all makes of tractors; 83 percent of trucks; 97 percent of tractor-drawn drills, plows, and cultivators; and 96 percent of potato planters. Farms were largely supplied with the requisite stocks of seed.

In the Central Asian republics and in our southern granaries farmers are already engaged in earnest in spring work. Over part of the area fall-sown crops have wintered poorly and need extra attention and even reseeding. For this reason, the amount of spring field work is trebled in some places. Under these conditions, it is the skill and organization of labor collectives and a high level of preparedness which will determine success.

Whereas, in the Ukraine, for example, 94 percent of laboratory-tested grain and pulse crop seed was graded top class and in Belorussia the figure was 93 percent, in Uzbekistan the figure stood at a mere 10 percent and 14 percent in Tajikistan. In Estonia 26 percent of the wheat seed out of the batches tested had not been brought up to sowing condition and the figure for Kirghizia was 14 percent; moreover, all seed needs further cleaning. In Turkmenia 16 percent of rice seed was substandard; in the RSFSR the figure for buckwheat seed was 14 percent; and in Kazakhstan the figure for sunflower seed stood at 73 percent.

According to the report, repair work is proceeding quite well. Compared with last yeaer, the increase amounts to 1-2 percent for all makes of tractor and all kinds of equipment. Many kolkhozes and sovkhozes have still not broken the habit of putting off the preparation of combines and other harvesting equipment until summer. A number of enterprises under the Ministry of Tractor and Agricultural Machine Building are undersupplying agriculture with spare parts. Alarm signals are coming from various regions of the country about delays in fuel supplies. The USSR State Committee for the Supply of Petroleum Products must take urgent measures. It is not days so much as hours that count now. Spring field work is a harsh taskmaster and the farmer pays for the slightest mistake with a harvest shortfall.

Kaluga Oblast Computerizes Agro-Chemical Activities

LD101602 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1400 GMT 10 Mar 86

[Text] In Kaluga Oblast an automated control system has started monitoring the application of fertilizers. It seems that on some farms more fertilizers were being used than needed for the coming harvest. Specialists from the oblast association Selkhoztekhnika, using a complex of computers, have now accumulated a bank of information after researching the soil condition in various regions of the oblast. They have already made up agrochemical standard operating procedures [SOP] for nearly 70 kolkhozes and sovkhozes, these SOP's not only include specific fertilizer application rates for individual fields, but also optimal routes for the movement of transport in the fields and optimal fuel consumption levels.

Gorbachev Discusses Vega Project With Scientists

PM191022 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian
19 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

["M.S. Gorbachev's Meeting With Scientists and Specialists, Participants in the Work on the 'Venus-Halley's Comet' Project" — PRAVDA headline]

[Text] Moscow, March 18 TASS — A meeting was held in the Kremlin on 18 March between General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mkkhail Gorbachev and President of the USSR Academy of Sciences Anatoliy Aleksandrov, Vice President of the USSR Academy of Sciences Yevgeniy Velikhov, Director of the Space Research Institute, Academician, Project Research Director Roald Sagdeyev, chief designer, corresponding member of the USSR Academy of Sciences, Project Technical Director Vyacheslav Kovtunenko, Director of Work on Ballistic Calculations, Doctor of Technical Sciences, Professor Yuriy Mozzhorin, and head of the USSR Glavkosmos Organization Aleksandr Dunayev.

The scientists described the basic results and main features of the flight of the Vega automatic space probes. Two celestial bodies, Venus and Halley's Comet, were studied by the two probes in one flyby.

Instrumented balloons were jettisoned into Venus's atmosphere and measured, for the first time, the circulation and meteorological parameters of the planet's atmosphere. Descent modules landed on Venus and, operating under harsh conditions with a temperature of about 500 degrees centigrade and a pressure of 100 atmospheres, continued the investigation. The composition of its soil, temperature, pressure, cloud structure and composition, and the physico-optical characteristics of the atmosphere were investigated.

In the second stage of the experiment, the probes, after 15 months and 1,200 million km of flight, entered the coma of Halley's Comet on March 6 and 9 respectively, and flew by 8-9 thousand kilometres from its nucleus. Large-scale images of the comet's nucleus were received for the first time. Changes in the temperature and other physico-chemical properties were measured. The chemical composition of the gas and dust envelope were analyzed and the electromagnetic fields and physical processes investigated.

Comprehensive studies of comet substance are of fundamental importance, since it is only comets, spending most of their time far from solar influence, that preserve the primordial substances that formed the solar system.

About 150 Soviet organizations and enterprises took part in work on the creation [sozdaniye] of the Vega space probes. Instruments, equipment, and systems were designed and manufactured on the basis of up-to-date achievements in the field of electronics, computer technology, scientific instrument-making, material study, and technology.

A great deal of experimental work was carried out on the ground in conditions as close to real ones as possible. The complex problems of estimating with great accuracy the probes' flight towards Halley's Comet (its coordinates being insufficiently known), ensuring the faultless functioning of the probes in conditions of intensive bombardment by meteorites and dust particles, photographing the comet in various spectres, and ensuring a reliable, real-time transmission of images and information to earth were successfully resolved.

The implementation of the project is of great scientific and practical significance. The new technical means, research equipment, promising material and methods of processing large quanitities of digital information, design and technological solutions are used and will be used in the future development of space technology and in the interests of science and national economy.

Scientists and engineers from Austria, Bulgaria, Hungary, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, and Czechoslovakia played an extensive part in the creation [sozdaniye] of scientific apparatus for the Vega probes.

Mikhail Gorbachev expressed profound satisfaction with the results of the outstanding space experiment conducted by Soviet scientists, engineers, and workers. He stressed that the flight is a brilliant achievement of Soviet science and engineering and a convincing example of fruitful international cooperation in the peaceful exploration of outer space.

The completion of the major experiment coincided with the work of the 27th CPSU Congress and justly gladdened Soviet people, all friends of our country, and all those who cherish the cause of peace. The implementation of the project "Venus-Halley's Comet" and the launch of Mir, a new-generation space station, became yet another confirmation of the peace-loving course of our Leninist party and the Soviet people.

Cordially congratulating all participants in the space effort, Gorbachev wished them new creative successes in the important and noble cause, good health and happiness.

Lev Zaykov, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee and secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Mikhail Zimyanin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, took part in the conversation.

["Cosmonauts Render Mir Station Habitable" — TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow, March 18 TASS — The orbital scientific space station Mir, with Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev on board, circled the earth 420 times by 13.00, Moscow time. The cosmonauts carry on the planned operations to reactivate the on-board equipment and apparatus. They have put into a working order the system for the regeneration of water from atmospheric moisture, tested radio and TV communications equipment, and reactivated life support and thermal regulation systems. It is a day of rest on board the orbital complex today in accordance with the planned flight program.

According to the conclusion drawn by physicians of the group for the medical support of the flight, Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev are enduring well the process of adaptation to zero-gravity conditions. Crew reports and telemetric data indicate that the on-board systems of the manned orbital complex Mir — Soyuz T-15 are functioning normally.

First Fiber-Optic Communications Link Operational

PM131520 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 13 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[TASS report under the general headline "Acceleration Is Slogan of 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] Leningrad — The country's first main fiber-optic line has been commissioned. Using it, railroad workers on the October Main Line have had telephone conversations among the stations of the Leningrad transport center. This equipment raises the development of communications services — a target set by the resolutions of the 27th CPSU Congress — to a qualitatively new level. Implementing the "Intensification-90" program, Leningrad specialists are creating a unified data-transmission system based on the use of reliable, fast, and economic fiber-optic lines.

Radioactive Waste Storage Enterprise in Operation

LD152149 Moscow in Serbo-Croatian to Yugoslavia 1700 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] An unusual enterprise, Radon, is operating near Moscow. It is a unique insulator for radioactive waste. The waste remaining after utilization of radioactive materials for peaceful purposes in the national economy is stored there in concrete depots. The waste will last 300 or even 500 years in these subterranean bunkers without causing harm. In discussion with journalists, the heads of the enterprise said that the experience acquired could be of use in elaborating technical solutions for disassembling nuclear warheads. In this case, their fission material can be used in nuclear power stations, the waste being stored. Accordingly, thanks to science, there is a real possibility of purging the planet of nuclear weapons.

Tsunami Studies Allow Construction in Kurile Islands

LD151115 Moscow TASS in English 0916 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] Krasnoyarsk, March 15 TASS — Experts of the Krasnoyarsk computer centre of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR have succeeded in identifying by means of computers dangerous areas of the Far Eastern coast in the origination of tsunami. Today they can confidently predict within what time interval and to what part of the world a dangerous wave will arrive, should tsunami originate in the ocean. Scientists marked on the map the most dangerous areas in case of origination of tsunami and the places where no waves can be expected. Scientists have carried out a detailed calculation for a number of areas of the Kurile islands and determined specific areas where it is possible to start industrial and housing construction without running any risks. The International Oceanological Commission of the United Nations Scientific, Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization requested Soviet scientists to compile a map of the areas reached by tsunami waves for all countries of the Pacific region.

Turkmenistan Drilling Rig — Installation has been completed of the first Uralmash drilling rig in Turkmenistan, intended for ultradeep boreholes. Correspondent Kurban Babayev reports from the field that the rig is aimed at strata lower than 6,000 metres. The head of geology at Turkmenneft, Oleg Nikolayevich Ryzhkov, says this borehole is to resolve the question of prospects for oil and gas recovery from deep deposits here. Perhaps this research is a bit behind the times; this is connected with the very complex deep structure and problems which arose for seismological prospectors in (?deciphering the structure). Introduction of modern equipment is very important in improving links with suppliers as is reducing the staff turnover by improving people's working and living conditions. Kamchatka Research Vessel — The scientific reconnaissance vessel Darvin has left Vladivostok on another voyage. Its crew is to work off the western shore of Kamchatka. The scientific group, which consists of geologists, engineers, and hydrologists, will carry out the 'Tinro' program for the study of Alaska pollock, a valuable food fish. It is fished for the longest time — two quarters of a year. For this reason the crew of the Darvin will determine the quantity of young Alaska pollock, its migration, and areas of highest concentration. Apart from this, if the ice situation permits, the researchers will carry out prospecting of new fishing regions off the northeast shore of Sakhalin. Major General Censured Following Criticism by Press

[Unattributed article under the rubric "After KRASNAYA ZVEZDA Article": "'Words and Deeds'"]

[Text] "Words and Deeds" was the title of an article by Colonel L. Nechayuk published on 12 January which discussed the fact that in the military construction organization whose political section was headed by Major General B. Shkibtan the attitude toward press criticism and the style of leadership did not accord with present-day demands.

The editorial bureau has been informed by Major General M. Simakov, first deputy chief of the Military Construction Units Political Directorate, that the newspaper article was deemed correct and topical.

On-the-spot verification established that the facts in the article had indeed happened. The political section headed by Maj Gen B. Shkibtan and the political organs under its jurisdiction were still being slow to restructure their working style and methods in light of the party's present-day demands and had not shown proper efficiency and keenness in reacting to the shortcomings noted in the letter from Soviet Army serviceman M. Kakhanovskiy "I Do Not Want To Work at Half Strength" previously published by the newspaper.

The answers given to the KRASNAYA ZVEZDA editorial bureau were very late in materializing and failed to provide an exacting assessment of the cases of mismanagement and poor labor organization at a number of building sites or of the serious failings in the activity of leading engineering and technical workers.

Both newspaper items were discussed at the Military Construction Units Political Directorate with the chiefs of construction and billeting organ political sections and practical measures to improve work with letters, complaints, statements, and critical press articles were outlined.

Maj Gen B. Shkibtan was severely reprimanded for having adopted an incorrect attitude with regard to the item "I Do Not Want To Work at Half Strength" and for not taking timely and effective measures to eradicate the shortcomings that it had highlighted. Colonel B. Chelogayev was disciplined for reacting ineffectively to the press criticism.

The command and political section of the military construction organization has worked out and implemented specific measures to improve the financial and economic activity of the chief of works directorate headed by Colonel V. Dmitriyev and to improve the atmosphere in the collective.

The Military Construction Units Political Directorate has stepped up monitoring of timely and businesslike reaction to critical press articles.

Impact of CPSU Congress on Military Assessed

LD152026 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1100 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Commentary by Lieutenant General Professor Dmitriy Antonovich Volkogonov, doctor of philosophy; from the "I Serve the Soviet Union" program]

[Text] It is difficult to overestimate what an immense role is played by the 27th CPSU Congress and its decisions in the life of our society and how strongly they influence the present and the future. I, as a delegate to the congress, thinking about its role in the destinies of our people, see its abiding significance first of all in the following: The congress has formulated the strategic conception of our accelerated movement ahead, which proceeds from the premise of the harmonious perfecting of both the material foundation and its superstructure. I also see significance in the fact that the congress expressed with immense force the striving of all Soviet people to fight for a most important condition of development: a stable peace and the elimination of the threat of nuclear war. The congress decisions are an exceptional program of action in this sphere. Finally, I would say that at the congress, to sum up the main point, the basic idea was expressed that in order to make acceleration a reality, the human factor needs to be activated to the maximum. This can be done by means of a well thought-out economic strategy, a strong social policy and purposeful ideological education work.

We congress delegates who represented our Armed Forces, listening to the Political Report and adopting the new edition of the CPSU Program and other documents, have understood and understand that the implementation of these grand plans requires, first of all, that the external defense and security of the Soviet people should be reliably provided for [trebuyet prezhde vsego nadezhnogo vneshego obespecheniya zashchity i bezopasnosti sovetskogo naroda]. Therefore, it is natural that our special attention was riveted to those tenets of the congress decisions which are addressed to the personnel of the Army and Navy. It can even be said that in the congress materials the Leninist doctrine about war and the army, the doctrine about the defense of the socialist fatherland, have undergone further development.

I will touch upon only a few tenets. Our party and state believe that the greatest guarantees of security in the face of the militarist challenge of the United States and NATO lie in the capability of socialism to maintain military-strategic parity. Its establishment is assessed in the program as an historic achievement for socialism. The equality in strategic forces, which has been achieved, has strengthened the positions of our country and other socialist countries, and has upset the calculations of imperialism's aggressive circles for winning a nuclear war. The preservation of this balance, the party document stresses, is a substantial guarantee that peace and international security will be safeguarded.

The very tackling of the concrete tasks of safeguarding the security of the socialist state we know to be entrusted to the Soviet Armed Forces. And they, as is stressed in the program, must display great vigilance and always be ready to suppress imperialism's intrigues and rout any aggressor.

In line with our party's demands, the question of maintaining a high level of combat readiness are at the center of attention for commanders, political organs and headquarters. In conformity with the defensive nature of the Soviet military doctrine — and in the party program it is characterized as exclusively defensive — we will never be the first to use nuclear weapons. But, taking into account the perfidy of the probable aggressor, we must always be ready for the possibility of a sudden attack and the absolute rout of the potential aggressor.

The party's program document stresses that, as before, the ultimate foundation for the strengthening of the defense of the socialist homeland is the Communist Party's leadership of military building. In what is the party's leading role regarding military building expressed? Well, first of all, in determing the state's military policy, in drawing up the military doctrine, in the concrete management of military affairs and military building. I would say that this implementation of the party's leading role is in line with the strategic course of the party which today is aimed at accelerating the social and economic development of society and the perfecting of all aspects of its life.

The successful tackling of the party's long-term tasks, the new edition of the party program stresses, is connected first of all with the utmost enhancement of the role of the human factor. By that we understand the broad set of those spiritual and material possibilities which individuals, collectives, and the entire Soviet people have. The creative realization of the possibilities contained in the human factor is a most important condition for implementing and translating the program aims, which are formulated in the congress documents and decisions, into reality, life, deeds, and actions.

I would like to discuss the human factor further, if only briefly. This factor, as the expression of inexhaustible spiritual and material possibilities, also has a direct military expression. Usually the Marxist-Leninist doctrine about the war and the army was always expressed as a moral and political factor. And while, in accordance with the long-term party line, we must, are simply obliged, to do everything to maintain and preserve parity of a military strategic nature, which is expressed in the quantity of nuclear delivery vehicles, warheads, and other military-technical data, there can be no moral-political balance whatsoever with imperialism. Socialism, the party program stresses, has indisputable socioeconomic, political, ideological, and moral advantages over capitalism.

This was only a brief examination of just a few tenets which relate to military problems and which, developed in the congress materials, stress time and again the immense importance of the congress for the theory of military affairs and for the entire process of strengthening the country's defense capabilities.

The Central Committee's Political Report presented by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev contains the following profound words: The Soviet Union's defense might is maintained at a level which allows it to reliably protect the peaceful work and peaceful lives of Soviet people. Reading and hearing these words, every soldier understands what a high responsibility is being vested in him, in his comrades, and in all the Armed Forces. People are building bridges, works, and creches; are hoping, dreaming, grasping the secrets of science; and are striving onward and upwards, secure in the confidence that the Soviet soldier, the Soviet serviceman, will always be equal to the destiny that the homeland has vested in him.

SUPREME SOVIET APPEALS TO CONGRESS ON NUCLEAR TESTS

On behalf of the USSR Supreme Soviet, its Presidium considers it its duty to appeal to you on a question of exceptional importance -- the immediate ending of nuclear weapon tests.

M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, has received an appeal from the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece. They recall that at the Soviet-U.S. summit meeting in Geneva determination was expressed to achieve the speediest results at the talks on nuclear and space arms. The message also expresses the healthy proposal that the USSR and the United States refrain from any nuclear tests until the next summit meeting.

We know that President R. Reagan also received a similar appeal.

In his reply M.S. Gorbachev noted that the Soviet Union will not carry out nuclear tests even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States.

The Soviet Union has thereby acceded to the view of the six countries. This means that seven states are now making an insistent appeal to the leadership of the United States to end nuclear weapon tests. Over 1 billion people live in these states on various continents. They are joined by all to whom peace is dear.

For more than 7 months now the Soviet Union has unilaterally not been conducting nuclear tests. During this time the United States has carried out seven officially announced nuclear explosions and is preparing an eighth for April. Thus, the entire world can see the fundamental difference in the two states' position.

Addressing the USSR and the United States, the leaders of the six countries stated: "You bear the main responsibility for safeguarding our survival." For its part the USSR is fully aware of this responsibility. It is prepared for talks on banning nuclear weapon tests on any basis -- bilateral, trilateral, or multilateral. It is now up to the United States.

The arguments of the opponents of a mutual moratorium on and complete cessation of nuclear tests, it is our conviction, do not withstand criticism.

They say, for example, that tests are necessary to verify [kontrol] the "reliability" of U.S. nuclear weapons. But in reality the tests are carried out for the purpose of modernizing these weapons, upgrading their combat and destructive properties, and creating [sozdaniye] new types, including for use in space. Thus, a stake is being made on seeking to ensure that the potential of mass destruction weapons continues to grow, although those which already exist could blow up mankind and cover the planet with the dust of the grave. They also state: Let us limit ourselves to elaborating [razrabotka] methods of verification [kontrol]. But what they propose verifying is not compliance with accords on ending tests, but the nuclear explosions which they want to continue.

We are convined that nuclear tests must be ended in the interests of all mankind. Moreover, the Soviet Union is prepared to go further. It has put forward a detailed stage-by-stage program for totally liberating mankind from nuclear weapons even before the end of this century. All states, all parliaments, and all governments in the world have been notified of this program. It is also known to the U.S. Congress.

Of course, the Soviet Union, which is just as interested as the United States in the rigorous observance of accords, attaches great importance to verification [kontrol]. Scientists and specialists proved long ago that verification [kontrol] of the observance of agreements on ending nuclear tests and subsequent nuclear disarmament treaties can be ensured by national means and also with the help of international procedures -- and via on-site inspections, if necessary, to which the Soviet Union has given its consent.

The question of ending nuclear tests is today at the center of attention of the world's peoples. Politicians, public figures, parliamentarians, and eminent scientists in all countries, including famous U.S. scientists, point out the urgent need to put an end to nuclear weapon tests.

WE APPEAL TO CONGRESS TO DO EVERYTHING WITHIN ITS POWER TO ENSURE THAT THE U.S. STANCE IS CONSONANT WITH CARRYING OUT THE TASK OF ENDING NUCLEAR TESTS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE WILL OF THE PEOPLES AND THEIR PASSIONATE DESIRE TO ENSURE LASTING PEACE ON EARTH. [Uppercase passage published in boldface]

It is incumbent on our two countries, which possess the largest stockpiles of nuclear weapons, to be the first to end tests of these weapons. Our two countries can and must vindicate the hopes for peace nurtured by all peoples.

The USSR is against nuclear explosions.

The USSR is against nuclear weapons altogether.

But now the first step must be a decision on the nonresumption of nuclear explosions by either the Soviet Union or the United States.

USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium

TOLKUNOV INTERVIEWED ON PREVENTION OF WAR

AU131623 Warsaw RZECZPOSPOLITA in Polish 11 Mar 86 p 3

[Interview with Lev Tolkunov, CPSU Central Committee member and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Council of the Union, by NOVOSTI commentator O. Trofimova: "NOVOSTI Especially for RZECZPOSPOLITA -- the Battle Against War" -- date and place not given]

[Text] [Trofimova] The Central Committee's Political Report to the 27th congress stressed that the CPSU sees the essence of its foreign policy strategy in an active participation in the battle against war. What are the conditions of this battle at its present stage?

[Tolkunov] Do you remember the warning from the congress rostrum? Nothing will be done by itself; it is necessry to fight for peace, to fight indefatigably with a view to reaching the goal.

The Communists do not delude themselves. The common home of all the inhabitants of this earth has now become too small and too fragile for waging wars and pursuing a policy of strength. It is easy to set off an explosion. The reason for increased tension and for a threat of war are not secrets stowed away in the bowels of the earth. Millions and millions of people living in various parts of our globe continue to realize more and more with each passing day that these reasons are rooted in the policy followed by Washington and some of its close allies who bank on achieving military superiority. The rightist forces believe that positions of military domination in the world constitute typical springboards that make it possible to accomplish a social tit for tat [rewanz spoleczny] and to impose systems favorable to themselves on other countries and peoples. Following the line of "nuclear rearmament" since the beginning of the eighties and seeking to realize the "star wars" program in the past few years, Washington actually continues to push mankind toward the chasm of a nuclear catastrophe.

The leadership of the CPSU and the USSR takes the view that in this new situation it is necessary to crucially change the ways of thinking and acting that have existed for centuries. It would be naive now to look for security through improving the effectiveness of the sword and the shield. In the era of nuclear missiles it is impossible to ensure security through weapons and military power. When experts continue to deliberate only on the question of how mankind can be annihilated many dozens of times over by means of the present stocks of nuclear weapons, it is high time to begin taking practical measures to abandon the policy of balancing on the brink of war and the policy of the balance of terror and to turn toward the normal civilized standards of mutual relations and between countries possessing different social systems.

As M.S. Gorbachev said at the congress, the crucial struggle will gain in intensity in the coming years precisely in connection with the real issues of the policy capable of preserving peace. This will be a complicated and multifaceted struggle because we have to deal with the people of a country whose leading circles refuse to soberly appraise the world's reality and prospects. (One more proof in this regard is provided by the U.S. President's reply to the most recent Soviet proposals -- a reply which is full of various reservations and "conditions" and which in fact blocks efforts to resolve basic disarmament issues). The decisive factors in this struggle are the balance of forces in the international arena, the increase and militancy of the forces of peace, and these forces' ability to effectively oppose the threat of nuclear war.

At present two closely related truths, of which everyone should be aware, top the list of important issues. They state that it is impossible to win the arms race or nuclear war as such and that no other choice can be made except cooperation among all countries. This means that objective conditions have been created in which the struggle between capitalism and socialism can take place only in the form of peaceful competition.

[Trofimova] What will be the main thrust of Soviet foreign policy in the coming years?

[Tolkunov] Offering peace to all countries and peoples, the CPSU continues to fight for it every day and every hour. The socialist countries are together with us in this struggle, and peace continues to be guarded by the Warsaw Pact, the members of which are linked by common ideals of Marxism-Leninism and common security interests.

The world of socialism does not appeal to bombs and missiles. It appeals to the reason of the people no matter where they live and what ideology they profess. This appeal continues to enjoy a warm response. This has also been the case with the historic proposals on completely eliminating nuclear weapons by the end of this century and on preventing militarization of space. These proposals were made by M.S. Gorbachev on 15 January 1986.

What is it that continues to attract people to this program? The best answer to this question is the words that the leader of the Soviet Communists used in his Political Report to characterize this program: It is a combination of a philosophy that believes in creating a secure world in the era of nuclear space with a platform of specific actions. The USSR proposes that disarmament issues should be approached in a comprehensive way and that a plan for specific and precisely scheduled actions should be taken into consideration in this connection. The main task of the USSR and its socialist allies is to seek to have this plan fulfilled.

This idea was also expressed by the leaders of the fraternal parties and countries when they spoke in the Kremlin. We must not waste the historic opportunity provided by the Soviet program, the opportunity to completely free our world from nuclear weapons, Comrade Erich Honecker said.... That today Leninist foreign policy continues to provide real opportunities to ensure international security is of tremendous significance for mankind in the future, Comrade Gustav Husak said.... The peace offensive of the USSR and the countries of the socialist community continue to gain in strength, Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski said. The importance of the worldwide forces of peace and progress continues to increase.

Today, it was stressed at the congress, it is more than ever important to find ways of closer cooperation with the governments, parties, and social organizations and movements that are really interested in peace on earth. Only joint efforts will enable us to create a comprehensive system of international security. The leader of the Soviet Communists has proposed a logical structural scheme for such a system involving military, political, economic, and humanist areas. The assumptions in this connection fully correlate with the specific initiatives of socialism in foreign policy.

[Trofimova] There is no doubt that the voice of peaceful forces taking part in the great antiwar struggle is sounding louder and louder. An important role may be played here by parliaments and parliamentarians from various countries. What is being done in this direction?

[Tolkunov] We have noticed in recent years that in a series of Western countries, parliaments are participating more energetically in talks on foreign policy matters. The halls of parliaments are echoing with the voices of people demanding an end to the material and ideological preparation for a new war. Thus, the idea of a nuclear freeze, supported by broad sections of American society, possesses many adherents in the U.S. Congress. The FRG Bundestag has discussed an SPD [Social Democratic Party] motion concerning a purely peaceful use of space, which is also being supported by the "Greens" party. There is a powerful opposition inside the Netherlands parliament toward plans to deploy American cruise missiles in that country. One can mention more examples like this.

The noble aims of consolidating peace lie unchangingly at the roots of the multilateral activity of the USSR Supreme Soviet and its Presidium, and of the USSR parliamentary group in the international arena.

Among the documents that have been approved by the Soviet parliament recently, I wish to mention two. The first of these is the resolution "On the Results of the Soviet-U.S. Summit in Geneva and on the International Situation," adopted by M.S. Gorbachev at the recent USSR Supreme Soviet session. The second document is the message to the U.S. Congress containing an appeal to support Moscow's program for total and universal elimination of nuclear weapons and a proposal for a bilateral Soviet-U.S. moratorium on all kinds of explosions as the first step in this direction.

In the new version of the CPSU Program, the party proclaims a line aimed at consolidating the international relations of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, which includes developing contacts between their legislative bodies.

The USSR Supreme Soviet is devoting particular attention to the expansion of contacts and exchange of experience with the supreme bodies of authority in the fraternal countries. Periodic meetings between the chairmen of parliamentary groups have become a good tradition. In May of last year, the parliaments of the Warsaw Pact member-states called on the parliaments of Europe and the world to participate in a partnerlike way in the struggle against the danger of nuclear annihilation. Their work schedule is also rich with various undertakings this year, which has been declared International Peace Year by the United Nations.

[Trofimova] You are also chairman of the influential Soviet Committee for Security and Cooperation. How do you view this committee's work since the CPSU congress?

[Tolkunov] The committee will continue to work but with 10 times the energy, mobilizing Soviet society to join the struggle against the nuclear threat in Europe. We are guided by the principle established at the 27th CPSU Congress whereby Europe's future involves peaceful cooperation between its states. It is important to preserve the capital we have accumulated and at the same time move forward -- toward mature detente and permanent security based on the process that was started in Helsinki.

The words of M.S. Gorbachev may become a slogan for our work: We must by all means achieve success in the struggle against war, a success that will be a historic victory for all mankind and every person on earth.

BEGLOV CONTRASTS USSR, U.S. ARMS CURB STANCES

[Spartak Beglov "International Review": "Position of Reason and Conscience"]

[Excerpt] In the 27th CPSU Congress documents the Soviet approach to the security problem is raised to a new level of realism taking into consideration the requirements of a modern world abounding with dangers and contradictions. By virtue of the dialectical law on the unity and struggle of opposites, the world has become an interconnected and largely integrated system. As for the nuclear danger, it has equated states in one respect, irrespective of the differences between them: In a big war nobody can stand to one side or benefit from other people's misfortune. If we are talking about the USSR and the United States, security can only be reciprocal, whereas for the world as a whole it can only be universal. Lack of security for one means insecurity for all. And this means that not only nuclear war but also preparations for one -- that is, the arms race and an aspiration for military superiority -- cannot objectively provide political benefits for anybody. Thus, safeguarding security is increasingly a political task which can only be carried out by political means.

Has this voice of reason reached the centers of political power in the West?

Last Wednesday the White House again disappointed the public. The U.S. position on the question of nuclear tests, it noted, has not changed, since the United States continues to gamble on nuclear weapons as "an important element of deterrence for the foreseeable future." However the very next day the world turned its gaze toward the capitals of the two powers with new hope. The CPSU Central Committee general secretary's reply to the appeal from the leaders of six countries -- Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden, and Tanzania -- who urged Moscow and Washington to refrain from nuclear tests until the projected Soviet-U.S. summit meeting is held, was made public. Although the 8th month of the unilateral Soviet moratorium has passed without a reciprocal step by the other side, the Soviet reaction to the appeal from the "six" was nevertheless constructive: The Soviet Union will not conduct nuclear explosions even after 31 March-- until the first nuclear explosion by the United States.

But what about Washington? A new deceptive maneuver was forthcoming, involving a "counterproposal" on the technical form of the procedure for on-site verification [proverka] and a repetition of the invitation to send observers from the USSR to nuclear tests in the United States.

Imperial arrogance and a course aimed at undermining peoples' sovereignty is the only way you can describe the program for direct U.S. interference in the affairs of Nicaragua and other states spelled out in President Reagan's 16 March television address and other statements by him on this subject.

A few days earlier we heard a U.S. Government demand for a reduction in the number of personnel of the permanent representations of the USSR and a number of other UN members at the New York headquarters of this international organization. In other words, yet another attempt has been made to dictate its will to the world community.

So what remains of the statements which the U.S. President made at the November summit concerning his readiness to make a real contribution to the cause of ending the arms race and averting a nuclear war? It is clear to everybody that the fate of the next Soviet-U.S. summit meeting depends to a considerable extent on the answer to this question.

When, 4 months after Geneva, the U.S. President starts to tell his compatriots with renewed force that the fate of every stage in negotiations with the USSR is determined by a new addition to U.S. military strength, reality and illusion enter into sharp contradiction with each other. To put it figuratively, a single escalator cannot operate in opposite directions -- up and down -- at the same time.

News has come in from the United States that public debates on the theme "A Strong National Defense and Arms Reduction: Are They Compatible?" were held at Harvard University's J.F. Kennedy School last Friday. U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger's speech was again in the vein of "the logic of the absurd": In order to promote the cause of arms reduction... it is necessary to continue to arm(!). Senator Edward Kennedy rejected these assertions, including the fairy tale that the USSR returned to the negotiating table only because the United States "has become strong." In practice it was precisely the U.S. Administration that was compelled to agree to this under the pressure of circumstances and public opinion in the United States and other countries. The senator showed on the basis of facts that the USSR has found the requisite response whenever the American side has opted for a new spiral of the arms race. The same will also happen with SDI. This program will lead to futile expenditures of money and resources.

"Even now, of course," M.S. Gorbachev noted in his speech at the final session of the congress, "aggressive forces would prefer to freeze in and perpetuate confrontation. But what are we to do, comrades? Slam the door? It cannot be ruled out that this is precisely what we are being encouraged to do. But we are will aware of our responsibility for the fate of the country and the fate of peace. Therefore we do not intend to pander to those who would like mankind to live with the nuclear threat and the arms race."

The only choice which is acceptable for mankind has in fact been made already by the reason and conscience of all people of good will. It has been powerfully reinforced by the foreign policy strategy proclaimed by the 27th CPSU Congress on behalf of our entire 278 million-strong people. And the future lies with this policy.

PRAVDA REPORTS NEWS CONFERENCE ON NUCLEAR ISSUES

PM201114 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 20 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "To Terminate Nuclear Tests"]

[Text] A briefing for Soviet and foreign journalists on current issues of international relations was held at the USSR Foreign Ministry Press Center on 18 March.

It was noted at the briefing that statements by many statesmen and politicians from various countries testify that the Soviet initiatives set out in M.S. Gorbachev's 15 January statement and in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress meet with the support of the broad international public. Statements by official spokesmen from the United States and its NATO allies are in evident discord with this. As before, leaders of Western powers, and primarily of the United States, are concentrating their efforts on seeking not ways to reach accords but arguments justifying the rejection of accords.

A few days ago the Soviet Union declared its readiness to refrain from nuclear tests even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear test in the United States -- and called for the start of talks on a comprehensive ban on nuclear weapon tests.

And yet the U.S. President, in a recent statement, not only continued to insist that nuclear tests must be conducted, but even proposed to legalize them by the presence of Soviet representatives.

It is well known that the Central Committee Political Report to the party congress put forth the concept of an all-embracing system of international security. Confirmation of the need for joint efforts in the quest for ways to solve regional conflicts is an integral part of this concept.

The U.S. leadership reacted quite strangely to the submission of the Soviet concept of security. A few days ago the U.S. President sent to Congress a special message on questions of regional security in which he again attempted to find a moral justification and provide some kind of theoretical basis for the policy of unceremonious interference in the affairs of soverign countries and peoples. Nor did the U.S. President refrain from crude anti-Soviet attacks, camouflaging the policy of state terrorism and "neoglobalism" implemented by Washington.

A request was made for comment on the statement made by Britain's prime minister in Parliament to the effect that the Soviet proposals on medium-range missiles would supposedly mean that "a certain number of missiles will be transferred to the Far East" and that these missiles -- or so it was claimed -- "can of course be redeployed."

This statement makes it evident, the USSR Foreign Ministry spokesman noted, that people in the West continue to make attempts to distort the essence of Soviet proposals. The January statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee says perfectly clearly that we are in favor of the complete elimination of USSR and U.S. medium-range missiles in the European zone, both ballistic and cruise missiles, as a first step along the path of freeing Europe from nuclear weapons. Attempting to complicate the reaching of agreement, London is artifically raising questions of the military balance in Asia, whose practical solution is envisaged by the Soviet program at the appropriate stage. Thus, matters are being held up not by the Soviet stance but by the lack of political will on the part of the leaders of a number of Western countries to take the path of nuclear disarmament.

WARSAW PACT FOREIGN MINISTERS END MEETING

[Text] Warsaw March 20 TASS -- A regular meeting of the foreign ministers' committee of the Warsaw Treaty member-countries completed its deliberations here today.

During the meeting that passed in an atmosphere of friendship and comradely cooperation the sides exchanged views on the situation in Europe in the light of the over-all state of the international relations and prospects for their development.

Special attention was devoted to the study of measures directed at the practical realization of the proposals formulated in the statement passed by the conference of the Political Consultative Committee in Sofia in October 1985, the final document of the meeting of the leaders of the Warsaw Treaty member-countries in Prague in November 1985, and the subsequent peace initiatives of the allied countries, especially those set forth in the statement made by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on January 15, 1986.

The meeting adopted a joint communique.

BOGOMOLOV ASSESSES WORLD SOCIALISM'S PROSPECTS

PM181250 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Interview with Academician O. Bogomolov, director of the Institute of the Economy of the World Socialist System, by unidentified PRAVDA correspondents: "By the Force of Example" -- date and place not given]

[Text] In an interview with PRAVDA correspondents Academician O. Bogomolov, director of the Institute of the Economy of the World Socialist System, answered a number of questions linked with the development of the world socialist system.

Question: How can the world socialist system's role and place in the international community be described today in the light of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions?

Answer: The congress drew fundamentally important conclusions from the generalization of the experience of socialism's development as an international phenomenon. World socialism today constitutes a large group of countries and peoples. It is a powerful international community uniting one-third of mankind and many countries and peoples following the path of the comprehensive uncovering of the intellectual and moral riches of man and society. A new way of life based on the principles of social justice has emerged. Its distinguishing features are collectivism and comradely mutual assistance, the triumph of the ideas of freedom, the indissoluble unity of the rights and obligations of every member of society, dignity of the individual, and real humanism. The world of socialism possesses a major production, scientific, technical, and defense potential. It does not as yet hold the dominant position in world production and world trade but has an advantage in the dynamics of development in comparison with capitalism. In the last 5 years the volume of industrial production in the socialist world has increased 30 percent, whereas the figure for the industrially developed capitalist states is 10 percent.

As the new edition of the CPSU Program states, the establishment of military-strategic parity between the USSR and the United States and between the Warsaw Pact Organization and NATO was a historic achievement for socialism. This has strengthened the position of the USSR, the other socialist countries, and all progressive forces in the international arena and overturned aggressive imperialist forces' calculations of victory in a world nuclear war.

The 27th congress documents contain a realistic assessment of both the advantages and achievements of world socialism and also of the complex problems and contradictions that arise in its development. Drawing lessons from collective experience, the CPSU Program spells out the general natural laws governing the building of the new society. It should be noted that, irrespective of the complexities and no matter how diverse and difficult the path of the establishment of world socialism has been, one thing is indisputable: The new social system makes it possible to solve urgent problems of the age on a collectivist and internationalist basis. This system possesses tremendous reserves for self-improvement and is intensifying its moral and material influence on the development of modern civilization.

Socialism's historic vocation is to avert war and protect mankind from a thermonuclear catastrophe. The socialist community -- the most authoritative force of the age -- is a firm bastion of peace in the world and the main obstacle in the path of imperialist reaction.

Question: What new arguments in socialism's favor in its historical competition with capitalism have emerged at the present stage of world development?

Answer: Today the whole of mankind is at a turning point in its history since its very fate and survival are at stake. Averting the threat of nuclear destruction has become the key question of the age. This is where the watershed lies between progress and the lethal abyss of war, between hope and despair. In their approach to this question of priority vital importance the Soviet Union and the other socialist community countries display the greatest responsibility, a firm will to seek mutually acceptable solutions, political boldness and flexibility, and honesty and openness in their policy. The 27th congress provides the most convincing confirmation of this. The peace strategy and bold foreign policy initiatives of the USSR advanced by the congress constitute a weighty argument in favor of socialism in its historical competition with capitalism.

In encountering changed domestic and international conditions of its development and a new reproduction situation [vosproizvodstvennaya situatsiya] the socialist world has no intention of relinquishing its historical advantage in economic growth rates and in its ability to restructure economic and social relations in in conformity with the requirements of the present stage.

The Soviet Union has embarked on the implementation of the program approved by the 27th congress for the acceleration of its socioeconomic development, which will raise our society to a qualitatively higher level. Many socialist countries' stable development dynamism and bold plans for the future are impressive. What socialism is doing to exalt the working person, guarantee his social rights, and ensure his active participation in management -- in brief, to comprehensively realize the human personality -- is winning it the sympathies and support of millions of working people in capitalist countries and developing states. But the ultimate outcome of the economic competition with capitalism will be determined by socialism's achievements in increasing labor productivity and mastering the results of the scientific and technical revolution. The implementation of our plans through the year 2000, which envisage reaching leading positions in the world in terms of labor productivity and technical progress, and of the Comprehensive Program for the Scientific and Technical Progress of CEMA Countries Through the Year 2000 will be a most weighty argument in socialism's favor.

Question: Which important new tasks whose resolution is linked with seeking and overcoming contradictions and difficulties are being posed for world socialism by social development?

Answer: As past decades have shown, the development of world socialism is characterized by the existence of a number of natural laws and problems that are common to the countries concerned and at the same time by considerable diversity in the approach to solving these problems and differences in the historical stages reached in building the new society. For many socialist countries, primarily those in Europe, a task that has arisen with great insistence is that of transferring the economy to the tracks of primarily intensive development by accelerating scientific and technical progress, extensively applying its results in the economy, mobilizing all organization-economic and social reserves, and increasing social labor productivity. Life demands of these countries a considerable intensification of their economic cooperation by shifting the center of gravity here from trade exchange to production, scientific, and technical cooperation. In a word, it is a question of fundamental shifts in increasing the effectiveness of both domestic economic development and mutual economic cooperation. And this involves a creative search for new forms and mechanisms for the planned management of economic processes, new strategic approaches in scientific, technical, and structural policy, and the overcoming of inertia in thinking. Reciprocal study of economic management experience and the internationalization of proven forms and methods for solving urgent problems is highly beneficial here. Each socialist country makes its own contribution to uncovering the new system's potential more fully.

Question: Proceeding from international experience, what today is the vocation of the ruling communist and workers parties of the countries of the world socialist system?

Answer: As collective experience testifies, the role of the socialist countries' communist and workers parties is increasing substantially at the present stage of their development. We are convinced of socialism's ability to resolve its most complex tasks. Vital importance for this is attached to active collaboration, which has the effect of not only aggregating but multiplying our potentials and serves as a stimulus to the acceleration of social progress. The ruling communist and workers parties are the driving force of this comprehensive cooperation.

Question: What, in your view, are the prospects for the future shaping of mutual relations between the socialist countries given full observance of equality and mutual respect for national interests?

Answer: In mutual relations among the socialist countries in the long term their national-state interests and common international interests will be realized increasingly fully. This presupposes both the further development and strengthening of the democratic foundations of these relations and also consistent observance of the principles of socialist internationalism.

In improving the mechanisms and institutions of cooperation the socialist countries will continuously improve their mastery of the art of coordinating their interests and jointly resolving the economic and foreign policy tasks facing them.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE MEETING HELD IN MOSCOW

LD170434 Moscow TASS in English 1626 GMT 16 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 16 TASS -- The third information meeting-dialogue of Soviet political and public figures, prominent scientists and experts on disarmament problems with representatives of anti-war organizations and movements of Western Europe, the U.S. and Canada was held in Moscow on March 15 through 16. It was organized by the Soviet Peace Committee and the Soviet Committee for European Security and Cooperation. The meeting was attended by 120 representatives of 114 mass peace movements of various political and ideological outlooks.

They discussed in detail the Soviet program of nuclear disarmament by the year 2000 and the concept of all-embracing security set forth in the statement of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, of January 15 and in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the 27th CPSU Congress, as well as the state and prospects of Soviet-American relations, questions connected with the consolidation of security and the prevention of the arms race in space.

Participants in the meeting emphasized in their reports that the package of new Soviet peace initiatives had met with a positive response on the part of all the true peace champions irrespective of their political and ideological convictions. Those initiatives promote the solution of a tangle of contradictions of the present-day world, open up a concrete prospect of liberating humanity from the burden of the arms race and give clear guidelines in the struggle for peace and security for all.

The meeting devoted much attention to the discussion of questions connected with cooperation of peace-minded forces, the consolidation of their unity in the struggle for the prevention of a thermonuclear war and of the militarization of space.

BELORUSSIAN SSR PROPOSAL ON HUMAN RIGHTS PASSED IN UN

LD141621 Moscow TASS in English 1504 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Text] Geneva March 14 TASS -- The 42nd session of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, which is under way here, has passed a resolution without vote, as was proposed by the delegation of the Belorussian SSR, on measures that should be taken against all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, fascist and neo-fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror. In the resolution it is noted that "in the present-day world there continue existing different forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices which entail disregard for the personality or denial of dignity and equality, inherent in all the people, and of equal opportunities in the civil, political, economic, social and cultural areas."

The U.N. Commission on Human Rights "expresses its determination to oppose all totalitarian ideologies and particularly their practices which deprive people of basic human rights, basic liberties and equal opportunities."

In the resolution there is the call upon all the states "to take the necessary steps with a view of a thorough investigation, search, arrest, extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of having committed crimes against mankind who have not yet faced trial and have not been duly punished."

COMMENTATORS VIEW 'INTERNATIONAL SITUATION'

LD142353 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1030 GMT 14 Mar 86

["International Situation -- Questions and Answers" program, introduced by Konstantin Patsyuk, All-Union Radio commentator; with Spartak Beglov, APN political observer; Eduard Vasilyevich Kovalev, international affairs journalist; Nikolay Agayants, foreign political commentator of All-Union Radio; and Vladimir Bogachev, TASS observer on military affairs]

[Excerpts] [Patsyuk] Soviet people followed the proceedings of the 27th CPSU Congress with great interest. Meeting at a turning point in our country's history, the congress approved the concept of the acceleration of the USSR's social and economic development and reaffirmed the Soviet program for the elimination of nuclear and other types of weapons of mass destruction on earth by the end of this century. Numerous letters, which we are currently receiving, express support for our party's domestic and foreign policies and satisfaction with the results of the congress' work. Our listeners Tamara Petrovna Barinova; the Gribanovs, husband and wife, from Moscow; Oleg Borisovich Dmitriyev from Rostov na Donu; and many others ask us to describe the impact made by the 27th CPSU Congress in the world. To accommodate their wishes, we have asked Spartak Ivanovich Beglov, APN political observer, to appear on our program. Spartak Ivanovich, how can one describe the overall world reaction to the proceedings and decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress?

[Beglov] Let me start by saying that even before the 27th CPSU Congress ended, the following thought emerged in the assessments of a whole number of international observers, including the foreign correspondents I met at the Moscow Press Center: There has perhaps not been in recent times a party congress like it in any country, attracting as it did by its content and its decisions such rapt and interested attention from the whole world. And it is clear why. It is not just because of the fact that it marks a watershed in the life of our people, who have set a course for qualitatively new reference points in the perfection of their society and the acceleration of its progress, but also because the foreign policy strategy worked out by the congress is notable for its high degree of realism; it reflects as fully as possible the conditions in which humanity exists, and sets tasks dictated by an age of great social revolutions and scientific-technical progress.

[Patsyuk] Our country's efforts on the international scene are focused on certain principal points, principal areas. What is the foundation, what is the nucleus, so to speak, of the congress' foreign policy platform?

[Beglov] The congress set out a clear, precise and well-constructed concept of peace and security in the nuclear age. Here are its main ideas. The world has become too small and fragile for wars and the policy of force. The combination of competition and historical confrontation between the two systems with the growing tendency toward an objective interdependence of the world community is the real dialectic of contemporary world development. The course of history demands with increasing insistence that close cooperation be established between states and peoples on a worldwide scale with a view to mastering the science and art of living in a state of proper international intercourse and cooperation. There can be no winners in either a nuclear war or in the arms race. The maintenance of security in the interests of the survival of mankind is a political task which must be carried out by political means. To implement this approach, the idea of creating an all-embracing system of international security was advanced at the congress. For the first time, international security is presented in terms of all its dimensions: military, political, economic, and humanitarian.

[Patsyuk] And how does the policy of the United States and NATO appear in the face of the Soviet concept of peace formulated at the 27th CPSU Congress?

[Beglov] The program which the Soviet Union has put forth for the elimination of nuclear weapons by the start of the 3d millenium was defined in the report of the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee as the central thrust of the Soviet state's foreign political activities in the forthcoming years. The advancement of such a vitally important task has turned into a test of the willingness and sincerity of every government to joint actively in the cause of disarmament. Unfortunately, Washington's first official reaction to the Soviet proposals amounted to a whole cascade of assorted U.S. conditions and reservations standing in the path of specific practical steps toward nuclear disarmament. It is legitimate to ask whether the U.S. leadership has in practice managed to adapt its psychology and its approach to world affairs. Regrettably, we can observe once again a growing lacuna in the West between words and actions.

Remember the words to which the U.S. President put his signature at the Soviet-U.S. summit last November: They stated the impossiblity and inadmissibility of chasing after military superiority, and the priority of nuclear disarmament. The day after the opening of the congress in Moscow, the U.S. President found nothing better than to declare again that force is the most convincing argument that we have. Is this not a return to the old way of thinking, to the illusion that the more weapons there are, the more reliable security is, an illusion that has outlived its time? The politicians of the NATO countries have been bluntly faced with the question of whether they are at all prepared to give up nuclear weapons. The statements which are currently emanating from Washington, London and the other NATO capitals show that the leaders of these countries seem to have become so accustomed to nuclear weapons that in the face of the urgent steps on the path to a world without nuclear weapons, as proposed by the Soviet Union, they are not averse to repudiating their own assurances of their commitment to nuclear disarmament. But the moment of truth has arrived. In light of the ideas and proposals of the 27th congress, the true value of the policy of each of the partners in disarmament talks is emerging.

[Patsyuk] I am holding a number of letters whose authors condemn the policies of the U.S. Administration and its approach to our proposals. This is stated, in particular, by Comrade Khrushcheva from Novomoskovsk and Vladimir Dmitriyevich Petukhov from Leningrad. Comrade Petukhov says bluntly that it is difficult to believe that they, the imperialists, will opt for disarmament.

[Beglov] We do not close our eyes to the fact that the aggressive forces of imperialism are attemping to perpetuate confrontation and to give a boost to the arms race. But another tendency is irreversible. It is increasingly difficult for Western politicians to fail to reckon with the mood of the broad masses calling for disarmament. Throughout the world a powerful counterweight to militarist policies is growing: I refer to the enormous potential of world socialism, of the forces of national and social liberation, and of the mass democratic antiwar movements which have recently entered the arena. One must also mention here the still far from fully realized potential for common sense of a certain proportion of the ruling circles of the capitalist world. As is clear from what I have said, the CPSU's approach to problems of foreign policy combines a firm defense of the interests of the Soviet people and resolute opposition to the aggressive policies of imperialism with a willingness for dialogue and constructive tackling of international issues through talks.

The implementation of the party's foreign policy course will demand great work and effort. But we are certain that the future belongs to just such a policy.

[Patsyuk] And now some other letters from listeners. A number of letters deal with U.S. activities at the United Nations. Lidiya Vladimirovna Pobedinskaya from the town of Ivanovo, and the Mandrusovo family from Smolensk are interested in this.

Others, such as Nikolay Mikhaylovich Boyko, a resident of the town of Staraya Russa in Novgorod Oblast; Ivan Timofeyevich Pankov from Perm; and Antonina Nikolayevna Karateyeva, who lives in the town of Klimovsk in Moscow Oblast; ask bluntly on what basis the U.S. delegation enjoys the right of veto in the Security Council. We have replied to this question on numerous occasions. Nevertheless, more and more letters have come in, and that is why we are again returning to this subject which is of interest to you, comrades. The United States is not the only country that has the right of veto. Four other permanent members of the Security Council also have it: the USSR, Britain, China, and France. This right is guaranteed under the UN Charter. Official Washington, however, manifestly abuses it. It has effectively turned the veto into an instrument for sabotaging some of the most important decisions aimed at averting conflicts and maintaining peace. Judge for yourself: Since the beginning of the year, the U.S. delegation has used its veto three times, wrecking the adoption of resolutions condemning the, by now, totally unrestrained actions of the Israeli aggressors. The United States adopts the same position when it comes to considering the aggressive actions of South Africa with regard to neighboring African countries. Tel Aviv and Pretoria are thus encouraged to commit new crimes.

But it is not just in these matters that one can discern a divergence of views between the United States and other UN member-states. And it is not just in the Security Council, but also at sessions of the UN General Assembly. I would like to note here that the discrepancy is particularly striking in their approach to problems of disarmament. Thus at the last anniversary session of the UN General Assembly, the U.S. delegation supported only nine out of 49 resolutions; it voted "against" 27 times and abstained in 10 cases. These figures and facts very accurately reflect the changes which have taken place within the walls of the United Nations and Washington's loss of voting machines which were once obedient to it; this causes growing irritation in the White House. The constant attempts to discredit the fellowship of nations and to change the direction of the organization stem from this. In order to achieve these aims they stop at nothing in Washington, right up to the violation of international obligations.

The last such act has been the demand to cut by 40 percent the diplomatic personnel of permanent missions of the Soviet Union, the Ukraine and Belorussia at the United Nations. The international public has assessed this political step by the United States as hostile and illegal. The question is being asked with increased frequency in UN circles: Is a country which does not fulfill its obligations before the fellowship and which hinders the normal work of the United Nations a suitable one for the location of this organization?

[Patsyuk] In connection with recent events in the Philippines, our constant listener Comrade Davletbiyev from the mountain settlement of (Germencheg) in Babayurtskiy Rayon, Daghestan SSR; and Muscovite Tatyana Markova ask us to talk in greater detail about U.S. military bases on that archipelago. Over to my colleague, Nikolay Agayants.

[Agayants] Quite recently, in repelling meticulous journalists who were pressing him, U.S. President Ronald Reagan stated, and I quote, out of all the Pentagon's bases abroad the most important for us, from all points of view, are the bases on the Philippines. This admission is forced and very symptomatic, for it very accurately joins the concept now adopted by official Washington of neoglobalism, which, I will recall, declares practically almost all regions of our planet to be spheres of vital interest to the United States. From this comes the striving of Uncle Sam to increase his military presence in strategically important regions of the globe. If in 1933, U.S. troops were found on the territory of three foreign states; and in 1949, after the creation of NATO, in 39 countries; now they are deployed, roughly, within the limits of more than 110 states. According to official data about 2,500 U.S. bases and military installations are now accommodated on foreign soil.

Two gigantic bases such as Subic Bay and Clark Field in the Philippines are among them. The first serves as a deep-water moorage for warships and nuclear submarines of the U.S. 7th Pacific Fleet, and the second as a shelter for strategic bombers. All in all, more than 15,000 GI's and about 45,000 local inhabitants are working there. The direct proximity to the Asian Continent and to the most important marine communications undoubtedly give Subic Bay and Clark Field a special significance. It is understandable why the Pentagon brass hats get so hot under the collar about them. Long before the elections in the Philippines, forecasting the outcome, the U.S. journals NEWSWEEK and U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT, without agreeing beforehand, unanimously wrote that in the event of Marcos winning, one could expect undesirable complications and perhaps even civil war in the country. These events would create enormous difficulties for the U.S. military presence in a strategically important region. Therefore, they linked their interests with the coming to power of representatives of the opposition. The stubborn unwillingness of the former Philippines president to voluntarily give up his post caused open displeasure in Washington. As a result, Marcos had to step aside and leave his state.

The new head of the Philippines, Corazon Aquino, stated that the previous agreement on leasing the Subic Bay and Clark Field bases would remain in force even after 1991, that is, after the term of the agreement expires. People in the Pentagon are extremely pleased at such an outcome, and now units of the Rapid Deployment Force, combat planes, and military equipment are being transferred from U.S. bases on the Philippine Islands to South Korea for participation in wide-scale maneuvers codenamed "Team Spirit-86." The progressive public of countries of the Far East is following with alarm how the United States is turning its bases on the Philippines more and more into a springboard for U.S. expansion on the whole Asian Continent and the Pacific Ocean region.

[Patsyuk] Comrade Ivanov from the town of Koryazhma in Archangel Oblast asks us to talk about the U.S. space shuttles. We asked Vladimir Ivanovich Bogachev, TASS observer on military questions, to answer this letter.

[Bogachev] To start with, a few words about the technical characteristics of the ship. Its chief peculiarity is that the shuttle is a reusable ship and is intended for 100 flights. After the Challenger catastrophe three ships of this series remain in the United States.

[Patsyuk] And now, what about the purpose of these ships.

[Bogachev] The space shuttle program occupies a large place in U.S. plans for "star wars," and in general nobody hides this. The reusable ships particularly have to fulfill tasks in carrying out reconnaissance and in intercepting the satellites of the other side. During the Challenger flight in 1983, the astronauts carried out corresponding tests, and with the help of a 15-meter long mechanical arm, they removed a U.S. satellite from orbit. It is also planned to use the ships for delivering military satellites and elements of strike space weapons into orbit. The possibilities of the ships as means for destroying space installations and as means for deploying [razmeshcheniye] space mines in near-earth space are being studied. The Pentagon's space caddies [izvozchiki] as the shuttle is called in America, can be adapted for inflicting strikes on especially important strategic targets on earth.

[Patsyuk] That is, in other words, these ships to a great extent will be carrying out military tasks, and with their help the United States is pursuing a quite definite aim. Is that not it, Vladimir Ivanovich?

[Bogachev] Yes, quite right, Konstantin Nikolayevich. One of the shuttle commanders, U.S. Air Force Colonel Jack Lousma, stated straightforwardly: Space is a place from which the whole world can be held in fear.

U.S. observer Jack Anderson noted that with the help of the space shuttle program the United States intends to ensure its strategic superiority. But through an irony of fate, the shuttles which are called on to demonstrate the technical feasibility of the U.S. "star wars" program, have shown just how dangerous the militarization of space is to mankind. I am thinking of the Challenger catastrophe with the astronauts on board.

[Patsyuk] Our country, as we know, proposes a different space program.

[Bogachev] Yes. From the very beginning of the space era, the Soviet Union has spoken out and continues to speak out for the use of space only for peaceful aims. Our country has put forth a wide-scale program for its peaceful development. There is no room for weapons in space. Near-earth space should not become an arena for the arms race. In contrast to the United States, our country proposes "star peace", not "star wars". The present flight of Soviet cosmonauts will become another contribution to the peaceful development of space. The remarkable achievements of the human mind should serve not the aims of the destruction of the world's civilization, but the aims of its progress.

WORLD LEADERS CONGRATULATE GORBACHEV ON ELECTION

[Unattributed report: "Congratulations to Comrade M.S Gorbachev on His Election as CPSU Central Committee General Secretary"]

[Text] Comrade M.S. Gorbachev has received numerous telegrams and letters containing cordial congratulations on his election as general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee by the 27th CPSU Congress. They have been sent by the Communist Party Central Committees, Supreme Soviet presidiums, and Councils of Ministers of Union Republics, CPSU kraykoms and obkoms, other party and Soviet organs, trade union and Komsomol organizations, public organizations, party and Great Patriotic War veterans, labor veterans, labor collectives, figures in science and culture, Soviet Army and Navy servicemen, and individual Soviet citizens and they express wishes for great success in his activity in the post of CPSU Central Committee general secretary.

Telegrams with congratulations and wishes for success have been received from the following leaders of communist and workers parties and heads of state and government.

Congratulations have been sent by:

T. Zhivkov, general secretary of the BCP Central Committee and chairman of the Bulgarian State Council;
J. Kadar, general secretary of the MSZMP;
Le Duan, general secretary of the Vietnamese Communist Party Central Committee;
E. Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR Council of State;
Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Korean Workers Party Central Committee and president of the DPRK;
F. Castro, first secretary of the Communist Party of Cuba and president of the Cuban Council of State and Council of Ministers;
Kaysone Phomvihan, general secretary of the Lao People's Revolutionary Party Central Committee and chairman of the Lao Council of Ministers;
J. Batmonh, general secretary of the MPRP Central Committee and chairman of the Mongolian People's Great Hural Presidium;

W. Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee and chairman of the Polish Council of State;

N. Ceausescu, general secretary of the RCP Central Committee and president of Romania;

G. Husak, general secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the CSSR;

V. Zarkovic, president of the LCY Central Committee Presidium;

Heng Samrin, chairman of the Kampuchean People's Revolutionary Party Central Committee and chairman of the Kampuchean council of state;

K. Miyamoto, chairman of the Japanese Communist Party [JCP] Central Committee, and T. Fuwa, chairman of the JCP Central Committee Presidium;

A. Vassalo, secretary general of the Communist Party of Malta Central Committee;

A. Dansokho, secretary general of the Senegalese Independence and Labor Party Central Committee;

Mengistu Haile Mariam, general secretary of the Workers Party of Ethiopia Central Committee and chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council of Socialist Ethiopia;

S. Machel, president of the Mozambique Liberation Front and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique;

J. Bernardo Vieira, secretary general of the African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde Central Committee and chairman of the Guinea-Bissau Council of State;

P. Vayrynen, chairman of the Finnish Center Party, and S. Kaariainen, general secretary;

Sean Garland, general secretary of the Workers Party of Ireland;

C.S. Aslam, president of the Pakistan Socialist Party,

R. Gandi, president of the Indian National Congress-Indira Party;

H. al-Asad, general secretary of the Ba'th Parth and president of Syria;

Lansana Conte, president of the Republic of Guynea;

Colonel M. al-Qadhdhafi;

M. H. Mubarak, president of the Arab Republic of Egypt;

A. al-Jumayyil, president of the Republic of Lebanon;

K. Kaunda, president of Zambia;

Maayouia Ould Sid Ahmed Taya, chairman of the Military Committee for National Salvation and chief of state of the Islamic Republic of Mauritania;

Congratulations were also sent by:

I. Zakariya, general secretary of the WFTU;

C. Klibi, secretary general of the Arab League;

P. Tanchev, secretary of the Bulgarian National Agrarian Union.

Congratulations are continuing to arrive.

BLACK SEA INCIDENT MOTIVATED BY 'POLITICAL ENDS'

LD191211 Moscow TASS in English 1155 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 19 TASS -- The violation of the Soviet state border by U.S. warships in the Black Sea off the southern coast of the Crimea on March 13 was a part of a major spying operation of the USA against the USSR, carried out with the full approval of the U.S. Administration, THE NEW YORK TIMES reports today, quoting Pentagon officials.

Those officials, who requested anonymity, admitted that one of the purposes of the operation was "to gather intelligence" about the Soviet Union and its Armed Forces.

To this end the Yorktown cruiser and the Caron destroyer were heavily equipped with electronic sensors and other electronic hardware to collect intelligence about "enemy" armed forces and armaments. In addition, the newspaper says, the Yorktown is equipped with an Aegis fire control system "that can track hostile planes, ships and submarines and can select, aim and fire the weapons best suited to destroy each target."

The Pentagon officials said that the act of provocation had been ordered by the Joint Chiefs of Staff in the name of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. The plan of the operations, according to THE WASHINGTON POST, was also approved by the Department of State and the White House. In the way Washington has actually confirmed that the violation of the borders of sovereign states is a typical ploy used by the USA to collect intelligence.

What draws attention is the fact that the latest act of anti-Soviet provocation perpetrated by the U.S. Administration pursued both intelligence-gathering and political ends. The White House hoped to use it further to whip up militarist hysteria in the country and to secure Congressional approval for new U.S. arms buildup programs, envisoned by the U.S. draft federal budget for fiscal 1987. THE NEW YORK TIMES says: "In previous incidents in which the United States flexed its military muscle....the President's popularity jumped and his policies received new support in Congress."

It is not the first time that the U.S. Administration irresponsibly plays with the fate of peace in pursuit of its political objectives. In September 1983, for instance, the United States provoked in the Far East an incident with a South Korean plane, sent into Soviet air space on an intelligence-gathering mission, the incident was used by Washington, inter alia to justify in the eyes of the world public the deployment of hundreds of U.S. nuclear missiles in Western Europe, which added considerably to world tension. Now, perpetrating fresh dangerous acts of provocation, Washingtonis obviously seeking to "reconcile" the public with its plans further to escalate the arms race and to extend it into outer space.

FURTHER REPORT, COMMENT ON U.S. MANEUVERS OFF LIBYA

Fighters Fly Over Gulf of Sidra

LD192025 Moscow TASS in English 1928 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 19 TASS -- U.S. carrier-based fighters today began flights in the immediate vicinity of the Libyan coast in the Gulf of Sidra, UPI news agency reported. The fighters are taking off from the Coral Sea and the Saratoga. The aircraft-carrier America is also steaming towards Libyan shores.

3d Carrier in Mediterranean

LD200825 Moscow TASS in English 0730 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 20 TASS -- The strike aircraft carrier America has entered the Mediterranean in order to take part in the new U.S. naval exercise started close to the Libyan coast. This has been reported by a spokesman of the Pentagon. Taking part in the naval exercises, the fourth in less than three months, are also the Saratoga and Coral Sea aircraft carriers which are in the Mediterranean today. Carrier-born planes are also taking an active part in the naval exercise. At present over 40 U.S. warships are concentrated off Libya's shores. Political observers of Arab countries describe this naval exercise as a demonstration of the U.S. military might unprecedented by its scope and regard it as a preparation for an armed provocation against Libya.

Pretext for 'Military Blow'

LD192101 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1545 GMT 19 Mar 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Eduard Mnatsakanov]

[Text] New U.S. Navy maneuvers began today in the Mediterranean in the immediate vicinity of Libya's shores. This is the fourth U.S. military exercise in the last 3 months. Taking part will be aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea, which are presently in the Mediterranean, and also the aircraft carrier America, which will enter the waters of the Mediterranean in the next 2 days. Altogether, more than 40 warships of the U.S. Navy will take part in the maneuvers.

This demonstration of U.S. military power off the shores of Libya is unprecedented in its scale. Political observers of the Arab countries evaluate it as a direct preparation for armed aggression. Washington's aim is to provoke Libya and thus gain a pretext for inflicting a military blow against the country.

Moves Part of 'Neoglobalism'

LD191559 Moscow TASS in English 1530 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 19 TASS -- The Pentagon has officially announced the start of new U.S. naval exercises in direct proximity to the Libyan coast. The exercises, which will be the fourth ones within a period of about three months, will involve the aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea which are now in the Mediterannean, and also the aircraft carrier America which will enter the Mediterannean in the coming two days. A Pentagon spokesman has said that carrier-based aircraft of the America will be actively involved in the exercises from the very outset. With that aircraft carrier's arrival, more than 40 combatant ships of the U.S. Navy will be concentrated off the Libyan coast.

Political observers of Arab countries are describing the Pentagon's war-games beginning today as an unprecedented-in-scope show of U.S. military might and as a direct preparation of an armed provocation against Libya. It has become known to the U.S. CBS TV network that these exercises will go beyond the scope of "routine" ones. Washington's aim is to provoke Libya in order to get a pretext for the delivery of a military strike against facilities in Libyan territory.

With this end in view the Pentagon has planned out to stage a demonstrative "visit" by U.S. aircraft carriers to the Gulf of Sidra on Friday. CBS quotes one of U.S. official spokesmen that in the past there was only talk and that this time the naval force is fully prepared for action.

The U.S. Administration, infuriated with the anti-imperialist foreign policy course of the Libyan Jamahiriyah, repeatedly stated that it would "punish" Libya for its "support for terrorism". It turns out, as is being asserted in the White House, that Libya with its population of three million threatens U.S. "national interests" and that only for the purpose of "defending them" Washington has held neither more nor less than 18 military excercises off the Libyan shores in the past five years and applied economic sanctions against that Arab country. There is only one real cause of the USA's strong hostility with regard to Libya and it is accounted for by Washington's endeavours to make the Libyan leadership change the policy of counteracting the U.S. course of "neoglobalism" which pursues the aim of establishing U.S. imperialism's world domination.

ACTING SOVIET UN REPRESENTATIVE VIEWS STAFF CUT

PM191209 Moscow LITERATURNAYA GAZETA in Russian 18 Mar 86 p 9

[Interview with Ambassador V.S. Safronchuk, acting USSR permanent representative to the United Nations, by APN and TASS correspondent Vladimir Simonov in New York: "A Step Back from Geneva" -- date not given; first three paragraphs are Simonov introduction]

[Text] New York -- The Soviet Union proposed to America that we enter the 21st century without nuclear weapons, that we disarm by stages over 15 years.

The American answer was vague. We waited for Washington's intentions to emerge more definitely. They appeared to do so. The U.S. Administration put its own program on the table. For disarmament? No, for complicating the situation. The American authorities demanded a reduction in the number of employees at the USSR's permanent mission to the United Nations, by nearly one-half. Also, incidentally, by stages.

To help LITERATURNAYA GAZETA's readers to get to the bottom of this challenge, I interviewed the man who is at the center of events today -- Ambassador V.S. Safronchuk, acting permanent representative of the USSR to the United Nations.

[Simonov] How did all this come about, Vasiliy Stepanovich? How do the Americans justify their claim to decide for us how many people should work at the Soviet mission?

[Safronchuk] Herbert Okun, U.S. deputy permanent representative to the United Nations, came to us and handed over a note. Every line consisted of groundless, unsubstantiated assertions. They say we have too many staff, and that they are doing things they are not supposed to be doing. These numbers of staff are supposedly "not necessary for UN needs..."

We were not merely surprised at this note -- we were dumbfounded. It seems to have been written by people who have not read the documents signed by our countries' leaders in Geneva. I immediately told Mr Okun that this is an unlawful step on America's part, or, to be more precise, it is completely arbitrary. I had to draw his attention to the fact that this act is directly contrary to the spirit of Geneva.

[Simonov] It is curious that some Americans now seem to be pretending that Geneva is somewhere on another planet. Charles Redman, a State Department official, said in so many words: "The size of missions to the United Nations has nothing to do with American-Soviet relations. We do not understand why this act should hamper American-Soviet relations."

[Safronchuk] No, we do not agree with arguments like that. It not only hampers, it directly undermines the legacy of Geneva and contradicts what was agreed on there with such difficulty. The U.S. step cannot fail to complicate future relations between our countries and the development of contacts and ties. In short, it is sabotaging the results of Geneva. The State Department knows now that we reject its so-called "arguments."

[Simonov] Have you noticed how eagerly the newspapers here are juggling with the figures now? They say: "Your Soviet mission has such-and-such a number of people, but the U.S. mission has fewer"...

[Safronchuk] There is no logic in such comparisons. You cannot compare the USSR's mission with the U.S. mission, which is working at hone. They have Washington, the State Department, and private firms close at hand. I told H. Okun: "You can double or treble the size of your mission in a day, and you do, when the need arises." The Soviet mission is not lucky enough to have this opportunity. That is the first thing. The second thing isthat all our mission's activity is carried out by Soviet personnel alone. Because of elementary security considerations, we cannot rely on the service of New York firms. And, last, there is another decisive argument. The Americans say: "The size of the USSR's mission has grown disproportionately to the work done by its staff." That is not true. Our mission has indeed increased over the last 2 decades, but over the same period the number of UN members has trebled. And the number of UN organs operating in the intervals between General Assembly sessions and Security Council sessions has more than doubled.

[Simonov] What is the attitude of the UN leadership and the secretary general toward the U.S. act?

[Safronchuk] In UN circles, the news was received with great disquiet and condemnation. The secretary general immediately asked the opinion of his legal adviser. The expert's conclusion was totally unambivalent: The U.S. act violates the 1947 agreement on the UN central agencies, and is also contrary to the 1975 Vienna convention on states' relations with international organizations.

[Simonov conclusion] Thanking my interviewee, I emerged onto the street and bought the evening edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES. Richard Gardner, professor at Colombia University and formerly deputy assistant U.S. secretary of state for international affairs, asked this interesting question: How would the United States be feeling now if the Swiss had started dictating to us how big our delegation to the Geneva disarmament talks should be?"

CRITICISM OF U.S. NICARAGUAN POLICY CONTINUES

Kobysh Comments

PM181421 Moscow LITERATURNAYA GAZETA in Russian 19 Mar 86 p 9

[Vitaliy Kobysh "Observer's Opinion:" "An Undoubtedly Lost Cause"]

[Text] A mortal threat hangs over the United States; at any moment it could be sugjected to armed aggression with terrible consequences...

What is this: The "Soviet military threat" again? "The Russians are coming" again?

No, this time the United States faces the prospect of an attack from... peaceful little Nicaragua. I am not joking, nor am I exaggerating. If you will forgive me for putting it in such strong terms, this schizophrenic campaign to intimidate the Americans with the "Nicaraguan threat" has been unleashed in recent days by the leaders of the Washington Administration. "Nicaragua is a country that finds itself in the clutches of a cruel clique of fanatical communists who have waged war on God and man since their very first days," the U.S. President said, to frighten his fellow citizens, in his latest Saturday radio broadcast on 8 March. "Communist Nicaragua puts our national security in jeopardy, threatens our communications in the Caribbean, and, even worse, intends to subjugate the Central American countries to communist domination one after another; that is a sinister prospect..."

What is happening, why this paranoia? The point is that members of the U.S. Congress are refusing to support President R. Reagan's proposal to grant "aid" worth $100 million to the "contras," yesterday's minions of the criminal Somoza and today the hirelings of the CIA and other U.S. special services.

For the CIA, $100 million is nothing, it could easily be sent in through the "special operations" channel which nobody controls, and even bigger sums are sent in when requireed. The problem is this: The majority of congressmen and nearly all ordinary American citizens who are at all well informed consider the present administration's course with regard to Nicaragua and Central America in general to be fatal to the United States. Many of them, not without reason, regard this policy as an exact repetition of the U.S. actions which led to the Vietnam war. And the tragedy, shame, and horror of Vietnam have not gone away and will doubtless not go away for a long time from the Americans' memories.

And now we have the same kind of escalation of lies about Nicaragua as there was before the Vietnam adventure. The Americans are shamelessly deceived about a country where for 43 years Washington kept the Somoza family dictatorship in power -- probably the most cruel, bloody, and corrupt dictatorship in the history of Latin America. For 43 years the river of Nicaraguan blood flowed; under American leadership, the Nicaraguans were mocked and shamelessly plundered at will. Nothing has been forgotten. When that country's people rose up against the tyrant, Washington tried at all costs to keep him in power and save his regime; under the leadership of U.S. instructors, a torrent of violence rained down on the Nicaraguans and systematic mass killings began in the country.

The people of Nicaragua swept away the bloody, corrupt puppet Somoza, just as the people of Cuba before them had thrown out the dictatorship of another loyal friend of Washington's — Batista, and just as the people of Haiti recently freed themselves from the oppression of yet another American placeman -- Duvalier. And then the Washington Administration virtually declared war on the Sandinist people's regime in Nicaragua: On the one hand, they want to starve the country into submission, and on the other they want to subdue it with the violence of the "contras," killers who were in Somoza's own service. Under Somoza and without him, they kill Nicaraguans with American weapons and with the help of American instructors. Many Americans feel frankly sick at the high morality of the administration's course with regard to Nicaragua. Equal repugnance is aroused among them -- and that includes the decent people among American congressmen -- by the truly McCarthyist methods to which R. Reagan and his associates now resort in the attempt to twist the arms of all those who do not agree with piratical, terrorist actions against Nicaragua. The White House calls such people "Reds," and even "traitors to national interests."

P. Buchanan, one of R. Reagan's closest advisers in the White House, stated frankly, in connection with the forthcoming vote in the U.S. House of Representatives on 19 March about allocating $100 million to the "contras": "It will show whether Congress is with Ronald Reagan or with Daniel Ortega (the Nicaraguan president - V.K.) and the communists."

Why does the present administration attach such great signficiance to this vote? R. Reagan and those who think like him would like to use the official appropriation by Congress of these millions of dollars in aid to the "contras" as "carte blanche" for any actions in relations to Nicaragua and other states fighting for their independence. In other words, they would like to be given the "go-ahead" for the implementation of the entire imperialist doctrine of "neoglobalism."

Thus the vote affects many peoples in Central America and southern Africa, the Middle East, and Afghanistan. When this issue of the newspaper comes out, the results of the vote will evidently already be known. Regardless of its results, I may say that R. Reagan's administration has failed with its course on Nicaragua. It has taken up an undoubtedly lost cause: You cannot stop the people's struggle for their freedom and for the right to a life of dignity with the help of killers.

[Text] Moscow March 16 TASS -- Voting at the House of Representatives of U.S. Congress on American military aid to Nicaraguan rebels, known as "contras", worth 100 million dollars, as requested by President Reagan, has been slated for March 19. The newspaper PRAVDA, commenting on the move in its International Review, writes:

Ronald Reagan publicly described the Nicaraguan "contras" as "freedom-fighters," and George Shultz as "good guys" -- this about people, many of whom were officers and soldiers in the National Guard of Somoza who had robbed the country for 45 years.

Now the U.S. Administration cynically declares that "contras" are a model of respect for human rights.

Washington does not limit itself to mere praise for the "contras", the newspaper observes. Tensions are kept hight on the Nicaraguan borders. Following the provocative manoeuvres recently conducted by the U.S. Navy off the Nicaraguan coasts, a new series of exercises is being started near the country's land borders with the participation of American and Honduran Armed Forces.

Washington demonstrates its arrogant force in all continents now. In Central America -- it is Nicaragua. In Africa -- it is Angola, where UNITA bandits, whose chieftain was recently feted in the White House, commit atrocities. In Asia -- it is Afghanistan, whose inhabitants are terrorised by killings and sabotage by the dushmans armed in Pakistan on American money.

Wherever counterrevolution is raising its head, PRAVDA concludes, look for American imperialism.

U.S. TRIES TO INVOLVE CANADA IN SDI THROUGH NORAD

LD191925 Moscow TASS in English 1855 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 19 TASS -- TASS News Analyst Leonid Ponomarev writes:

The U.S.-Canadian agreement on NORAD, North American Air Defence Command, will be extended again for another five years in a ceremony in Washington today, following talks in the White House between President Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. It follows from reports of the U.S. press that the Washington Administration seeks to use the NORAD structure to involve Canada in direct participation in the "star wars" program, named for a camouflage "the Strategic Defence Initiative" (SDI).

During a meeting with Mulroney in Quebec in March last year, President Reagan suggested that Canada should join in the plans for research and creation of an ABM system with space-based elements.

The majority of the Canadian public declared resolutely against Reagan's proposal. Taking into consideration the attitudes in the country, the Mulroney government declared in September last that the national policy and priority tasks of the country do not allow for Canada's participation at a governmental level in research under SDI program. True, a loophole has been left; private companies were not prohibited to participate in those programs.

Bypassing Ottawa's official stand, the U.S. Administration then started drawing its northern neighbour in the "star wars" plans through NORAD. The GLOBE AND MAIL newspaper writes that the U.S. Government tries to involve Canada in the so-called long range planning of the future space and anti-missile defence systems in the framework of the North American Air Defence Command.

NORAD itself has been included by the Pentagon among the most important components of the SDI and is viewed as one of the most essential links of the program of "star wars" preparation.

As to the agreement on NORAD, it contains a loophole by means of which the Pentagon intends to involve Ottawa in "star wars". The clause demanding that NORAD's tasks and aims be necessarily in keeping with the ABM Treaty was dropped from the agreement back in 1981. The Canadian side would like that clause to be restored, but they in Washington have a different opinion to this effect. According to a UPI report, at the present talks in Washington Canada insisted again that the NORAD agreement that is being extended should contain an article precluding Canada's participation in an active system of ABM defence. The White House has rejected Ottawa's wish.

Practice shows that they in Washington have very little consideration for the views and stand of the United States' northern neighbour in such an important matter as national security and are guided exclusively by the United States hegemonistic designs.

TASS CITES U.S. PAPERS DETAILING SDI CONTRACTS

LD181847 Moscow TASS in English 1653 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] San Francisco March 18 TASS -- The MERCURY NEWS newspaper reported that the Lockheed Corporation had secured a contract to the sum of 30 million dollars to develop guidance systems for offensive armaments in the framework of the star wars programme.

There are also plans for the production of laser units that could be used against targets in space and on the ground. According to the newspaper, the units will be tested during new flights under the "space shuttle" programme.

According to the information of the AVIATION WEEK AND SPACE TECHNOLOGY journal, the Pentagon intends to conclude in the current year over 500 contracts for the development and creation of different components of space arms under the star wars programme. Another 150 orders are to be placed among medium and small corporations of the military-industrial complex in 1987. The Pentagon intends to spend on these contracts 17 billion dollars by 1989.

But this is just the visible tip of the "iceberg" of the appropriations for star wars preparation. TIME magazine notes, specifically, that the number of top secret programmes of the Pentagon is rapidly increasing. Not even congressmen are informed about the content and purpose of those programmes, when they vote on military appropriations. The volume of funds allocated for such programmes increased almost ten-fold in the past six years and will reach 8.6 billion dollars in the next fiscal year.

American observers note that alongside programmes of the so-called modernisation of nuclear potential the present U.S. Administration pays much attention to work to create a large-scale ABM system with space-basing elements. As the ASSOCIATED PRESS reported, this policy is sealed in a special directive of Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger of December 31, 1985, on the build up of the U.S. forces in 1988-1993. It is said in the directive that the Pentagon attaches the same priority importance to the star wars preparation as to the programmes of the build up of the United States strategic nuclear potential.

U.S. SEEKS TO USE PAKISTAN AS 'TOOL' OF POLICY

LD191349 Moscow TASS in English 1329 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 19 TASS -- TASS news analyst Vasiliy Kharkov writes:

The visit to the Pakistani port of Karachi of a group of ships of the U.S. Seventh Fleet, consisting of the atomic-powered aircraft-carrier Enterprise, two missile cruisers, a nuclear-powered submarine and two destroyers, that is ending today is fresh evidence of the escalation of U.S. military activity in the Indian Ocean. It is the first call of such a large U.S. naval grouping at Pakistani ports in the history of the country. Previously, the Pakistani authorities withheld consent to such calls. U.S. ships did not visit Pakistani ports even when the country was a member of the SEATO and CENTO military blocs. So the call at Karachi is not just a manifestation of Washington's growing military contacts with Islamabad but also extra proof of the U.S. desire to use Pakistan more extensively as a tool of Washington's neoglobalist policy in South and Southwest Asia.

The U.S. ships which called at Karachi carried, in addition to their regular crews, 4,500 Marines from the "Rapid Deployment Force." The Pentagon is strenuously building up the "muscle" of that force, set up to interfere in the internal affairs of sovereign states and constituting an important element of U.S. global strategy.

The Washington Administration is going ahead with an ambitious program to modernize and expand the system of bases for the "Rapid Deployment Force," on which, according to the American press, about two billion dollars has already been spent. The current visit of the U.S. naval grouping to Karachi is not routine, as Washington and Islambad would like to make out. It is a test of readiness for the bases.

A triangle of strongholds for the "Rapid Deployment Force" is being developed in the Indian Ocean, its apex resting on Diego Garcia and its flanks spreading to Africa's eastern coast, on the one side, and to Pakistan and some Southeast Asian countries, on the other.

Pakistan is being cast in the mold of a staging area for the deployment of that force in the region. Islamabad has already consented to the use of some Pakistani air fields by American planes "under emergency circumstances." Now the turn of Pakistani ports seems to have come.

There are carriers of nuclear weapons among the American ships at anchor in the Karachi port. This circumstance aggravates the danger posed by the visit to peace and security in the region. U.S. nuclear arms brandishing is sharply at odds with the idea of establishing a nuclear weapon-free zone in the Indian Ocean, the idea the implementation of which is being blocked by Washington so stubbornly.

The Karachi population responded with mass protests to the call of the American ships. The posters reading "Yankees go home" and "Pakistan must not become an American base" graphically illustrated the nature of those protests. The opposition parties participating in the movement for the restoration of democracy have characterized the visit as violation of the principle of non-alignment, officially proclaimed by Islamabad, and direct complicity with Washington's neo-globalist doctrine.

U.S. MILITARY AID FUNDS 'INTERVENTIONIST' POLICY

LD191209 Moscow TASS in English 0957 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 19 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Lyutyy reporting.

Program of military aid to the American allies is one of the instruments with the help of which the Reagan administration is going to realize its interventionist doctrine of "neoglobalism." This idea is confirmed by the speech made by William Schneider, U.S. under secretary of state for security assistance, science and technology, in Congress.

He made it plain that military aid to other states is an important addition to the funds spent by the United States on its Armed Forces. His further remarks left no slightest doubt that the biggest arms supplies from Washington go to politically-volatile regions of the world which it regards as convenient places for staging aggressive adventures.

In Schneider's words, the U.S. Administration is going to channel more than half of the funds earmarked for military aid in 1987 fiscal to its allies in the most explosive region of the world -- the Middle East. Israel, the main "strategic ally" of the United States there, is to receive of three billion dollars for military purposes. This, according to Schneider, will make it possible to maintain Tel Aviv's military preparedness. A further 2.1 billion dollars are to go to Egypt in a bid to preserve Cairo's allegiance to the separate "peace treaty" with Israel.

In the next fiscal year, it is planned to spend almost three billion dollars on the maintenance and expansion of American military bases in different "strategically important" regions of the world as well as on military cooperation with the states where these bases are situated. According to Schneider, Turkey, for example, is to receive modern military hardware by way of a reward for putting up with U.S. military presence. It is planned to supply the newest F-16 fighter bombers to that country.

The State Department official did not bother to conceal that Washington devotes special attention to building up military capabilities of the countries bordering on the nations against which the U.S. wages undeclared wars. Schneider said that the administration is going to build up the military capability of Thailand from where Khmer counter-revolutionary groups stage destructive raids into independent Kampuchea. More than half a billion dollars is to be spent on military aid to Pakistan whose territory is used as a staging area for the undeclared war against the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan.

U.S. MAKES ECONOMIC POLICY AT EXPENSE OF ALLIES

LD191355 Moscow TASS in English 1232 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 19 TASS -- TASS observer Ivan Ablamov writes:

The Tokyo money market has registered the growth of the exchange rate of the Japanese yen with regard to the U.S. dollar -- 174.6 yen per one dollar, which is an all-time record in the post-war period. The actual revaluation of the Japanese currency is the result of the agreement reached by five leading capitalist states in New York last September -- to take steps with a view to bringing down the overstated parity of the dollar which caused the flow of capital from Western Europe and Japan to the U.S. to a great detriment to their economies. However, quite unexpectedly for Tokyo, the exchange rate of the yen soared so quickly -- by about 28 per cent since last September -- that it brought about serious consequences for the Japanese economy which had experienced the decline in production in the past three quarters.

The growth of the exchange rate of the yen undermines Japanese exports. The Japanese Government had to take urgent measures to support export-oriented medium and small firms and to come out for a joint interference of Western powers in the money markets with the aim to arrest the rapid growth of the parity of the yen.

West European countries are also deeply worried over the fact that the confusion of the currency markets negatively affects their foreign trade and economies which depend very much on the situation in he sphere of foreign trade.

The impression is that by taking advantage of the New York agreement and deliberately bringing down the exchange rate of the dollar with the aim to improving the competitiveness of U.S. goods, the U.S. unleashed a genuine "trade war" against its rivals.

With the help of it Washington seeks to improve the adverse balance of U.S. foreign trade which stood last year at 149 billion dollars and reduce to some extent the enormous budget deficit. The U.S. repeatedly urges its allies not to waste their energies to internal strife and at the same time it is not above improving its economic situation at the expense of Western Europe and Japan.

It is waging the trade and economic struggle in the world market with the help of pressure and open diktat. It is worth recalling how the U.S. unceremoniously breaks into the traditional industrial and agricultural markets of Western Europe and at the same time puts up protectionist barriers on the way of the automobiles, steel and other goods exported from Western Europe and Japan to the U.S. Washington openly threatens to resort to economic repressions against its competitors. It is not accidental that the U.S. economic expansion was criticized recently at a session of the EEC Council of Ministers on the level of ministers of foreign affairs.

The aggressive U.S. foreign economic policy leads not to the overcoming, but to a further aggravation of its contradictions with the allies.

TASS NOTES BUSH TO TOUR PERSIAN GULF 3-12 APRIL

LD181006 Moscow TASS in English 0640 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 17 TASS -- As the White House said on Monday, U.S. Vice President George Bush is to go on a tour of Persian Gulf area from April 3 to 12, which will take him to Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain and the Yemen Arab Republic. Larry Speakes, White House deputy press secretary, said that the USA has important strategic interests in that area and that Bush will hold consultations on regional security issues with officials of those countries. As is known, Washington, which has arbitrarily announced the oil-rich Persian Gulf region to be a "zone of its vital interests" is intensively arming its allies and using access to military bases and facilities on their territory to consolidate its own military presence in that part of the world.

CANADIAN DEBATE OVER NATO TRAINING BASE VIEWED

[Own correspondent V. Shelkov dispatch: "In Hock to NATO?"]

[Text] Ottawa, 12 Mar -- Canadian press attention has lately turned again to the creation of a major NATO base in the Goose Bay region (Newfoundland). The implementation of the plan would mean the appearance on Canadian territory of the first NATO bloc training complex for practicing tactical air force operations.

Goose Bay is already actively used by the Canadian, U.S., British, and FRG air forces for combat exercises.

While a group of NATO experts has been deciding whom to give preference to (a similar training complex could be built in Turkey), sharp controversy has raged in Canada as to whether it is at all expedient to pawn such a large area of Newfoundland as a NATO base. Peace movement activists warn that such a base, as a NATO base where nuclear weapons will most likely be sited, will deprive Canada of the opportunity to pursue a truly independent security policy and will turn it into a hostage of the Pentagon.

ARTICLE REVIEWS PRC LIGHT INDUSTRY PERFORMANCE

PM191000 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 18 Mar 86 p 3

[TASS report: "Reconstruction of Enterprises"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Mar -- RENMIN RIBAO reports that 7,000 light industry enterprises have been reconstructed in China in the last 5 years. The newspaper notes that some enterprises failed to ensure even simple reproduction during the preceding period due to technical backwardness and lack of local funds to overcome it.

About 17 billion yuan have been appropriated for the needs of the sector's retooling during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, and equipment worth $2 billion has been imported. As a result of the measures that have been taken, 80 percent of output is now produced by reconstructed factories, and production of a number of new articles has been started up. Exports of light industry products have increased by 75 percent.

At the same time, the newspaper writes, the overwhelming majority of the sector's existing 70,000 enterprises are small. They are unable to satisfy the population's fast growing purchasing power. The Chinese press points out that an 8 percent increase has been planned in light industry output for this year. Nonetheless, a certain gap still remains between demand and supply.

SENATOROV SAYS USSR VIEW ON ISLANDS UNCHANGED

OW191129 Tokyo KYODO in English 1111 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo, March 19 KYODO -- The Soviet Union's view on the four islands off Hokkaido which it has been occupying since the closing days of World War II has not changed, a visiting vice chairman of the Soviet-Japan Society said here Wednesday.

Aleksey Ivanovich Senatorov made the comment in a meeting with Eiichi Nagasue, vice chairman of the Democratic Socialist Party (DSP), and Akira Watanabe, director of the party's international affairs department. According to officials of the opposition party who attended the meeting, Nagasue said that solving the problem of the islands claimed by Japan, the so-called northern territories issue, is important to enable the two countries to regain mutual trust.

Senatorov said, however, that any discussion of the issue would amount to a review (of the outcome) of World War II. He extended an invitation for leaders of the DSP to visit the Soviet Union, the officials said.

PRAVDA CITES DPRK PAPER ON TREATY ANNIVERSARY

PM191221 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Our Friendship Is Inviolable"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 17 Mar -- The USSR-DPRK agreement on economic and cultural cooperation has helped to strengthen the traditional bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two countries and opened up broad opportunities for developing bilateral relations, the newspaper NODONG SINMUM writes in connection with today's 37th anniversary of the signing of the document.

The Soviet people, who shed blood for the liberation of Korea, gave the republic material and moral assistance during the difficult years of postwar restoration. Today the USSR actively assists the DPRK in building socialism and supports the republic's foreign policy course which is connected with peaceful unification of the motherland, the Workers Party of Korea Central Committee organ notes.

The Koreans sincerely rejoice in the Soviet people's achievements and actively support and welcome the steps taken by the CPSU and the Soviet state aimed at eliminating nuclear weapons, preventing the militarization of space, and strengthening general security. The 27th CPSU Congress mapped out important new landmarks in the USSR's domestic and foreign policy. The Soviet people have enthusiastically set about implementing the decisions of the CPSU forum, the newspaper writes.

Soviet-Korean friendship is steadily developing now as it has in the past. The Korean people will make every effort to further strengthen friendly relations between the two countries, NODONG SINMUM stresses.

U.S.-S. KOREAN 'TEAM SPIRIT-86' EXERCISE DENOUNCED

SK150404 Moscow International Service in Korean 1130 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Text] The "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercise of the United States and South Korea is now being staged in earnest in South Korea. In this connection, station commentator Vladimir (Goloyoyev) says:

The U.S. side alone is mobilizing 28 naval ships and almost 30,000 Marine Corps troops for this joint military exercise. This joint military exercise is being staged in the vicinity of the boundaries of the DPRK, the Soviet Union, and other countries. This military exercise is being staged with combat operations on the ground, at sea, and in the skies under the condition of a simulated nuclear attack.

Such a simulated nuclear attack plan has been included in the Pentagon's plan. If such a simulated nuclear attack plan were not included in the Pentagon's plan, the United States would not deploy some 1,000 nuclear warheads in the area of the southern half of Korea. In addition to this, various kinds of nuclear warhead delivery missiles and F-16 fighter-bombers are also deployed in South Korea.

Speaking at the 27th CPSU Congress, Comrade Kang Song-san, premier of the DPRK State Administration Council, who led a delegation of the Workers Party of Korea [WPK] to the CPSU congress, said:

[Begin recording] With the U.S. imperialists' occupation of South Korea and their complete turning of it into a base for nulcear war, Korea today has become not only the arena of our struggle for national sovereignty, but also a site of sharp confrontation between socialism and imperialism, between the international progressive forces and the international reactionary forces, and between the peace-loving and war-loving forces of the world.

The U.S. imperialists and the South Korean authorities have staged again the "Team Spirit-86" nuclear war exercise against us in South Korea, thereby leading the situation on the Korean peninsula to the brink of war. [end recording]

The organizers of the current military exercise in the Far East are asserting that their act is a result of the so-called possible threat from socialist Korea. But this assertion is indeed an outright lie and fabrication.

Pyongyang has proposed that nuclear weapons be withdrawn from the Korean peninsula and a peace zone be established on the Korean peninsula. As a part of its efforts for this proposal, Pyongyang has unilaterally stopped its military exercises.

The response of the United States and South Korea to this proposal from Pyongyang was the militarist and provocative "Team Spirit-86" military exercise.

The escalation of this military exercise will aggravate the acute situation in the Far East that Washington and Seoul have created.

PRAVDA REPORTS END OF INDIAN PARTY CONGRESS

PM191201 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Report by O. Kitsenki, V. Korovikov, and V. Baydashin: "Congress Completes Work, Final Resolutions Adopted"]

[Text] Patna, 17 Mar -- The 13th Communist Party of India (CPI) Congress completed its work today. At the final session the delegates unanimously elected 125 members of the party's supreme leading organ -- the CPI National Council -- plus 13 candidate members of the National Council and 11 members of the Central Control Commission. Approximately 20 percent of the CPI National Council members were elected for the first time.

Rajeswaro Rao, general secretary of the CPI National Council, delivered the closing speech at the congress. Our congress, he said, has been held in an atmosphere of unity and cohesion. The presence of a large number of delegations from fraternal communist and workers parties once again shows that our party is an unalienable component of the international communist movement. We understand that in the present complex international situation great responsibility rests with our party for mobilizing the masses to struggle against nuclear catastrophe and for preserving peace. In this mass movement it is essential to unite all those who cherish peace, irrespective of political, religious, and other differences. We will do everything to ensure that our party carries out this responsible task. From the congress rostrum we once again state that the CPI will continue to carry high the banner of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, will be a staunch defender of the working people's interests, and will struggle to develop the country along a path of peace and socioeconomic progress, Rajeswaro Rao stressed in conclusion.

Thirty-six delegations of fraternal communist, worker, and revolutionary-democratic parties and national liberation movements participated in the work of the congress, including a CPSU delegation headed by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo.

Before the final day of work, the delegates approved the CPI National Council report on the political situation in the country and the world and on party activity since the 12th congress and also passed a political resolution.

The political resolution notes that the present international situation is extremely complex and dangerous -- for which U.S. imperialism is to blame. The threat of nuclear destruction looming over mankind has never been as serious as it is today. However, there are powerful and reliable forces in the world arena -- primarily the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, nonaligned and recently liberated states, and the extensive world anti-imperialist and antiwar movement -- which are capable of foiling imperialism's plans and eliminating the threat of a nuclear catastrophe.

Regarding the foreign policy conducted by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's government, the resolution notes that the government follows a course of nonalignment and peace. India supports the peoples' struggle for liberation and against imperialism, racism, and neocolonialism. It pursues a policy of friendship with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries, and its cooperation with the world of socialism is developing in the most diverse spheres. It is opposed to the nuclear arms race and the militarization of space, and also to imperialism's aggressive plans. It also supports the Soviet Union's constructive peace initiatives. As the country chairing the Nonaligned Movement, India plays a prominent role in the international arena.

The resolution condemns U.S. support of Pakistan in its creation of nuclear weapons and the unceasing U.S. deliveries to Pakistan of other modern weapons, which represents a direct threat to India's security.

In the economic section the political resolution stresses the need to comprehensively expand and strengthen the country's state sector and to involve the working class in effective participation in management of this sector. The resolution exposes the neocolonialist plans of multinational corporations with regard to India and demands that effective measures be taken to protect the republic's national sovereignty and economic independence. The comprehensive cooperation that has formed between India and the Soviet Union and other friendly socialist countries, the document states, has helped India to create a powerful state sector and lay the foundations for an independent national economy. This allows it to more successfully pursue an anti-imperialist, peaceful course in the international arena. The Indian-Soviet Treaty of Peace, Friendship, and Cooperation is a reliable basis for this policy. Consequently, the resolution states, it is extremely important to develop even closer cooperation with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries and to rebuff any attempts to undermine this cooperation.

The resolution connects the various difficulties encountered by India in the economic, social, and political spheres with the country's capitalist development. The document urges the working masses, the working class, the peasantry, and agricultural workers to rebuff splitting and separatist forces and to strive to implement land reform, protect the peasantry, and uphold the democratic rights of the people and the working class. In the struggle against religious fanaticism, the party calls for united action with all democratic forces, including the Indian National Congress (INC-I). Particular significance in this respect is attached to united action between the CPI and the CPI (Marxist), which in recent years has yielded definite positive results.

Uniting left-wing and democratic forces, the CPI must act as initiator and organizor of the working people's struggle for their rights and interests and must strengthen mass organizations of the working class, the peasantry, and agricultural workers.

Bearing the banner of Marxism-Leninism on high and uniting the broad people's masses around us, the resolution points out in conclusion, we will be able to carry out the task of national democratic revolution and progress along the path of socialism.

It was with profound indignation that the congress delegates received the news of the arrival of a strike group of ships of the American 7th Fleet, headed by the nuclear aircraft carrier Enterprise, in the Pakistan port of Karachi. (Indradip) Singh, secretary of the CPI National Council, published a special congress resolution sharply condemning U.S. military activity close to India's shores.

A large meeting, in which several hundred thousand people participated, was held in the city at the close of the congress. Rajeswara Rao, other Communist Party leaders, as well as representatives of fraternal foreign parties addressed the meeting. V.P.Anishchev, member of the CPSU Party Central Committee, addressed the participants in the meeting on behalf of the Soviet delegation.

USSR MINISTRY DETAILS JOINT DRA TRADE FIGURES

LD191443 Moscow TASS in English 1240 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 19 TASS -- Trade between the Soviet Union and the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan amounted to over 873 million roubles in 1985, a TASS correspondent has been told at the Ministry of Foreign Trade of the USSR.

Soviet exports to the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan amounted to 550.2 million roubles while the USSR imports from Afghanistan increased by 19 million roubles, as compared with the previous year, to reach 323 million roubles.

Mutual trade exchange includes a broad assortment of products ranging from manufactured goods, machine tools, equipment, motor vehicles, to raw materials and food products, electricity, consumer goods. The two sides signed last (?year) big contracts for mutual deliveries of different products in 1986 and subsequent years. The contracts were signed from the Soviet side by foreign trade associations technopromexport, selkhozpromexport, [word indistinct] and many others.

Joint construction of different projects in economy is also an important area of bilateral cooperation. In the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan there are now more than 200 [word indistinct] projects which have already been built or are under construction with technical assistance of the USSR, it has been learnt at the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations. These include industrial enterprises, light and food industry factories, transport routes.

A high-capacity line to transmit electricity from the state frontier between the two countries was put into exploitation on the territory of Afghanistan in 1985. It was built in close cooperation between organizations of the two countries. The USSR has started transmitting electricity by the line for the needs of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan.

In the course of bilateral economic negotiations, held last year, the two sides mapped out areas, including new ones, for further development and deepening of mutually-beneficial and equitable trade and economic cooperation between the two countries.

DRA COTTON CULTIVATION, IRRIGATION REPORTED

LD192139 Moscow TASS in English 1733 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Kabul March 19 TASS -- TASS correspondent Vladimir Novikov reports:

A new large cotton-growing region is being created in northern Afghanistan. By this spring, the republic's irrigators have prepared for sowing 175 hectares of what was once arid land in Takhar Province, where the construction of a system to irrigate 2,000 hectares of arable lands is nearing completion and housing is being built. In the long-term, several state farms will be set up there to grow high quality cotton on an area of 14,000 hectares.

Irrigation plays an important role in developing agriculture in Afghanistan. Farmers collect two, sometimes three, harvests a year on irrigated lands, the reason why the Government of Afghanistan is paying special attention to irrigation. This Afghan year, wich ends on March 20, a total of 800 million Afghani were allocated for irrigating arid lands. A total of 1,100 hectares was irrigated and water supply of 7,000 hectares imporved. Land improvement workers are a common sight in nearly every region of the contry now. In Helmand Province, noted for its vineyards and other fruit, they are building a new irrigation system, which has already brought water to 3,000 hectares of land.

Under a draft new five-year plan for the social and economic development of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan for 1986-1991, land improvement efforts will get 150 per cent more funds than in the preceding five years, which will make it possible to irrigate another 55,000 hectares.

The Soviet Union renders the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan significant assistance in the latter's land improvement efforts. This Afghan year, the 20th anniversary since the Jalalabad irrigation complex was built with Soviet technical assistance, was marked throughout the country. Owing to a broad network of irrigation canals, this densely-populated region has become a major producer of subtropical cultures.

DRA NEWSMEN'S REBUTTAL ON RIGHTS ALLEGATIONS NOTED

PM171153 Moscow SELSKAYA ZHIZN in Russian 15 Mar 86 p 3

[Unnamed TASS correspondent dispatch: "False Propaganda"]

[Text] Kabul -- A press conference for local and foreign journalists has been held here in connection with the campaign about "human rights violations" in the DRA whipped up in the West.

The instigators of the undeclared war against the DRA, above all the Washington administration, BAKHTAR Director General (M.D. Kavian) stated, have unleashed malicious propaganda against our country based on CIA-connected reports and statements by so-called "human rights experts." The real aim of this false propaganda is to distract world public attention and to justify imperialism's aggression against the DRA and and the bloody crimes committed by the counterrevolution. The West is giving millions of dollars to the bandits and equipping them with modern weapons.

PRAVDA CITES 'CONCERN' OVER UK ARMS FOR PAKISTAN

PM121219 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 11 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Arming Pakistan"]

[Text] New Delhi, 10 Mar -- Pakistan is expanding military cooperation with the West. According to a report by the INDIAN EXPRESS newspaper, the Islamabad regime intends to conclude a major agreement with Britain on arms deliveries to the value of 420 million pounds sterling. In accordance with the planned deal, the specific details of which will be discussed during the forthcoming trip to Islamabad in early April by G. Howe, secretary of state for foreign and commonwealth affairs, Britain will supply Pakistan with components for self-propelled antiaircraft guns, tank turrets, and other military equipment.

The INDIAN EXPRESS notes in this connection that arms producers in the British Isles are becoming one of the main suppliers of military equipment for the Pakistan Army. The Royal Ordance company, in particular, intends to sell Islamabad 105-mm tank guns. Military plants in Pakistan which have British licenses have already begun producing field guns, ammunition, and communications equipment.

Expressing concern over the increasingly strong military ties between the Islamabad regime and the United States, Britain, and other Western countries, the newspaper stresses the threat to India's security and will lead to a build up of tension in the region.

SRV FOREIGN MINISTRY CRITICIZES PRC POLICY

PM131646 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 11 Mar 86 Second Edition p 5

[TASS report: "SRV Ministry of Foreign Affairs Memorandum"]

[Text] Hanoi, 10 Mar -- Today the SRV Ministry of Foreign Affairs published a memorandum on the state of Vietnamese-Chinese relations. The document notes that China has recently unleashed a propaganda campaign in an attempt to justify its hostile policy against the SRV and drive a wedge between the ASEAN countries and Vietnam.

After the total victory of the revolution in Vietnam in 1975, Chinese intensified its military pressure and provocation along its border with Vietnam and used Pol Pot hirelings in Cambodia as an instrument of aggression against the SRV. In February 1979 it invaded the SRV with all the force of its 600,000-strong Army. From that day to this, it has not ceased actions aimed at undermining peaceful building in the SRV, maintains 15-20 divisions in direct proximity to the border, subjects all six contiguous Vietnamese provinces to artillery fire, and has occupied a number of high points in the Vi Xuyen District of Ha Tuyen Province. There have been casualties among the population of Vietnam's northern provinces as a result of these operations.

Having suffered all the burdens of the aggressive U.S. war, the Vietnamese people sincerely desire peace, particularly with China -- a great power and their immediate neighbor. The Vietnamese side has more than once expressed good will and put forward specific proposals aimed at easing tension along the border. Unfortunately, the Chinese side claims that "the political atmosphere for negotiations between the two countries still does not exist."

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON SHEVARDNADZE VISIT TO POLAND

IZVESTIYA on Speeches

PM191604 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report: "In an Atmosphere of Friendship and Complete Mutual Understanding"]

[Text] Warsaw, 17 Mar -- E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR foreign minister, arrived in Warsaw from Moscow on an official friendly visit at the invitation of the Polish Government on 17 March. He was met at the airport by M. Orzechowski, candidate member of the PZPR Central Committee Politburo an Polish foreign minister, and other officials. V.I. Brovikov, USSR ambassador to Poland, was among the welcoming party.

Talks were held between E.A. Shevardnadze and M. Orzechowski on 17 March.

The sides expressed profound satisfaction at the dynamic forward development of the entire range of Soviet-Polish relations. The meeting in March this year between M.S. Gorbachev and W. Jaruzelski was of great importance for determining the prospects for strengthening these relations.

The talks reaffirmed the complete unity of views between the USSR and Poland on all topical international problems and their firm resolve, together with the other Warsaw Pact states, to actively struggle to remove the nuclear threat and to ensure a breakthrough for the better on the European Continent and in the world as a whole.

The Polish side expressed total support for the specific program of actions put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress for the sake of maintaining and asserting peace and creating a comprehensive international security system.

The talks were held in an atmosphere of fraternity, cordiality, and complete mutual understanding typical of relations between the CPSU and the PZPR and between the Soviet and Polish peoples.

In the evening, M. Orzechowski hosted a dinner in E.A. Shevardnadze's honor during which an exchange of speeches took place.

Addressing the guest, M. Orzechowski said: This meeting is a continuation of the talks held in Moscow. We exchanged opinions on current questions of Polish-Soviet cooperation and on certain international problems. This exchange of opinions was held in a spirit of complete unity of views on all questions.

We listened with immense attention to the briefing on the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, which was a historic event not only in the life of the CPSU and the Soviet State. The congress is of immense importance for strengthening the might and cohesion of the socialist community states on the basis of the ideas of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism and was an important event in the international communist and workers movement.

Preparing for its 10th congress, the PZPR is making use of the rich theoretical and practical experience of the CPSU. Our congress, having approved the draft PZPR Program, will define the avenues for further building socialism in Poland and will be an important factor along the road of overcoming difficulties and strengthening socialism's position in our country.

Fraternal cooperation between Poland and the USSR is developing dynamically in all spheres. This is evidence of the ideological link between our Marxist-Leninist parties, the commonality of our interests, and the joint struggle for security and world peace.

The decisions made during the meetings and talks between Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, and Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, are of prime importance for defining the prospects and avenues of this cooperation. The PZPR delegation's participation in the work of the 27th CPSU Congress was a substantive factor in the development and strengthening of cooperation between our parties and states. We thank you for giving our delegation such a cordial reception.

The recent official friendly visit to the USSR by Zbigniew Messner, chairman of the Polish Council of Ministers, was also an important contribution to the development of Polish-Soviet cooperation.

Our current talks confirm that the development of Polish-Soviet relations is ascending in all spheres. Polish-Soviet collaboration is acquiring a qualitatively new nature. This is attested by the successful implementation of the Long-Term Program for the Development of Economic, Scientific, and Technical Cooperation begun in 1984 and the implementation of the Comprehensive Program for Scientific and Technical Progress begun in 1985, both of which are aimed at the next millennium.

Recently we have achieved considerable progress in developing cooperation in the sphere of culture and science. The plan for cultural and scientific exchanges in 1986-1990 is a reflection of the considerable expansion of its scale and enrichment of its forms. However, we believe that there are still considerable reserves for developing bilateral cooperation in these spheres.

We attach great importance to the development of direct cooperation among enterprises, scientific research centers, higher educational establishments, cultural institutions, creative unions, and social organizations. This makes it possible to establish direct contacts between people, which makes a substantial contribution to strengthening the bonds of friendship between our peoples.

The 27th CPSU Congress is of immense importance for the socialist states' new peace offensive in the international arena. It adopted Comrade Gorbachev's comprehensive plan for preventing the arms race spreading to space and ridding the world of nuclear weapons by the end of this century.

The main aim of the Warsaw Pact states' coordinated foreign policy at this time is to maintain peace and to ensure a return to detente. Poland is doing everything in its power to implement this joint policy. We continue to act in the interests of strengthening the socialist community and consistently oppose the policy of confrontation pursued by the United States and its allies and all attempts, primarily in the FRG, to call into question the postwar territorial and political setup.

We see the strengthening of the alliance and friendship with the USSR as the cornerstone of Polish foreign policy and a long-term strategic goal guaranteeing Poland's successful development, its security, and its position and role in the socialist community and the world.

In conclusion, M. Orzechowski expressed confidence that the current visit and the sincere and constructive talks would serve to ensure further progress in mutual cooperation and the strengthening of fraternal friendship between the two states and peoples.

In his reply speech, E.A. Shevardnadze stressed that being friends with fraternal Poland is a great joy for us. I am visiting your beautiful country for the first time and consequently feel particularly keenly the warmth of its soul and the full extent of its cordial hospitality. It is one thing to know a great deal about the life of a fraternal people and the activity of its party and government; it is another thing to see that land of friends for yourself and to experience the incomparable feelings of meeting its people who are so generous in displaying their friendship and brotherhood.

True friends show friendship in everything. Both in the way they welcome you into their home and in the way they talk about general matters and how they are building them.

The business part of our visit and the talks I had today with my esteemed colleague are the fruitful continuation of our comradely dialogue begun recently in Moscow during the Polish foreign minister's visit to our country. They reaffirm the particularly friendly nature of relations between our countries and peoples and the cooperation that is strengthening in all spheres.

Our conversation was very productive. There is no other way it could have been. For it was preceded by the important meeting between Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee and chairman of the Polish State Council. This meeting provided us with clear reference points and a precise vision of the avenues along which we need to continue to develop cooperation in the interests of peace and socialism.

We have discussed topical questions today -- questions which are topical both for our countries and for the world as a whole -- but for all their complexity we found it easy to talk. The unity of views and assessments and identity of positions on the most vital problems of the age which are so characteristic for the CPSU and the PZPR and for our governments has also been manifested in the current talks with all inspiring fullness.

We have come to Poland at a glorious time. Spring -- the season of the renewal of nature -- is coming to the world. In our countries, as throughout the world, people are linking with it hopes for the renewal of the nature of interstate relations, for the awakening of new reason and new thinking rejecting force and intimidation as a means of solving international problems. And although the political horizon is not always clear, and even cold winds can make themselves felt, the ray of hope is not being extinguished. It could be said that it is becoming brighter.

Our visit to Poland is taking place immediately after the 27th CPSU Congress. Like the delegations from the other community countries, a delegation from the fraternal PZPR played a most active part in it. Comrade Jaruzelski's speech at the Soviet Communists' forum and his thought that what is happening in the USSR "is of great importance for the fraternal parties, the socialist community, the international communist and workers movement, and the fate of the whole of mankind" were assessed highly in our country.

We know that the Polish mass media provided extensive coverage of the work of the congress and the decisions it adopted. Here today I would like to stress the following fundamentally important points from Comrade Gorbachev's Political Report to the congress.

The dynamism of the world socialist system's economic and political development is stronger than ever today and influencing the fate of peace and social progress. The forms of cooperation among the Warsaw Pact countries are being improved and enriched. The CPSU attaches increasing significance to living, extensive communication among citizens of the socialist countries.

A solicitous and respectful attitude toward each other's experience and its utilization in practice constitutes a tremendous reserve for the socialist community.

Peace -- the supreme class principle of socialism -- was proclaimed by the congress. The struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and consolidation of universal peace was declared to be the main avenue of our party's foreign policy strategy.

Having formulated the principle of solving any international problems exclusively by political means on the basis of equality, trust, and universality [vseobshchnost], the CPSU advanced program tenets for achieving these objectives. In accordance with these, priority significance in all the USSR's foreign policy is attached to the implementation of the program, spelled out in Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's statement, for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons by the end of this century. The historic concept of a nuclear-free world was born of the collective thinking of the entire socialist community. It reflects the aspirations of all the world's peace-loving people.

Poland's active participation in the implementation of the fraternal socialist states' coordinated course aimed at achieving a change for the better in European and world affairs is assessed highly in the Soviet Union.

Our fraternal countries' alliance is a tremendous asset for our peoples. It can be said without exaggeration that this is an alliance of hearts.

You have heard them beating at difficult times for yourselves. The news of the trials which befell People's Poland caused pain in the soul of every Soviet person. Our concern for the fate of socialism in the fraternal country was inseparable from our determination to help you defend it. Like all the socialist countries and the world's entire democratic public, we were with you at that grave time.

Today we react with joy to news that the time of anxiety is receding, the situation is stabilizing, and the first successes have been achieved -- and all this is thanks to the wisdom, will, and energy of the people and the party headed by Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski. Socialism and Poland's socialist democracy withstood the harsh trial. It strengthened its positions and is now developing them.

We also note the growth of Socialist Poland's active influence on shaping a favorable world climate and the consolidation of its prestige and authority. This is the result of the purposeful foreign policy activity of the country's party leadership. Your successes are a source of joy to your friends and disappointment to your foes.

Let me recall a saying current among your people. It says: "A brother derives strength from his brother."

Poland and its interests are dear to us. Polish soil, in which 600,000 Soviet soldiers who gave their lives together with Poland's best sons and daughters for our peoples' freedom and happiness, is sacred to us.

Unbreakable Soviet-Polish friendship was, is, and will remain the best memorial to the heroes.

Tomorrow we are to pay a tribute of grateful remembrance. By the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and at the Soviet military cemetery, in front of the eternal monuments to fraternal Soviet-Polish combat cooperation, our mind's eye will not only travel back to the past. During the minutes of silence we will be thinking about the future, which through our joint efforts must become an age without wars or weapons.

This objective is attainable. For its sake "an eternal free spirit will join us in a close ring."

You know this poem by Maria Konopnicka better than I do. But I would also like to add that politics has its own poetry if it serves the happiness of mankind. It is for this that we live and work, for this that our parties act.

An important event will soon occur in the life of the Polish people, their United Workers Party, and our entire community -- the 10th PZPR Congress. The preparations for this most important forum, which will undoubtedly exert a tremendous positive influence on the fraternal country's progress, are being followed with great attention and interest in our country.

In conclusion, E.A. Shevardnadze wished the congress great success and proposed toasts to the strengthening of unbreakable Soviet-Polish friendship and the happiness and flourishing of fraternal Poland.

Shevardnadze Interviewed

LD201102 Moscow TASS in English 1041 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Warsaw March 20 TASS -- The plan for stage-by-stage elimination of nuclear, chemical and other types of mass destruction weapons is contained in the statement by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, of January 15 this year. The ideas spelled out in that document were elaborated as a result of collective creativity by the fraternal socialist countries, said Eduard Shevardnadze, USSR minister of foreign affairs, in the PAP agency interview.

Had it only been for us, we would have already started the implementation of that plan. In a certain sense, Eduard Shevardnadze said, we have already done so -- we have not conducted nuclear explosions for seven months now and will not resume them, unless the USA conduct such explosions. The Soviet Union's stand is simple -- let us first end the explosions and then it will be possible to control things as much as one may wish and in any way possible. We have explicitly declared that we agree to any forms of control, including on-site inspection.

Then why the Americans do not agree to a moratorium? [sentence as received] Why have they all of a sudden changed their own stand on control, which is the main problem? They need nuclear explosions for the creation of space weapons, Eduard Shevardnadze continued. The halting of testing destroys their plans of preparations for "star wars".

Now we can hear the following argument: "As long as nuclear weapons exist they must be tested." What is the sense of saying so? As if the other side has such weapons, that do not require testing. The problem of nuclear explosions is precisely the field, in which the real intentions and real readiness of the states to resolve in practical terms the questions of nuclear disarmament most clearly manifest themselves. The truth is that we are prepared for that, while the American side is not.

And one can clearly see from this who really favours peace and who is for preserving and heightening nuclear confrontation. The NATO countries do not wish to withdraw the American missiles from the territory of the West European states and in order to mislead their own peoples, they are artificially bringing in the question of the Soviet operational-tactical missiles in Europe. As if they do not know our explicit statement that they will by withdrawn as soon as the question of medium-range missiles is resolved.

Instead of unravelling the European missile "knot", the foreign minister of the USSR stressed, the NATO countries are trying to tighten it still more by weaving in our missiles in Asia. Here it is, the moment of the truth: When the matter comes to action Washington and its allies do not want nuclear weapons to be eliminated.

Concerning the problem of elimination of debts Eduard Shevardnadze said: Indeed, imperialism is constantly looking for ways to assure its continued economic domination over some or other countries. It is by shamelessly plundering the peoples that the imperialist powers finance their military programmes and maintain their economic welfare. The arms race launched by imperialism entails a progressing impoverishment of countries and peoples. Here are some figures mentioned at the 27th Congress of the CPSU. There is a direct cause-and-effect connection between the one trillion dollar debt of developing states and the more than a trillion dollar increase in the U.S. military expenditures. Over 200 billion dollars are taken away from developing countries yearly. The U.S. military budget in recent years is practically equal to the same sum.

The rechannelling of funds from the sphere of military production into a civilian economy and the use of the funds they released for purposes of civilian development, the minister said, would help solve all the principal economic and social problems of the "Third World". The world where the number of starving people may reach a billion by the end of the century, where a half of newborn babies die before reaching the age of twelve months, and where only one in three children are vaccinated against fatal infectious diseases.

But does this concern developing countries only? In the selfsame "welfare" Western Europe a reduction of military budgets would help save 300 billion dollars.

Here too solutions lie, in our opinion, with the ending of the arms race and disarmament, with a radical restructuring of international economic relations on a just and equal basis. In this connection we attach special importance to acceptance of the concept of international economic security, one of the components of a comprehensive international security system put forward at the 27th Congress of the CPSU. The Soviet Union, as Mikhail Gorbachev said, comes out for the convocation of a world congress on this problem.

Speaking of the results of his official friendly visit to Poland the Soviet foreign minister said specifically: "We have every reason to be satisfied with work done. Our cooperation is growing broader, richer and deeper. This is taking place on the basis of equality, respect for each other's experience. Mutual assistance rests on mutual, and I would say, vital, interest in the successful socialist development of our countries. The better-off you are, the more achievements you have in the economy, social and cultural development, the better it is for your friends in the socialist countries, and vice versa, their acievements are your asset.

"Poland's alliance with the Soviet Union and other states of the socialist community is a guarantee of a strong and prosperous Poland. We see in this a basic quality, a principled difference of relationships between socialist states".

Comparison on Jaruzelski Talks

Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian in its 19 March Morning Edition publishes on page 5 a report headlined "Unity of Views on All Questions" which has been compared with the Moscow TASS English version published on page F 1 of the 19 March Soviet Union DAILY REPORT revealing the following variations:

In the first paragraph, last line, IZVESTIYA reads: ...the Polish Government.

E.A. Shevardnadze conveyed cordial greetings to W. Jaruzelski and good wishes from M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and the entire Soviet leadership. For his part W. Jaruzelski asked E.A. Shevardnadze to convey ardent greetings and best wishes to M.S. Gorbachev and other Soviet leaders.

In the course... (adding paragraph, picking up paragraph two, line one);

In paragraph two, line five, IZVESTIYA reads: ...constantly growing stronger and their close political collaboration are the motive forces behind the all-around development and further improvement of Soviet-Polish cooperation in all spheres.

W. Jaruzelski noted that, in preparing for the 10th PZPR Congress, Polish Communists fully support the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, which was a source of inspiration, knowledge, and experience for them.

On behalf of the Soviet leadership, E.A. Shevardnadze conveyed to Polish Communists wishes for success in preparing for and holding their supreme forum and in implementing their efforts to strengthen socialist gains in the country.

Exchanging opinions on... (rewording, adding paragraphs, picking up paragraph three, line one);

Last paragraph, last line, IZVESTIYA reads: ...security and disarmament.

The profound adherence of the Soviet Union and Poland to the fraternal countries' common course of saving mankind from the nuclear threat, limiting the arms race, and maintaining and strengthening universal peace was reaffirmed. The Soviet Union's large-scale proposals -- of paramount importance for all mankind -- which were put forward at the 27th CPSU Congress and in M.S. Gorbachev's 15 January statement and the initiatives and proposals by the other socialist countries in this direction serve to achieve these aims.

On the same day, E.A. Shevardnadze laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and at the Soviet military cemetery.... (adding paragraphs)

JARUZELSKI VISITS MOSCOW PLANT DURING CONGRESS

LD071142 Moscow International Service in Polish 1500 GMT 6 Mar 86

[Excerpts] On 5 March, the PZPR delegation to the 27th CPSU Congress, with party Central Committee First Secretary Wojciech Jaruzelski, chairman of the Polish Peoples Republic's Council of State at its head, visited the Moscow scientific production association (?skravarek).

At the end of the meeting, Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski spoke to those assembled in Russian: Above all, I would like to express thanks for the support given to us, for help, for constructive cooperation with Polish enterprises and institutions established precisely in those areas about which we spoke today, said Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski.

This has not only enormous economic and technological but also, I would say, moral and political significance, particularly at such a stage in history when it must be shown in practice what results the joint, necessary, simply internationalistic solution of problems provide in connection with future development. I believe the best form of political agitation is the joint, correct solution of emerging problems. Facts best convince and manifest what friendship and internationalism are based on, and what concrete contacts give to our countries. I also think, over and above this, that it is very important that in your association, cooperation of a qualitatively higher standard is developing, said Wojciech Jaruzelski. A simple exchange of goods is all very well, however, at the moment, the most important thing for us, (?offering) the greatest prospects, is intense cooperation and specialization in the production of the most modern and flawless products.

Next, Comrade Jaruzelski emphasized that everything that the Polish delegation had witnessed in the Land of the Soviets during the days of the congress, and its very participation in the proceedings of the Soviet Communists' forum, is enormously valuable to its members. In conclusion, Wojciech Jaruzelski thanked the participants of the meeting for their warm words directed to the Polish nation, its working class, youth, and the whole working world.

HUNGARY'S LAZAR VISITS ULYANOVSK DURING CONGRESS

PM030922 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 1 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 11

[TASS report under general heading "Cordial, Fraternal Meetings"]

[Text] A meeting of Soviet-Hungarian friendship, attended by the MSZMP delegation, evolved into a manifestation of the unity of thought and inviolability of ties between the CPSU and the MSZMP, between the Soviet Union and People's Hungary. The meeting took place in the assembly shop of the Ulyanovsk plant for heavy custom-built machine tools. The guests were welcomed by V.G. Grishanov, secretary of the plant party committee; design engineer V.A. Shutov, a Patriotic War veteran; R.N. Pinyayeva, core maker at the foundry shop; and Oblispolkom Chairman A.M. Bolshov.

The profound Marxist-Leninist evaluations contained in the Central Committee Political Report and in the delegate speeches at the 27th CPSU Congress are a demonstration of a responsible approach to questions of the Soviet Union's domestic life, its foreign policy, and the contemporary situation in the world, G. Lazar, member of the MSZMP Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the Hungarian Council of Ministers, said at the meeting. The congress proceedings offer convincing proof that the Soviet people, under the leadership of Lenin's party, are imbued with a desire for renewal and creativity and are prepared to fulfill the inspiring program for the country's socioeconomic development on the basis of accelerated scientific and technical progress. The congress documents are also a true compass for us, and they inspire convincing hope in the triumph of the ideas of socialism, social progress, and peace throughout the world. The Hungarian comrades laid flowers at the V.I. Lenin monument and visited the Great Hall at the Lenin Memorial.

ACTIVITIES OF SFRY DELEGATION IN USSR DESCRIBED

Hosts Dinner for Shcherbitskiy

LD050007 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 2228 GMT 4 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 4 Mar (TANJUG) -- Dimce Belovski, secretary of the Presidium of the LCY Central Committee and who is heading an LCY delegation at the 27th CPSU Congress in Moscow, this evening gave a dinner in honor of Vladimir Shcherbitskiy, first secretary of the Ukraine Communist Party and member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee.

Ivan Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; Stanislav Stojanovic, executive secretary of the LCY Central Committee; and Milojko Drulovic, SFRY ambassador to Moscow, were present.

Exchange of views on cooperation between the LCY and the CPSU and between the SFRY and the USSR took place in a cordial atmosphere.

Delegation Visits Leningrad

LD052127 Moscow in Serbo-Croatian to Yugoslavia 1700 GMT 5 Mar 86

[Text] The LCY delegation led by Comrade Dimce Belovski, visited Leningrad today. The guests from Yugoslavia toured the Piskarev memorial cemetery. The delegation paid their respects to the defenders of the city who died in the years of the Great Patriotic War with a moment's silence. Flowers were laid at the monument to the Mother of the Homeland. Red carnations were laid at the memorial to Vladimir Ilich Lenin at Smolnyy. At the Great October headquarters, the Yugoslav comrades toured the memorial museum of the leaders of the revolution. The LCY delegation also laid flowers at the monument to the heroic defenders of Leningrad.

In the afternoon the guests were warmly welcomed by workers of the Elektrosil enterprise. Generators made by the Leningrad firm are exported to 85 countries. This is one of the largest machinery production enterprises in our country and for one-quarter of a century it has been cooperating with the Yugoslav company, Rade Koncar. During this time, Yugoslavia has received generators with a total power of 1.2 million kw. Soviet experts also provide practical assistance in the construction and operation of powerful electrical machines.

The LCY delegation followed with great interest the tests being performed on a machine of the next century, a [word indistinct] turbo generator with a power of 300,000 kw, which cannot be found anywhere else in the world. Members of the workers' collective were addressed by Comrade Dimce Belovski, who was warmly welcomed by the gathering.

and for the CSSR side -- L. Vodrazka, CSSR first deputy foreign trade minister.

REPORTAGE ON DEFENSE SECRETARY WEINBERGER'S VISIT

Intentions Criticized

LD192127 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1600 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Commentary by station political observer Aleksandr Zholkver]

[Text] Talks were held today between Pentagon chief Weinberger and FRG Chancellor Kohl at one of NATO's military bases in West Germany. Here is our latest commentary by our political observer Aleksandr Zholkver:

The officially announced subject of today's talks is preparations for the regular meeting of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group, which starts tomorrow here in the FRG. Moreover, the West German press notes that attention at the meeting was focused on the question of involving the FRG in the U.S. plans for "star wars." I should like to remind you that negotiations between Washington and Bonn on the question have been going on for a long time. Several West German expert delegations have already crossed the ocean, and another one sets out next Monday, headed this time by Minister of Economic Affairs Bangemann. The FRG has often been visited by U.S. General Abrahamson, who runs the department that is developing space weapons. Nevertheless, despite Chancellor Kohl's readiness in principle, announced long ago, to conclude the relevant agreement with the United States, serious complications have arisen in preparing it, as West German newspapers themselves admit.

The whole point is that while striving to make use of the FRG's industrial and scientific potential for its own purposes, Washington has not the slightest intention of sharing with its West German ally either advanced technology or more of the profits on the production of space weapons. As the SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG put it, Kohl intended only to stretch out a finger, but the United States is unceremoniously preparing to chop off the whole hand.

Notice that Washington deals in the same way with its other allies as well. One of Gen Abrahamson's advisers was even thrown out of Britain recently because of his absolutely avid interest in the latest British technology. As far as one can judge from an article in THE OBSERVER, a British newspaper, the Japanese too are worried that the United States will make use of the latest Japanese technological research but will give nothing in return.

Such are the morals of the champions of "star wars;" our country adopts a totally different position in space affairs. This was emphasized again during Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's meeting with scientists and specialists taking part in the Venus-Halleys Comet project. That flight is not only a brilliant achievement of Soviet science and technology but also a convincing example of fruitful international cooperation in the peaceful conquest of space.

I would also add the launching of our new space station with the symbolic name "Mir." All this vididly asserts the peace-loving nature of our country's policies, as endorsed at the 27th CPSU Congress.

Weinberger Arrives in Bonn

LD191910 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1545 GMT 19 Mar 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Eduard Mnatsakanov]

[Text] The situation that is forming on the European Continent is far from simple. This is also shown by the current trip by U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, to several Western Europe countries.

His talks in London with Younger, Great Britain's secretary of defense, have just ended. In fact they discussed the coordination of Washington and London in their efforts to block any progress in the field of arms control and step-by-step elimination of nuclear weapons.

Today, Weinberger arrived in Bonn, where he immediately had a meeting with Chancellor Kohl of the FRG. Tomorrow in Wuerzburg, in West Germany, the spring session of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group opens. The tone of the session will be set by Weinberger. Everyone thinks that the Pentagon chief will try to tie the West European NATO countires even closer to the "star wars" program.

Opens NATO Meeting

LD201122 Moscow TASS in English 1111 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Wuerzburg March 20 TASS -- The U.S. "star wars" program and a further drawing into its implementation of U.S. partners by the North Atlantic bloc is the main subject of the spring session of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group on the level of defense ministers which opened today in Wuerzburg, West Germany. It is held in conditions of strict secrecy.

Caspar Weinberger, U.S. defense secretary, and General James Abrahamson, director of the U.S. SDI program, came to attend the session in order to bring pressure to bear on the allies with the aim to further draw them into the implementation of their militaristic designs. Political observers believe that it is for this purpose that the Washington emissaries will try to discredit the Soviet program of the stage-by-stage elimination of nuclear weapons in the world and to explain their stubborn unwillingness to join the moratorium on all nuclear explosions declared unilaterally by the Soviet Union.

USSR ENVOY COMMENTS ON BONN SDI TALKS

LD191320 Hamburg DPA in German 1215 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA) -- The Soviet Embassy in Bonn on Wednesday joined the discussion on the planned SDI agreement between the Federal Republic and the United States with a statement that the SDI program threatened to destroy strategic stability. Concerning the Berlin Clause allegedly being pushed by the Federal Government, charge d'affaires Vladislav Teretskov said at a press conference that according to Western press reports the Americans themselves have reservations about the inclusion of West Berlin.

Teretskov assessed relevant reports as proof of the purely military nature of the U.S. space program. It is still too early to talk about likely effects of Bonn's participation in SDI on German-Soviet relations. This is also true about speculations on a visit by Soviet party leader Mikhail Gorbachev to the Federal Republic. Teretskov denied that exploratory talks are already in progress with Bonn.

The Soviet diplomat once again called for comprehensive nuclear disarmament and asked the United States to give up the SDI program. He said security can not be built permanently on the fear of retribution. Teretskov underlined his country's willingness to conclude a test ban agreement and pointed out that the Soviet Union will not extend her unilateral moratorium indefinitely.

GDR' HONECKER MEETS WITH MAYOR OF WEST BERLIN

PM181237 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Developing Relations"]

[Text] Berlin, 17 Mar -- E. Honecker, general secretary of the SED Central Committee and chairman of the GDR State Council, has met E. Diepgen, mayor of West Berlin, in Leipzig. The ADN agency reports that the participants in the talk focused attention on questions of preserving peace.

The GDR leader pointed out that the GDR favors forming a stable security zone in central Europe. Consequently, in its relations with West Berlin the GDR strives to respect realities and to strictly and completely fulfill the four-power agreement on West Berlin. The development of mutually profitable relations between the GDR and West Berlin has vindicated the four-power agreement and shown that, given a sense of realism [realnost] and good will, positive results are also attainable in the future, ADN reports.

BOGOMOLOV ON EAST-WEST COOPERATION PROSPECTS

PM111701 Moscow NEW TIMES in English No 8, Feb 86 pp 18-20

[Article by Academician Oleg Bogomolov: "Europe: Prospects for Economic Cooperation"]

[Text] What we would like the future to have in store for Europe are first of all guaranteed security, prosperity and cooperation between its nations. It is our ardent wish that military confrontation be done away with for good, giving way to good-neighbourliness, ever broader political and economic cooperation among states, and extensive human contacts. Is all this possible, given present realities: a disunited Europe, huge stockpiles of weapons (including nuclear), and anunstable world economy?

Most of us take an optimistic view and believe that Europe's future will be one of peace and prosperity. Nonetheless, both the experience of older generations and the realism prompted by our troubled times make us cautious in attempting to predict the future course of events.

The fate of Europe is decided not only by the nations that comprise it. It also depends on global international processes, which are causing the gravest concern today. The plan for nuclear disarmament on a global scale, put forward in the statement by Mikhail Gorbachev, offers prospects also for the European nations with whose aspirations they fully accord.

Time To Remove Barriers

The Geneva summit has had a wholesome effect on the political and psychological climate in Europe. The continent's future will depend chiefly on confidence-building between countries of the two systems. Confidence means the assurance that neither side will take action detrimental to the other in whatever form. Confidence means a benevolent attitude to one another, readiness to discuss problems calmly and find sensible compromises.

The indisputable fact that much in the world depends on the relations between the two great powers -- the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. -- in no way detracts from the role the European states have to play in world affairs. The cradle of world civilization, our continent, which has contributed so greatly in the progress of science, technology, culture and advanced social thought, can give an example of how to resolve the most complex problems of today and carry out the principles and policy of detents. The Helsinki conference is a corroboration of this.

The future of the European Community of nations lies in the further deepening of the Helsinki process, despite all the difficulties and obstacles still in its way. It is important to promote the dialogue so as to achieve better mutual understanding and correctly assess each other's interests. The more often we meet and talk at various levels, the less mistrust and hostility there will be.

Naturally, there are many matters on which we disagree. Will this always be the case? In our opinion it is high time that barriers in the way of Europe-wide cooperation were removed and bridges built. These bridges may differ in design, but all of them are to serve the same purpose -- international rapprochement. What should unite us, first and foremost, is our common responsibility for peace.

Building a new Europe presupposes the development of the appropriate political and economic infrastructure which is to facilitate this endeavor. There exist several forums concerned with the problems of strengthening European security. Confidence-building measures are discussed in Stockholm, while troop and arms reduction in Central Europe are negotiated in Vienna. Representatives from the European states which took part in the Helsinki conference are to meet in 1986. The U.N. Economic Commission for Europe has an important part to play in resolving our continent's problems.

Though they have been insufficiently effective so far, measures such as these contribute to the formation of the future structure and mechanism of European security and cooperation. This structure will probably have to be modified, and new forms of political, economic and cultural cooperation sought, with European realities and the need to strengthen all-European unity taken into account.

What is the future of Europe likely to be?

The answer to this question probably lies in an analysis not only of current political but also of economic trends.

East and West

Following the 1980-82 crisis, the worst in postwar years, the capitalist economy recovered slightly. In 1985, however, growth rates slowed down again (especially in the U.S.), and American economists expect this trend to persist in 1986. The problems of unemployment and inflation confronting the member states of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) have lost none of their acuteness. Unemployment figures have reached a postwar high (down slightly in the U.S. in 1984-85, they continue to rise in Western Europe). Over the last few years prices in OECD member countries have been going up at a rate which, though less sharp than previously, nonetheless averaged 4.5 per cent a year.

Military spending remains a heavy burden on the U.S. budget which is balanced out by a growing national debt. Half of the $200 billion deficit is covered by the influx of bank credits from abroad, which has resulted in excessively high interest on credits and in an artificially inflated dollar exchange rate. This makes imports to the U.S. (from Europe too) cheaper, and adversely affects the competitiveness of American exports. Hence the growing U.S. balance of trade and payments deficit. One an international creditor, the world's righest country has become a debtor. Taking advantage of its privileged position in the international financial and trade system, the U.S. largely buys its well-being on credit. The gap in growth rates and employment dynamics between Western Europe and the U.S. is due not so much to West European products becoming less competitive (although this is also partly the case) as to the peculiarities of the international financial mechanism.

If the financial mechanism continues to work to the advantage of the U.S. alone, there will be no avoiding an explosion which will hit all countries, West European included, very hard, indeed. Of special danger under the circumstances is the developing countries' enormous foreign debt, which has topped $1,000 billion. The solvency of these countries is most problematic; furthermore, the payment or at least, reduction of the debt is hampered by the protectionist measures taken by the U.S., Japan and the EEC.

Protectionism has assumed global proportions and is being practised in ever more refined forms. This interferes with the improvement of the world economic situation and the development of East-West relations. The use of trade sanctions and technological embargoes as a means of bringing political pressure to bear on other countries is especially to be censured. By tightening restrictions in their foreign trade, the U.S. and West European countries may lose their markets, and it hard to keep business activity up without expanding trade in all directions. Western Europe has taken up the U.S. and Japanese challenge and is bent on catching up with these two countries in vital spheres of technology. This effort may well pay off, improving prospects for economic development and helping offset negative economic processes on a global scale. East-West economic relationships in Europe should develop along the same lines.

While being affected, to a greater or lesser degree, by global economic processes and the economic situation in Western Europe, the European CMEA member states are governed by economic laws of their own and come up against entirely different problems. Thanks to annual and medium-term plans, these countries' economic development rate is steadier and more confident than that of the market economy of the West. Whereas Western Europe's annual gross domestic product grew by 2.2-2.3 per cent in 1984-85, the figure for the CMEA member states was 3.3-3.5 per cent. The Soviet Union and a number of other CMEA member states have succeeded in arresting the slowing down of their economic growth rates observed at the end of the seventies and the beginning of the eighties. The task now is to speed up development by improving economic management, making further scientific and technological progress, restructuring industry, and other measures. Investments are to grow, and the share of accumulation is to increase in the national income of countries in which it has markedly shrunk over the past few years. The retooling and modernization of industry are bound to have an increasing effect on the CMEA countries' development rate.

The plans of the European CMEA member states are linked, in large measure, with ever closer integrationist cooperation between them. They take part in major industrial, scientific and engineering projects, which are comparable with only a few similar projects in the world, such as the joint construction of oil and gas mains, power transmission lines, atomic power stations, and ore-dressing mills. Furthermore, CMEA member states practise large-scale specialization and coproduction in such fields as electronics, atomic power engineering, electrical engineering, ball-bearing manufacturing, and so on. The recent extraordinary CMEA session adopted the Comprehensive Programme of Scientific and Technological Progress of the CMEA countries for the period up to 2000. Its joint fulfilment will bring these countries onto a par with the highest international standards in the key spheres of science and technology.

Mutual Benefit

The economic situation in the capitalist and socialist worlds influences -- albeit in different ways -- the progress of business cooperation between countries of the two different systems. East-West trade constitutes a mere 3-4 per cent of the world's total. Therefore, the influence of their trade links on global economic processes is insignificant. On the other hand, these links depend to a considerable extent on the state of affairs in the West's economy and foreign trade, characterized by instability.

One should also bear in mind a certain discrepancy in the respective significance of these links for the economic development of East and West. Over the past few years socialist countries have done 26 to 30 per cent of their foreign trade with industrialized capitalist states. The proportion of West European countries in trade with the socialist world is much smaller (although they are interested in trade with socialist countries for economic and political reasons).

In the first half of the seventies, trade turnover between the European CMEA countries and the West grew fast; in the latter half of the seventies the growth slowed down considerably, and in the early eighties East-West trade stagnated. Now this trade is tending to expand again, but how lasting this tendency will be is anybody's guess.

From the angle of purely economic prerequisites and interests, growth potential is reasonably high on both sides. Given an improvement in the political climate, the West's share in the foreign trade of the CMEA member states may increase.

Although the CMEA member states have succeeded in improving the balance of payments with the West and bringing their hard-currency debt to it under control, many other important problems associated with business cooperation are still awaiting their solution. In praticular, it is necessary to improve the commodity pattern of East-West trade. Fuels, raw materials and food still predominate in the CMEA's exports to the West, accounting for 75 per cent and, specifically, of machines and equipment, a mere seven per cent. The prospects for East-West trade depend on the extent to which this pattern is improved.

As they strengthen their collective scientific and technological potential, the CMEA countries do not seek to cut themselves off from the rest of the world in the field of science and technology -- and their June 1984 economic summit reaffirmed this. It is plain that exchanges and contacts in this and many other fields are inevitable. The single most important concern of CMEA member states is invulnerability in the vital spheres of scientific and technological progress.

Intensification of economic progress will add to their import-export potential (vis-s-vis the West, in particular) and alter the pattern of supply and demand. The CMEA countries will step up the efficacy of their imports by increasing the purchases of machine systems and production lines required to retool their mechanical engineering, light and food industries, update their industrial and agricultural infrastructure and introduce industrialized methods in agriculture. The practice of building medium and small industrial plants jointly with Western companies, especially on a compensatory basis, holds good promise.

It would be useful to work out an effective reform of the international currency system, to establish normal contractual relations between the CMEA and the EEC, and take confidence-building measures in the economic sphere as well. The problems of the immunity of all countries, including those in Europe, against any disturbances in the system of world economic relations are steadily gaining in urgency. Our state calls attention to this in the United Nations.

The CMEA countries' and the CMEA Secretariat's moves to normalize relations with the EEC are prompted not so much by business motives as by the need to strengthen European security, build confidence, and gradually overcome the disunity of Europe. To date, the discrepancy in East-West trade is becoming increasingly pronounced owing to the EEC's tendency to deal with each CMEA member state individually. The CMEA is not recognised as the coordinator of its member states' activities and the protector of their interests. All proposals to sign a joint CMEA-EEC declaration providing for bilateral contacts and outlining their tentative spheres get bogged down in talks.

I am certain, however, that a secure future for Europe presupposes the intensification of integration processes not only in the East and the West, but also the extension of contacts between individual states and their communities on a continent-wide scale.

Business cooperation with socialist countries, which develop their economies according to five-year plans and long-term programmes, can bring an element of stability and strength to the foreign economic links established by Western countries, especially those in Europe.

The plans the CMEA countries have drawn up for the next five-year period (1986-90) provide a reliable point of departure for business circles interested in broadening long-term trade and economic links with the socialist countries on the basis of reciprocity and mutual benefit and in seeking new intensive forms of East-West cooperation.

U.S. REPORTEDLY PREPARING TO INTERVENE IN GULF WAR

LD191942 Moscow TASS in English 1904 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 19 TASS — As was to be expected, the February change in the Iranian-Iraqi war, connected with the start of a new offensive by Iranian troops, has resulted in yet another step-up of Washington's military preparations in the Persian Gulf area, Konstantin Geyvandov writes in today's IZVESTIYA. U.S. General Theodore Jenes, whom THE WASHINGTON POST newspaper refers to as the one who is in charge of possible military operations in the area, toured one country of the region after another for several days. Then he held talks with Pentagon representatives. This is a symptomatic fact considering that the forces subordinated to Jenes are part of the U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM).

The Iranian-Iraqi war which has been going on for the sixth year now, IZVESTIYA's news analyst points out, brings innumerable hardships and suffering to the peoples of the two countries. Nevertheless, unfortunately, there is no end to the war in sight. Moreover, it more more and more markedly splashes beyond the scope of the conflict between two neighbouring states, turning into a factor of serious destabilisation in the region. The war poses a direct threat to international peace and security, since it creates a favourable ground for the realisation of the imperialist plans of the United States and of its NATO allies in the important and resources-rich Persian Gulf.

Washington immediately made use of the outbreak of the war in order to reaffirm its claims to that "zone of U.S. vital interest" and came forward with threats to intervene, in an armed way, too, to defend those "interests".

The peoples of Iran and Iraq have experienced imperialist and colonial domination. Would not it be a savage irony of fate if the conflict between these two states will now lead to a return of the armed-to-the-teeth forces of the USA, Britain and France to the regions?! An 'appropriate' pretext for interference has already been invented in Washington and other NATO capitals: protection of the safety of sea lanes and of 'friendly' countries of the Persian Gulf area.

"It is understandable, however, that the true motives of the United States 'actions are not in helping the Persian Gulf states but in asserting and consolidating its presence in the strategically important area of the world".

"There is something else. The ongoing war not only devitalises Iran and Iraq. It has also brought about a serious split in the Arab world, weakening its potential for counteracting the main threat which comes from the U.S.-Israeli 'strategic allies'", IZVESTIYA emphasises.

GILASHVILI-LED DELEGATION IN EGYPT MEETS OFFICIALS

LD201027 Moscow TASS in English 1009 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo March 20 TASS -- TASS correspondent Ratmir Orestov reports: A delegation of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, led by Pavel Gilashvili, vice president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, now staying in Egypt, had a meeting with Rif'at al-Mahjub, speaker of the People's Assembly of the A.R.E. [Arab Republic of Egypt], and a group of deputies of the Egyptian parliament. They discussed questions of bilateral Soviet-Egyptian relations and certain international problems.

The leader of the Soviet delegation spoke of the main results of the 27th Congress of the CPSU and prospects for the social and economic development of the USSR.

Speaking at the meeting Anatoliy Mayorets, minister of Electric Power Development and Electrification of the USSR, who took part in designing and building the high Aswam Dam project, told about the state of power production in the Soviet Union and plans for its further development as well as prospects for the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Sergey Losev, TASS general director, reaffirmed the Soviet Union's principled position on the Middle East problem and other international issues.

The Egyptian parliamentarians spoke highly of the Soviet Union's assistance in the socio-economic development of Egypt after the revolution of 1952. It was pointed out that the high Aswan Dam remains a symbol of friendship between the peoples of the two countries. The smooth operation of this hydropower project, its high productivity and seismic stability have defeated all attempts by the enemies of Soviet-Egyptian friendship to find fault with the project. It was the Aswan Dam, a deputy stressed, that saved Egypt from the severe drought that hit a number of regions of Africa in recent years. Other economic projects, built with Soviet assistance, are also of inestimable help to Egypt. Mention was made of traditional ties between the USSR and Egypt in the field of culture, past exchanges of folklore groups, delegations of writers and film-makers. Members of the People's Assembly spoke gratefully of the participation of Soviet specialists in the development of Egyptian ballet, theatre and modern music. A deputy of parliament, one of the 1,500 Egyptian scientists who graduated from Soviet schools and who were awarded scientific degrees there, said that cooperation with the Soviet Union in the field of science and education and the training of Egyptian students in the Soviet Union are of great importance to Egypt.

The two sides expressed mutual desire to expand parliamentary ties between the Soviet Union and Egypt and to develop cooperation in different fields.

COMMENTARY ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF KUWAIT

PM191623 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 17 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Own correspondent V. Shevchenko dispatch: "Everyday Life in Kuwait"]

[Text] Kuwait -- Kuwait recently celebrated a quarter of a century of independence. The thousands of varicolored bulbs which burn on an evening in the capital alongside the neon advertising signs mark the festivities.

Kuwait has traveled a long way in past years -- it has turned from a medieval principality into a dynamically developing modern state. This has been possible thanks to the colossal oil deposits concealed beneath its surface. It is difficult to say what the fate of this small Arab country would have been if the underground reserves of black gold had not been discovered.

The oil boom destroyed a patriarchal way of life and stepped up the social and political processes taking place in Kuwaiti society.

Aware that oil is its main source of wealth, the Kuwaiti Government set about making rational use of its reserves of black gold, establishing national sovereignty over the country's national reserves. People here consider that Kuwait has the world's third-largest oil reserves. But those reserves are finite, and in 1977 a so-called "fund for future generations," which regularly receives 10 percent of oil sales revenue, was set up to ensure for the future. The fund's resources cannot be used until the beginning of the 21st century. Realistic Kuwaitis, however, appreciate that this is no way out of their situation. They regard the basic strategy for developing the country and ensuring its viability as consisting in the creation of its own industrial base.

On a trip to the Al-Shu'aybah oil region south of the capital I was able to see for myself how seriously resolving the question is being approached in Kuwait. The steel structures of oil-refining and chemical enterprises and plants producing fertilizers, glass, asphalt, and auto tires are to be seen not far from the sea shore. One of the world's largest oil refining complexes, fitted with the most modern equipment, was ceremonially commissioned this year in the port of Ahmadi, near Al-Shu'aybah.

In their progress along the path of economic development the Kuwaitis are encountering serious difficulties. These are primarily bound up with the lack of local manpower. The native population of Kuwait accounts for only just over 40 percent of around 1.7 million people living there, the rest being made up of foreigners, mainly immigrants from Arab countries, India, and Pakistan. There are also many South Korean contract workers. The government has now elaborated and is implementing an extensive program to train national cadres.

People in Kuwait are well aware that the successful development of the country and the maintenance of control over natural resources are possible only in conditions of international security and lasting peace in the region. That is why immediately after obtaining independence the Kuwaiti Government began pursuing a policy of positive neutrality aimed at relaxing tension and establishing mutually beneficial relations with diverse countries, irrespective of their sociopolitical system.

Kuwait also maintains friendly ties with our country. The strengthening of those ties is helped by the fact that both countries' stances in resolving key present-day problems coincide in many respect. Kuwaitis broadly approve the Soviet initiatives to improve the international situation, secure disarmament, resolve the Middle East crisis, and strengthen security in the Persian Gulf region.

Soviet-Kuwaiti economic cooperation is developing fruitfully. The recent visit to our country by Kuwaiti Oil Affairs Minister 'Ali al-Khalifah as-Sabah and his meetings with Soviet leaders have given a new boost to the expansion of business ties in various spheres. The local press has given a high assessment of the results of the talks on economic questions in Moscow, which, as the press here notes, should promote a high level of Soviet-Kuwaiti political relations.

In the past the Kuwaitis were famous as fine navigators who could skillfully steer their ships along a true course in bad weather. Kuwait today is overcoming its difficulties, advancing toward its goal according to charted reference points.

PAPER SAYS EGYPTIAN UNREST STEMS FROM ECONOMIC ILLS

PM191016 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 18 Mar 86 p 3

[TASS correspondent V. Yefremov dispatch for SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA: "Cairo: A Grave Legacy"]

[Text] Cairo -- Life in Cairo is virtually back to normal. But the traces of fire on buildings along Al-Ahram Street and the broken restaurant and night club signs still bring to mind the recent unrest by subunits of the internal security forces.

The armored personnel carriers and the tanks have disappeared, but the causes of these tragic events have remained. According to the official version, the reason for the disturbances was rumors that service in the internal security forces would be extended by 1 year. But, as the opposition press points out, the real causes are rooted in the acute socioeconomic crisis being experienced by Egypt. The country officially has more than 100 billionaires and tens of thousands of millionaires, while 40 percent of the population virtually lack the basic means for existence.

This contrast is particularly noticeable along the streets of Cairo, where hundreds of thousands of poor people are huddled together in slums and in the crypts of the "city of the dead," only a stone's throw away from the neon signs of supermarkets, stores, restaurants, luxury mansions, and equally luxurious limousines.

The highly acute housing and food crisis and the problem of providing work for the millions of unemployed are being aggravated by the fast growing population. Egypt's population, now standing at 49 million, increases by an additional million every 10 months. The country consumes more than it produces, and it buys more than it sells. Egypt is languishing beneath the burden of debts amounting to $25 billion, in other words more than the country produces in 1 year. Interest payments alone will be $3 billion this year. Egypt is forced to incur new debts in order to meet these payments. What was it that led to this situation?

The country's present leadership inherited a grave legacy from former President Al-Sadat. His "open door" policy led to the collapse of the Egyptian economy's state sector and to stagnation in industry and agriculture. External debts increased more than tenfold, and the trade and payments deficit rose severalfold. Economically and politically, Egypt found itself firmly dependent on foreign credits, primarily from the United States.

The tense socioeconomic situation became explosive. Egypt's new president, H. Mubarak, who came to power following Al-Sadat's inglorious death in 1981, perceived the need for profound changes and took a number of steps to overcome the prevailing situation. Certain measures are being implemented to provide food for the poorest strata of the population and to solve the housing problem. Even though emergency laws have remained in force in the country since 1981, political life has been somewhat liberalized and the activity of opposition parties has been allowed. The country's leadership is striving to revive the leading role of the state sector as the basis of Egypt's economic development. Measures are planned to boost agriculture. Attempts are being made to make the private sector's activity more productive and to utilize the capital of Western firms, which have operated virtually without any controls since Al-Sadat's time, in the interests of the development of Egypt's national economy. Egypt is also taking a more independent stance in the international arena.

Nevertheless, many of the aforementioned measures are not always consistently implemented, and the Western creditors and the interests of Egypt's big bourgeoisie are borne in mind. Both external forces, primarily the United States and Israel, and domestic ones, opposed to this more independent course of the country's present leadership and interested in weakening it, are highly influential and actively oppose the independent course. All this goes to considerably diminish the effect of the measures being implemented by the Egyptian authorities and hinders the solution of problems that are acute and vitally important for Egyptian society. Yet these problems must be solved as soon as possible. The police riot only served to confirm this again.

SACP'S SLOVO ADDRESSES MOSCOW CONFERENCE

MB041053 Moscow in Zulu to Southern Africa 1800 GMT 2 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Moscow State University hosted a conference for the faculty and students with visiting foreign delegations attending the 27th CPSU Congress in Moscow. Please listen to an address by Joe Slovo, chairman of the South African Communist Party [SACP], at this conference.

[Begin Slovo recording in English fading into Zulu translation] On behalf of the SACP, I have brought the warmest and fraternal greetings to the 27th CPSU Congress. Our presence here demonstrates the high esteem the SACP has achieved. This congress is without precedent not only in the lives of Soviet citizens, but also in the lives of all internationalists committed to the achievement of peace and harmony in world affairs.

The agenda of the congress deals with issues that affect mankind as a whole. We can state without fear of contradiction that the resolutions presented at this congress encompass all areas of activity concerned with the survival of life on this planet. The mere fact that 40 years have passed without an outbreak of a major world war shows clearly that the internationalist policies of the USSR and its socialist allies of preserving and promoting international peace and security have been an outstanding success. It is however true that there are still some elements in this world that are bent on provoking another world war in an effort to topple the socialist states of the world. Such machinations are definitely cursed.

Socialist countries stand for the promotion and preservation of peace from the international warmongers and the promotion of the workers' welfare in a solidly strong and wealthy worker-controlled state. It is quite clear that peace and security are essential of human existence in this world. The success of Soviet foreign policy in the pursuit of international peace has reached unprecedented heights and is frequently discussed in the leading capitals of the world. It assures the total prevention of wars in the future. The public announcement by the CPSU general secretary on 15 January 1986 described in clear terms the procedural phases for nuclear and nonnuclear weapons reduction in the world, so that by year 2000 such weaponry would not exist. That announcement was an affirmation of the Soviet intent to halt the arms race and safeguard international peace and security for all nations.

The international community should unite its efforts in order to make this wonderful dream of humanity -- that the 21st century will be a century characterized by the absence of nuclear weapons -- a reality. The arms race consumes tremendous amounts of the concerned governments' budgets, and in this manner condemns millions of Africans to a state of perpetual poverty, ignorance, starvation, and sickness. This is the reason why the African people cannot stand aside from the campaign for international peace and the halting of the arms race. The campaign coincides with their deep-rooted aspirations. We believe that the issue of international peace and security requires solid and sober deliberations among all concerned parties, especially the communist parties and the workers. It is the hotest issue of our times.

Brothers and sisters, all humanity knows that South Africa is going through a revolution. The present rulers of South Africa are faced with very difficult problems. The apartheid regime is in danger of collapse, as the political and economic situation in South Africa deteriorates.

The leading capitalist of the world, the U.S. Government, has adopted a strategy of constructive engagement with Pretoria regime in an attempt to save the RSA Government from ultimate destruction. On the one hand, the United States tries to pressure Botha to polish up the image of apartheid through sham political reforms, in order to protect and preserve Western economic interests in South Africa. On the other hand, the same United States tries to force the ANC [African National Congress] to cease and desist from further pursuit of the armed struggle, to stop its campaign for freedom in South Africa, to terminate its ties with socialist countries, and divorce itself from the SACP. However, Mr Oliver Tambo, the ANC's president, has unreservedly stated that the SACP is one of the pillars in the pursuit of the freedom struggle in South Africa. We believe quite strongly that there is not capitalist ploy that can ever succeed in dividing the unity of the liberation struggle in South Africa. The thrust of the capitalists is to separate the ANC from its true friends.

Brothers and sisters, this year the SACP, Marx and Lenin's brainchild and the first and oldest communist party in Africa, will observe its 65th anniversary. We state with pride that in all those years, the SACP members have fought valiantly for freedom and justice for all the people of South Africa, irrespective of race, national origin, color, or creed. As happened elsewhere during revolutionary change, the SACP uses all the tactics gained in previous revolutions, paying particular attention to the lessons of Great October Revolution of 1917 in Russia. The SACP provides inspiration and wise counsel to the masses. The success of Lenin in 1917 is our political model. Lenin's success in creating the first socialist state in the world, the USSR, had ramifications that were felt worldwide. This workers' state would not have been possible without the guidance of the CPSU to the Soviet people.

We sincerely believe that the 27th CPSU Congress will go down in the pages of history as an outstanding step in the evolutionary path of the socialist state. We wish it all the success. Finally, I would like to conclude by noting two important issues that affect humanity very seriously: the promotion and safeguarding of international peace and security and the continued evolution of the socialist state, the future hope of mankind. Long live the CPSU. Long live the CPSU's concern and love for humanity, especially the workers. Long live the workers state.

CPSU ANNIVERSARY GREETINGS TO MALAGASY PARTY

LD191150 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 19 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] To the Vanguard of the Malagasy Revolution [AREMA] Central Committee

Dear comrades! The CPSU Central Committee sends to the AREMA Central Committee ardent greetings and congratulations on the 10th anniversary of AREMA's formation. Your party, together with the other anti-imperialist and revolutionary-democratic forces, is heading the struggle for Madagascar's development along the path of national independence and social progress and takes a resolute stance for the preservation and strengthening of peace on earth. People in the Soviet Union highly value AREMA's efforts aimed at strengthening the relations of friendship and cooperation between our parties, countries, and peoples.

We wish AREMA's leadership and all its aktiv members successes in the work to implement the principles of the Malagasy socialist revolution's charter in the interests of the people of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar.

'NEW' U.S. PLAN TO DESTABILIZE NICARAGUA NOTED

LD220955 Moscow TASS in English 0832 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Managua March 20 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Trushin reports: The USA has got down to a new plan of destabilizing the situation in Nicaragua's Atlantic coast inhabited by the native population of the country. As was reported at a press conference held here by Salvador Perez, a representative of the Ministry of the Interior, the United States seeks to hamper the return of Indians to their native lands, to thwart the process of negotiations on granting them autonomy, to open a new front on the frontier with Honduras, to form in the Atlantic zone the so-called provisional government made of leaders of some counter-revolutionary groups.

The CIA makes stake on the KISAN [Unity of the Nicaraguan Atlantic Coast Indigenous People] organization into which Nicaraguan indians were drawn by force or deception. KISAN established a network of camps in the area of the frontier Rio Coco River with the support of the U.S. espionage agency and the Somoza group "Nicaraguan Democratic Forces" based in Honduras. Those camps are supplied with American weapons by air. Flights of trespasser planes have become more frequent of late in the Vazpan, Leimus and other areas.

Counter-revolutionary bases were also formed in Honduran territory, American military advisers have become frequent visitors of the Mocoron base these days. Experts from the Pentagon, participating in Cabanas-86 exercises in Honduras, have got down to driving highways to the Nicaraguan frontier. Artillery guns installed by them are trained on the territory of Nicaragua.

More than a thousand counter-revolutionaries are undergoing intensive training under the direction of CIA's advisers in one of the areas of Honduras. Their task is to penetrate into zones where Nicaraguan indians live and stage a number of terroristic actions. Commando groups also plan to lay mines in the vicinities of the indian settlement of Vazpan, Leimus, Bismuna and attack Nicaraguan frontier posts.

VAGRIS, DELEGATION MEET VENEZUELAN PRESIDENT

LD191546 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0930 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Caracas, 19 Mar (TASS) -- Venezuelan President Jaime Lusinchi has received a USSR Supreme Soviet delegation led by Y. Vagris, deputy chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, which is on an official visit here at the invitation of the country's congress. Vagris handed the Venezuelan president a message from the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium.

An exchange of opinions took place on some of the most important international problems and on questions concerning bilateral relations. During the conversation, the head of the Soviet delegation set out the USSR's position on disarmament issues, primarily the elimination of nuclear weapons and prevention of the militarization of space.

Lusinchi noted that he fully shares the USSR's concern for the destiny of the world and had learned with interest of Soviet proposals aimed at improving the international situation. He voiced anxiety over the developing countries' growing foreign debt. The president noted with satisfaction the favorable development of Venezuelan-Soviet relations, and spoke in favor of their being further expanded. The meeting was attended by Venezuelan Foreign Minister Simon Alberto Consalvi.

Weinberger 'Pressuring' Allies

PM201035 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Vladislav Drobkov article: "Pressure on the Allies"]

[Text] Pentagon chief C. Weinberger has departed the United States for Western Europe. The very office held by the visitor and his political positions leave no doubt that his trip is connected with a U.S. intention of overtly pressuring the NATO allies.

The visit is timed for the NATO Nuclear Planning Group (NPG) meeting in the FRG, planned for 20-21 March. Sessions of this group precede sessions of the North Atlantic bloc's military and political organs. They seem to be becoming the first lap in the NATO relay, on which the tone is set for the while "race." So the concern shown by the Pentagon, which is striving to influence its West European allies to prevent the slightest deviation from their orientation toward Washington on fundamental issues of war and peace, is no accident.

But Washington sees a threat of deviation in the fact that the constructive Soviet peace initiatives, approved by the 27th CPSU Congress, have forced many in the West to stop and think whether it is not better for mankind to cast off its deadly-dangerous burder of nuclear arsenals on the threshold of the next century. NATO's missile worshipers are even more alarmed by the fact that the USSR has proposed a specific, totally realistic plan to realize mankind's dream of lasting peace.

W shington, as is well known, has avoided giving a constructive response to the Soviet proposals. The American Administration has preferred to submerge the essence of the matter in various conditions and "linkages" blocking the way to a solution of the problem. In addition to this, a massive propaganda campaign has been launched with the aim of persuading mankind that it will supposedly never be able to do without nuclear weapons. Consequently, it is said, the United States cannot (Weinberger himself speaks openly on this) give up its nuclear weapon tests and intends to continue nuclear explosions. This stance embarrasses many of the U.S. NATO allies. Weinberger's task, observers believe, is to "dispel their alarm," that is, simply twist their arms.

Now, on the eve of the spring sessions of leading NATO organs, Washington is striving at all costs to secure a negative reaction from the North Atlantic bloc to any proposals capable of leading to restraint in the arms race or to arms reduction. The possibility cannot be ruled out that this time too pressure of this kind, backed up by the transatlantic emissary's visit, will force the NPG to vote once again in favor of increasing NATO's nuclear arsenal. But it is also clear that the West's stubborn reluctance to heed the voice of reason once again reveals to the peoples the dangerous actions of those forces which are trying to perpetuate the nuclear threat hanging over mankind.

Bogachev Views Meeting

LD201924 Moscow TASS in English 1903 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 20 TASS -- By TASS military news analyst Vladimir Bogachev: Washington is going to respond to the appeal of the leaders of six countries, which asked the Soviet Union and the United States to refrain from all nuclear tests till the next summit meeting, with a nuclear blast this April.

U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who arrived in West Germany to attend another meeting of NATO's nulcear planning group, said to British television: "As long as we have to rely on nuclear weapons, they will have to be tested."

So, the U.S. Administration solemnly assures world public opinion that it is sincerely striving to render nuclear weapons "impotent and obsolete", but sees no better way to do that then by modernizing these weapons and augmenting their destructive power by means of nuclear testing.

A sophism? Undoubtedly. Nonsense? No, much worse. This is an unconcealed challenge to all mankind, disregard for the vital interests of the people for whom the Pentagon chief made his "explanations" and a mockery of their common sense.

It follows from the interview of Mr Weinberger, that the American delegation that arrived to attend the current meeting of NATO defense ministers in Wuerzberg is determined to stop short any possible talk about the United States joining the Soviet Union-announced moratorium on all nuclear blasts.

The American organizers of the meeting in Wuerzberg told newsmen that the session of the Nuclear Planning Group would discuss "disarmament issues." One can imagine what the Pentagon has in mind when it says "disarmament," considering the fact that the "prevention" of an arms race in space, Washington style, is a planned deployment of thousands of units of strike weapons, including nuclear system, in the near-earth space.

For many years now the leaders of West European countries who have to reckon with public opinion at home have been timidly trying to put in the communiques issued at the end of the NATO gatherings their "special opinion" concerning the need of arms reduction by means of negotiations. Another such attempt will possibly be made at the Wuerzberg session of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group. However, it has become a rule for Washington to brush off even the most modest wishes of its allies as regards the problems of war and peace.

There is every reason to believe that the current NATO defense ministers meeting will be no exclusion in this respect.

U.S. 'STUBBORNLY' REFUSES TO MATCH TEST BAN

LD201846 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1600 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Political Observer Aleksandr Zholkver commentary]

[Text] Already the initial reaction to the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium appeal to the U.S. Congress proves that the question of putting a halt to nuclear tests has now become the focus of universal attention. Nor is this surprising; after all, if the USSR and the United States, which possess the largest nuclear arms stockpiles, were to renounce nuclear explosions, this would represent a most important step toward removing the threat of a nuclear conflagration in which the whole of mankind may perish. Why is it, then, that Washington stubbornly refused to follow our country's example? Our country has unilaterally refrained from carrying out nuclear tests for more than 7 months now, even though in the same period the United States has already carried out seven officially announced nulcear explosions. Up until recently, Washington made it appear as though everything was being held up by the problem of verification. However, scientists, including U.S. scientists, have proven that monitoring the halting of nuclear tests can be fully provided for through national means with the addition, where necessary, of on-site inspection.

The USSR for a long time now has been trying to persuade the United States to reach an accord concerning inspections of this kind and also to make use of the additional proposals of the six Delhi declaration signatory states. However, naturally enough, the point at issue here should revolve around monitoring the halting of nuclear explosions and not their continuation. And, in order to get nuclear arms tests banned, the USSR is ready for talks on any basis -- bilateral, trilateral, or multilateral. Thus, it is clearly not a matter of verification or the nature of the talks, it is a matter of the position taken by United States. And this position is determined by the interests of the U.S. military-industrial complex and of the so-called global strategy of the current U.S. Administration.

Setting forth this strategy in a recent message to Congress, President Reagan stated that U.S. participation in world affairs can no longer be confined to the defense of its national territory and that the United States pursues a global foreign policy. Military might is unequivocally proclaimed as the instrument of this policy.

Moreover, the White House and the Pentagon alike emphasize that nuclear arms were and remain one of the most important components of this military might. As for nuclear arms tests, these are certainly not carried out in order to verify their reliability, but for the purpose of intensifying their destructive properties, of modernizing them and creating new types, including their use in space. And U.S. military concerns receive enormous profits from all this.

However, one cannot fail to note something else: in the United States, including Congress, there is a growing number of sensible politicians who recognize the necessity of curbing the dangerous and ruinous nuclear arms race. And now, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium calls on Congress to do everything in its power so that the position of the United States, too, may correspond to the resolution of a most important task of our time: to put a halt to nuclear tests in the interests of ensuring stable world peace.

'TOP PRIORITY' CONTRASTS SECURITY CONCEPTS

LD181227 Moscow in English to North America 0001 GMT 17 Mar 86

[Panel discussion on U.S. and USSR concepts of security hosted by Pavel Kuznetsov with Dr Radomir Bogdanov and Dr Sergey Plekhanov, both from the Moscow United States of America and Canada Institute -- on the "Top Priority" program — live or recorded]

[Text] [Kuznetsov] Last week we discussed the Soviet concept of securty outlined by General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev in the political report to the 27th Communist Party Congress in Moscow. The Soviet concept urges a new approach to security, saying it can be achieved only through political solutions, not through military ones, because the might of modern weapons is such that no military defenses, regardless of how powerful and sophisticated they may be deemed by their creators, will bring the desired protection. Also, security has to be mutual, there being no American security without that of the Soviet Union and vice versa, and in terms of international relations security has to be universal. Well, this being the case, my first question goes to you, Dr Bogdanov. In the White House they see no other way to get rid of nuclear weapons other than through building space defenses in the framework of the "star wars" program or, as it is officially known, the SDI. Well, I would like your opinion on this program.

[Bogdanov] Let me call your attention to one point. In our basics of the new universal international security system SDI takes very important place, in very negative sense, because our point of view is very clear and there is no changing that, which is if you have nuclear sword in the space you dictate your will to the rest of the world.

That's very simple, you know, that's why we are objecting to it very much. It's another side of the medal we have been discussing, of the medal of superiority. Do you agree with me, Sergey?

[Plekhanov] Of course, it's a new way of trying to achieve superiority for the United States. It's very clear. I mean, of course, in public statements from Preident Reagan we have heard the assertion that SDI is supposed to be a peace shield for the world, for the United States in the first place, but if you go and read the statements from the people who are involved in the technical details of the program, statements from the Pentagon officials, from the scientists involved, it becomes clear that what they have in mind is something much more sinister than that. It's simply buttressing the American offensive potential, the nuclear missile potential of the United States with an antimissile shield for the United States which would make it much easier for American defense planners to think in terms of delivering a first strike against the Soviet Union.

[Kuznetsov] Going back to security. We're speaking about security. The Americans, the White House, the people in the White House are also speaking about security and they're talking about it almost every day. So our concept is to phase out nuclear weapons, not to build space weapons, not to spend trillions of rubles or dollars, or whatever. The American concept of security is to build new weapons, space weapons, and at the same time there is work on the MX missiles, on the Trident II missiles; they are building more cruise missiles, they have been testing them all along in Canada and other places. There is great emphasis on new weapons, with the Midgetman and so on and so forth. In other words, we are faced with two radically opposed concepts of security. How do we overcome this contradiction, is there a mechanism, is there a body apart from the Geneva arms control talks to bridge gaps, to make our differences less obvious, less glaring?

[Bogdanov] Oh, yes. I believe that you have just mentioned all the points which are dividing us with the American concept of security, and in connection with that let me say something about our basics. Numbering one is military field, and in this military field how we perceive how it should be. So we have some very important points, that's my answer to your question. Points, the points which take into consideration the worries of the other (?side), (?by the way), it's not unilateral Soviet remedy. No, we take into consideration what the West is worrying about.

For instance, the point number one is our suggestion that we should refuse to go into nuclear war as a means of solving problems between states. Not only nuclear (?issues) but conventional too. It means that dealing with the nuclear arms we suggest to deal with the conventional arms in the way we are dealing with the nuclear arms. So it means that we are also for reducing them, not building up. We don't want dealing with nuclear arms to bring the arms race inte the other (?field, conventional). No. We would like to deal together with both.

Number two, and that is very important, you know, ban on deployment of arms in (?the) space, cosmic striking arms, and at the same time moratorium on the test of all nuclear weapons, with the liquidation of them at the later stage. Then, then, the destruction of chemical weapons -- I mean principled ban on all means of massive destruction of people. If you look at that, you know, you will see that it covers the whole range of the ominous, you know, problems we have to face. Then we say that we at the same time we should strictly go into decreasing military potential of all the states under very strict control by all means.

[Kuznetsov] National, international and on site.

[Bogdanov] Oh, yes, and on-site inspection. So you have a very, very efficient combination of control. And then you (?dissolve) all the military [word indistinct] and then you start (?proportionally) decrease your military budget. And no I believe we should come to the political field of our basics, which are very closely connected to the military.

[Kuznetsov] Yes, I agree. Dr Plekhanov.

[Plekhanov] Well, I'd like to comment on what Dr Bogdanov has just said. He mentioned the decrease of military budgets. Our listeners should not get the impression that we think that it's the last (?on the point). I mean, this thing could be put in the forefront.

[Bogdanov] Oh, yes, of course.

[Plekhanov] We don't mean that it's just a postponement of the (?alliances).

[Bogdanov] No, no, not at all, not at all.

[Plekhanov] Well, let's (?answer) the political area. It is, I think, a very important point which was made in the report by Comrade Gorbachev that this is a world which is undergoing rapid and dynamic changes. And there is a number of (?actors) in the international scene, I mean the governments, the states [words indistinct]. The number of (?actors is decreasing and so) this is a world system in which the politics based on -- the policies based on force will have less and less room. This is a world where one should get what it wants by means of accommodation, negotiations with the other, taking into account the legitimate interests of other states. This is a world, as Mr Gorbachev has emphasized, which is getting too small and too fragile for policies based on force. And therefore, the new international security system which we would like to see built on this planet involves very strict observance of the principle of respect of each nation to choose the ways and forms of its development. No one should impose its own blueprints and its own will on other states.

Another important point is fair political settlement of international crises and regional conflicts. It's very important to pay attention to what's going on in various regions of the world and those regional conflicts which go on in various parts of the world. They are very bad for international security. We are all for finding adequate and fair political solutions not solutions imposed from the outside but solutions which are based on the local interests, (?laws).

[Kuznetsov] Yes, this is important because the Americans -- Washington -- says that to make any progress in arms control we have to solve regional crises first, kind of making it conditional on arms control. I mean, either we solve or there is no progress in arms control. I mean, do you agree with this?

[Plekhanov] Well, in the first place I don't see why work can't be carried out in both areas, proceeding with arms control and proceeding with the solution of regional...

[Kuznetsov interrupting] ...without any conditions.

[Plekhanov] ...conflicts. Yes, without any conditions whatsoever. And in fact I think it could be turned the other way round. Without arms limitations, without measures to do something in the military area, the solution of regional conflicts becomes more difficult because there are far too many arms in the world.

[Kuznetsov] There are certain areas in which we see eye to eye with the United States. For example, the United States Administration agrees and has gone on record as saying that there can be no winner in a nuclear war. We fully agree with the statement but still there are wide differences.

[Plekhanov] There is another point on which theoretically we agree and that is the danger of terrorism. Comrade Gorbachev emphasized that we consider terrorism a very dangerous phenomenon and that measures, international measures, should be taken to combat terrorism because this is very important. But the problem is, that declarations may sound similar, but when you go into the way those declarations are or are not being implemented, that's where you see the difference.

[Kuznetsov] As President Reagan said, if you want peace prepare for war.

[Bogdanov] Yes,and we have another area of basics, you know, like economical, like humanitarian. We have no time to (?deliberate) on that but I also hope that we will have time. But I just would like to emphasize it's a comprehensive problem including economical and humanitarian problems and if you adopt basics you may come to the conclusion that it's a very good base for a dialogue between all the states and first of all members of the Security Council. Why? Because the responsibility for the security lies with the members of the Security Council. Not because that is their privilege, that is their responsibility. Then it is suggested in the report, very rightly, that why not five permanent members of the Security Council may not get together to discuss all the human, world problems within the frames of that basic. I think it sounds very, very, very convincing and very promising.

[Kuznetsov] My last question to you, Dr Bogdanov. How do you see -- what is your impression of the Soviet concept of security? Do you believe that it can be realized, implemented, given certain differences and at times very wide differences with the United States?

[Bogdanov] You know, basically, unfortunately, I am a pessimist in the field of the present state of the Soviet-American relations but in this particular case I am more optimistic. You know why? Because all those basics are so appealing, so realistic that after all, Pavel, you know, nobody expected that they will be immediately accepted by USA, by the other countries. It's very good food for thinking, you know. It's a process. It may take some years or decade or so, but I believe that common sense -- and the American people is very famous for the common sense, you know that -- the common sense will prevail and the basics in one way or the other will become a universal, you know, form of cooperation and interaction between states. That's my belief.

[Kuznetsov] Thank you, Dr Bogdanov, thank you, Dr Plekhanov. This is "Top Priority". I am Pavel Kuznetsov, your host. Please join us a week from now for another edition of "Top Priority" from the North American service of Radio Moscow.

'SERIOUS QUESTIONS' REMAIN AFTER CDE SESSION

PM201445 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 20 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Dispatch by own correspondent A. Sychev: "Who Is Delaying Work"]

[Text] Stockholm -- The latest session of the Conference on Confidence- and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe has ended in the Swedish capital.

What are the session's results? The 15 January 1986 statement by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and the 27th CPSU Congress, which confirmed the Soviet state's unswerving desire to consolidate peace, had positive influence on its progress -- and this was noted in a number of speeches at the final plenary session.

At the session the USSR and the socialist countries again undertook vigorous actions to lead positive impetus to the conference's work and promote its successful completion. The socialist countries submitted in the working groups formulas for editing the final document, taking into account the positions and interests of their partners in the talks.

As is well known, the Soviet Union expressed the readiness to adopt the idea of a number of states on the mutual exchange of annual plans of military activity. The Polish delegation submitted detailed proposals for inviting observers.

Great activeness was displayed also by representatives of the neutral and nonaligned countries who sought to promote the search for and development of mutually acceptable decisions. Thanks to the efforts of the majority of those taking part in the conference definite dynamism was displayed in its work.

Nonetheless it must be noted that many serious questions remain unresolved. As is well known, the question of giving notification of naval activity in sea and ocean regions adjacent to Europe was a delaying factor.

To overcome this obstacle the Soviet Union put forward the proposal to examine right now questions of giving notification of the activity of ground forces and air forces and to carry out the naval forces to the next stage of the conference, stipulating this in a jointly drafted document.

But the NATO countries and above all the United States which throughout the conference opposed the navy being encompassed by confidence-building measures are also opposing the carrying over of this question. Where is the logic? What is this, an attempt to retain the deadlock? After all, it is perfectly obvious that without a gradual discussion of the problems work will eventually come to a halt not only in the field of notification but also in its connected aspects such as the exchange of annual plans in military activity and the invitation of observers.

Nonetheless, instead of a constructive reply the United States' bloc partners are trying to present the Soviet initiative as a refusal to give notification of naval activity. Failure to understand or unwillingness to understand? The USSR gave clear explanations: It is a case only of carrying over in accordance with the conference mandate, not of removing this complex problem from the conference table which, given the time, would make it possible to investigate it more carefully and find a solution according with the security interests of all. There can be no doubts that the activity of the ground forces, air forces, and navies throughout Europe and in adjacent sea and ocean regions and air space should be subject to notification.

The NATO countries' submission, after 2 years' silence, of their proposals for editing adocument on the nonuse of force is as a whole undoubtedly a useful advance. But unfortunately their proposals still contain an attempt to emasculate the universality of the principle of the nonuse of force, to express it through the collection of military-technical confidence-building measures, and they discard the main provision -- the nonuse of military force, nuclear or conventional.

The NATO countries' attitude toward editing the document also puts us on our guard. They have in fact failed to alter their position on a single question. Their representatives inundated the working groups with depressing monotony with formulations taken from old proposals, many of which were rejected long ago or which are totally unacceptable. Is it not time to remove them and not to overload the talks with burdensome but futile debates?

Other examples can be cited of the NATO countries' blatantly unconstructive approach. "The coordination of the positions of 35 states with different political, economic, and social systems is, of course, no simple matter," special envoy O.A. Grinevskiy, the leader of the Soviet delegation, said. "We do not want to dramatize the situation. But the time has come to renounce futile attempts to achieve one-sided advantages, it is essential to embark on the settling of unresolved problems. That is the only guarantee of the conference's successful completion."

'UNCONSTRUCTIVE' UK STANCE ON MISSILES ASSAILED

[Melor Sturua article: "Independence or Shortsightedness?"]

[Text] The other day THE WASHINGTON POST published an article which started somewhat enigmatically. The newspaper wrote: "Now that all the animals and gods of the superpowers' nuclear arsenals are well known the the entire world -- all those 'poseidons' and 'titans,' 'bisons, and 'bears' -- yet another terrifying arsenal has emerged: 'hades,' 'chevalines,' and 'plutos.'" What was it talking about? French and British nuclear arms. The newspaper noted with alarm that these countries' nuclear arsenals are "growing at a sensational pace."

In this instance the definition "sensational" is by no means sensational. It is wholly adequate and gives a realistic reflection of the heart of the matter. Here are facts drawn from Western sources concerning Britain. At this stage Britain has 64 Polaris nuclear warheads. In implementing its so-called "modernization" program, the British Navy is building a new submarine fleet, including 4 submarines equipped with 16 Trident missiles, each of which will carry 8 individually targetable warheads, and is equipping 4 submarines with 64 new Chevaline missiles carrying 2 warheads each. Construction of new nuclear-capable Tornado jet aircraft is also under way. As a result of the implementation of the program the British Navy will have 512 nuclear warheads and Britain's total nuclear potential will reach 1,088 warheads. But it is not just a question of quantity, even though the manyfold increase in the British nuclear arsenal is sufficiently noteworthy in itself. The fact is, as the newspaper THE GUARDIAN writes, that "Trident will create the potential for inflicting a first-strike against the Soviet Union and this opinion is backed up by the privately expressed opinions of the Americans, who know more about it."

Thus, the British Isles are gripped by a strong nuclear arms race fever. Why? Perhaps they are directly threatened by invasion? In no way, unless, of course, one includes the U.S. nuclear missile infrastructure in this invasion. So what is the matter? The official standard position of the Tory government is that Britain needs an "independent deterrent."

Here is yet another example of the famed British hypocrisy. It is particularly visible in the word "independent." The nuclear arms race that Britain has launched makes it even more dependent on the United States. I can back up that statement. Here are certain examples that by no means exhaust the line of argument. Trident missiles will be bought from the United States. Servicing and spares will be provided from U.S. bases in Kings Bay, Georgia.

The key aspects in the planning of British submarines will depend on the U.S. concern General Dynamics. The enriched uranium used as fuel on the submarines will be bought in the United States. Tests of the modernized Trident warheads will also be held in the United States -- in Nevada. But that is by no means all. Washington will have control of the systems for planning the trajectories and targeting the missiles themselves. This will be carried out by the U.S. joint strategic staff in Omaha, Nebraska using U.S. codes. Intelligence information will be obtained from U.S. spy satellites. (British submarines will depend on U.S. Navstar satellites to fix their position before missile launch. And access to these satellites is totally controlled by Washington.)

That is the background against which British Prime Minister Thatcher replied to the 15 January Soviet proposals. She described them, according to a Press Association report, as "unacceptable." Clearly, consistency is not one of the British premier's virtues. Quite recently Mrs Thatcher advocated removing Soviet medium-range missiles from Europe and urged that the question should not be linked with strategic and space arms. She even compared such a development with "the best Christmas present possible," stalling with a story about "Greeks bearing gifts." As Mrs Thatcher stated the other day in the House of Commons, her government refuses to freeze its nuclear arms and will continue to modernize them.

The key phrase in the British premier's speech was: "If a deterrent is not modernized it stops being a deterrent." Simple logic -- and the British have always been strong on logic -- says: If deterrents are eliminated on a mutual basis, there will be nobody left to deter or to be scared. Thatcher once welcomed the Soviet-U.S. summit talks in Geneva, stating that they "hold out the hope of ensuring peace worldwide." But what did she and her cabinet do to implement that hope? Nothing apart from trying to clip its wings. What London calls "modernization" is actually the sabotaging of that hope.

London's negative and unconstructive position took many Britons aback and caused indignation in the broadest circles of the British public. THE GUARDIAN described it as a "fatal and cowardly act." With unconcealed irony it wrote that London "has decided that it likes the cruise missiles that have been deployed, and if they are taken away it will feel robbed." THE GUARDIAN's irony is all the more bitter because the "modernization" organized by Thatcher will cost British taxpayers 11 billion pounds sterling. Yet Britain is now spending more per capita on military purposes than any other West European NATO member. Britain's military budget has been growing nonstop for 7 years in succession.

But the threat to Britain's national security has been growing nonstop too -- and growing appallingly, to use Mrs Thatcher's terminology. Blocking the resolution of the disarmament problem in the diplomatic sphere, particularly in Europe, and whipping up the nuclear arms race in the military sphere, the British Tory Government is showing dangerous, if not criminal, shortsightedness. Not for nothing is it said that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones.

While the British public is expressing its discontent at Thatcher's negative position, the Pentagon, according to THE WASHINGTON POST, is "enthusiastically supporting her." The newspaper is by no means exaggerating. That was the spirit in which the statement by Richard Perle, U.S. assistant defense secretary, was couched the other day. Well, one can understand the Pentagon: An odd missile in the anti-Soviet arsenal or an odd wrench in the works of disarmament has never bothered it. Britain's national interests are another matter. As is well known the umbrella is a constant feature of a Briton's wardrobe, or rather, of his equipment. Now they want to turn this constant feature into a "nuclear umbrella." But whereas the first offers protection against rain, the second not only offers no protection against a nuclear downpour but might even provoke one. The best and most reliable means of avoiding this deadly downpour is to modernize thinking, not instruments of mass destruction.

WARSAW PACT FOREIGN MINISTERS COMMUNIQUE

PM201715 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 21 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

["Communique of a Session of the Warsaw Pact States Foreign Ministers Committee -- PRAVDA headline]

[Text] A routine session of the Committee of Foreign Ministers of the member-states of the Warsaw Treaty on Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance was held in Warsaw 19-20 March 1986.

Taking part in the meeting were Minister of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Bulgaria Petur Mladenov, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Hungarian People's Republic Peter Varkonyi, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the German Democratic Republic Csar Fischer, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Polish People's Republic Marian Orzechowski, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Socialist Republic of Romania Ilie Vaduva, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Eduard Shevardnadze, and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic Bohuslav Chnoupek.

1. The ministers exchanged opinions on the situation in Europe in light of the general state of international relations and the prospects for their future development. They placed on record the fact that the international situation remains tense and dangerous. Concern was expressed over the intensification of the arms race, especially the nuclear arms race, and the actions being taken to extend it into space. The United States and its NATO allies are pressing ahead with the arms race in all directions. The unceasing deployment of American medium-range missiles in a number of West European countries causes serious alarm. The imperialist policy of force and of interference in other states' internal affairs continues. All this increases the danger of worldwide nuclear catastrophe, threatening the destruction of life on earth.

At the same time a real hope of changes for the better in the international arena has appeared thanks to the vigorous and purposeful actions of socialist states, and the faith of people in a peaceful future has been strengthened.

The ministers stressed that the peace proposals, set forth by the meeting of the Political Consultative Committee of Warsaw Treaty member-countries in Sofia in October 1985, are directed at carrying out the most urgent, cardinal task of our time -- to eliminate the threat of nuclear war, to stop the arms race, first of all the nuclear arms race, and to switch over to disarmament. The consistent, peace-loving policy of the Warsaw Treaty member-states opens up real possibilities for the attainment of these aims, for a constructive dialogue on the most pressing and burning problems of international relations.

The Soviet-American summit meeting in Geneva created preconditions for a transition from the present state of confrontation to a normalization of relations between the USSR and the United States and for improving the international situation.

By the joint vigorous and persistent actions of governments and peoples, of all realistically thinking forces, it is possible to ensure a turn for the better in European and world affairs, a revival of the policy of detente and constructive cooperation.

The states represented at the meeting fully supported the program of fully liquidating all arsenals of nuclear and chemical arms before the end of this century and banning space strike arms set forth in the 15 January 1986 statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

Stessing the very great importance of this program, they are determined to make every effort to carry it out. This would remove the threat hanging over mankind, lead to a radical improvement of the international situation, and provide an opportunity for doing away with weapons of mass destruction for good.

The Warsaw Treaty states insistently urge the NATO countries, above all the United States, Britain, and France, to display realism and responsibility with a view to reaching accords, taking into account the interests of both sides and all other states, concerning a radical reduction of nuclear weapons and their subsequent elimination and prevention of an arms race in space.

Elimination of weapons of mass destruction should be accompanied with an appropriate reduction of conventional arms and armed forces. The states represented at the meeting reaffirmed their principled position and proposals on matters of disarmament, stronger peace, and international security. They come out for strict observance of the principle of equality and identical security and for ensuring military balance at a lower level.

It was stressed that the forthcoming Soviet-American summit meeting should center on questions connected with reaching concrete agreements on stopping the arms race, primarily the nuclear arms race, on earth and preventing it in space. At this meeting accords could be reached at least on questions of ending nuclear tests and eliminating American and Soviet medium-range missiles in the European zone.

It was stressed at the meeting that it is necessary for all states to strictly observe the principles of respect for national independence and sovereignty, nonuse of force or threat of force, inviolability of borders and territorial integrity, a peaceful settlement of disputes, noninterference in internal affairs, equality and other generally recognized norms of international relations.

2. The Warsaw Treaty states are most resolutely against the further stockpiling of nuclear weapons in Europe, and for completely freeing the continent of nuclear weapons, both medium-range and tactical. They stand for complete elimination of Soviet and U.S. medium-range missiles -- both ballistic and cruise missiles -- in the European zone as the first step in this direction.

Implementation of such a measure requires that the United States make a commitment not to supply its strategic missiles and medium-range missiles to other countries while Britain and France make a pledge not to increase their corresponding nuclear armaments. Once American medium-range missiles are completely eliminated in Europe, there will be no need for the further presence of Soviet operational-tatical missiles of enhanced range in the countries where they wre installed.

Participants in the meeting believe that the establishment of nuclear-free zones in different regions of the continent would be a good step on the way to delivering Europe from nuclear weapons. They support the proposals for establishing such zones in Scandinavia and the Balkans as well as proposals for creating a nuclear-free corridor along the line dividing the NATO and Warsaw Treaty countries in central Europe.

The states represented at the meeting want the European Continent to be fully cleared of chemical weapons. In this connection they support the proposals of the German Democratic Republic and Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, and Romania for establishing zones free of chemical weapons accordingly in central Europe and the Balkans.

The ministers consider it necessary to envigorate the Vienna talks on mutual armed forces and arms cuts in central Europe to most speedily reach mutually acceptable agreements. The proposals presented on 20 February 1986 by the allied socialist states -- direct participants in the talks -- contribute to drawing the sides' stands closer. Hope was expressed that these proposals will meet with a positive response.

The Warsaw Treaty member-states call for steadily carrying on the all-European process, and for strengthening security and developing cooperation in Europe.

The ministers have discussed the state of affairs at the Stockholm Conference on Confidence-and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe and consider it necessary to accelerate its work in order to complete the first stage by the adoption of a substantial final document, that would be tabled at the Vienna meeting of representatives of the states participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The ministers expect the forthcoming meeting in Berne of experts of the states participating in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe dealing with questions of contacts between people, institutions, and organizations to be held in a constructive atmosphere. It was pointed out that the socialist states will further consistently work for fully ensuring, given the respect for the sovereignty of states, human rights in all fields, especially, the right to life in conditions of peace and freedom.

An exchange of views and information has been held on the course of preparations for the scheduled meeting of representatives of states -- participants in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, which is to open in Vienna this autumn. That meeting is designed to make a substantial contribution to improving the political climate and reviving detente in Europe and in the world, in coordinating major new steps for lowering the level of military confrontation on the European Continent, and broadening cooperation between European states. The need for developing economic and scientific-technological cooperation and building up conficence in economic relations was stressed.

The opening of the Vienna meeting at the foreign ministers level would give it the necessary political impetus.

The ministers have examined in detail questions pertaining to strengthening peace and security and the development of cooperation on the European Continent, and have resolutely declared that the invoilability of borders, respect for territorial-political realities, which were shaped as a result of World War II, and post-war developments are the necessary prerequisites for preserving peace and security in Europe. They have condemned the dangerous activity of the revanchist forces, above all in the FRG, and stressed that revanchism and support for it anywhere poison the political atmosphere and are detrimental to mutual understanding among the European nations, thus threatening the outbreak of a military conflict.

3. The ministers have stressed the importance of accelerating work at the Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons for a practical response to the problem of preventing an arms race in outer space and ending it on earth, and achieving weighty results in the interests of all peoples. They support the Soviet Union's contructive stand at the talks directed at this.

The meeting reaffirmed the need to prevent the spread of the arms race into outer space and to limit the use of outer space solely for peaceful aims for the benefit of all mankind. Preserving a peaceful outer space is the necessary prerequisite for carrying out far-reaching cuts and eliminating nuclear weapons.

Note was taken of the serious responsibility assumed by the initiators of the program for the emplacement of weapons in space and those who join in carrying it out, and also of the danger which the implementation of projects, similar to the so-called "European Defense Initiative," advanced in some Western European countries, would entail.

Noting the urgent need to end nuclear testing as an important measure to improve the international atmosphere and a major step along the road toward eliminating nuclear weapons, the Warsaw Treaty member-states call on the United States to terminate any nuclear explosions the way the Soviet Union did. The participants in the meeting welcome the statement of the USSR in which it said it would not conduct nuclear explosions after its unilateral moratorium expired on 31 March 1986 -- until the United States carries out its first nuclear explosion.

Everything should be done to reach agreement on the termination of all nuclear explosions. They came out in favor of an undelayed beginning of bilateral Soviet-American, or the resumption of tripartite -- involving Britain -- talks, on the complete and universal prohibition of nuclear weapon tests and in favor of holding multilateral talks on that problem within the framework of the Geneva conference on disarmament. Agreement was expressed with the proposal of the nonaligned countries on holding consultations with a view to making the 1962 Moscow treaty banning nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere, in outer space, and under water apply also to underground tests, which are not covered by the treaty.

The Warsaw Treaty member-states believe the task of the complete elimination of chemical weapons and the industrial base for their manufacture as early as in this century to be quite feasible. Talks on the conclusion of an international convention on the prohibition of chemical weapons and the destruction of the existing stockpiles of such weapons should be intensified. They stand for reaching accords on a multilateral basis on the non-transfer of chemical weapons to anyone whomsoever and on their non-emplacement on the territory of other states. The states represented at the meeting, themsleves adhering to this, call on the NATO countries to display similar restraint.

They came out in favor of a ban on the creation of non-nuclear weapons based on new physical principles which, in terms of their casualty-producing capabilities, are approximate to means of mass destruction.

The states represented at the meeting confirm their stance in favor of not increasing and in favor of reducing the military expenditures of states, and above all those possessing a major military potential.

They proceed from the need for efficacious, effective monitoring [kontrol] in all spheres of the limitation and reduction of arms and disarmament -- the kind of monitoring which must accord with the volume and nature of pledges made by the sides.

The meeting's participants advocate that each arms limitation and disarmament measure should not only bring greater security but must also make it possible to allocate more money for the improvement of people's conditions of life, and for the elimination of their military organizations. The Warsaw Pact member-states as before, are prepared to enter into negotiations with the NATO member-states to reach an appropriate agreement, starting with the question of the mutual reduction of military activity.

They renew their proposal that a treaty be concluded on mutual non-use of military force and maintaining relations of peace, that would be open also to all European and other countries concerned.

4. The ministers have stressed the need for resolutely putting an end to the imperialist position of strength policy and interference in the internal affairs of other states, with its manifestations in acts of aggression, state terrorism, hostile campaigns to discredit the policy of other states, and discriminatory measures in economic relations.

The socialist countries represented at the meeting reaffirm their determination to work for strict observance of the right of all people to independently decide their destiny. They are ready to contribute actively to settling conflict situations and disputes between states peacefully and through negotiations.

The participants in the meeting have noted the important role of the Nonaligned Movement as an influential force in the international arena, its contribution to preserving and strengthening universal peace, to the anti-imperialist struggle for abolishing racism, neocolonialism and economic discrimination, and to developing equitable international political and economic cooperation.

An essential task is to establish a new international economic order, to eliminate economic backwardness, and to justly settle the foreign debt problem. Businesslike talks within the UN framework with the participation of all states for a global settlement of the most important international economic problems would contribute to that.

The Warsaw Treaty member-states call for convening a world forum to discuss the complex economic and security problems, the establishment of a new international economic order, the development of trade and scientific-technological cooperation, and the removal of all that hampers world economic ties.

5. The ministers have stressed that in the complex international situation speical significance is assumed by the strengthening unity and cohesion of the Warsaw Treaty member-states. The states represented at the meeting reaffirm the importance of their defense alliance for ensuring their security and peaceful development, and for strengthening European and universal peace. They will further closely cooperate in international affairs, in outlining and implementing an agreed policy of peace, security, and international cooperation.

The significance of developing mutual economic relations, strengthening and perfecting cooperation within the CMEA framework, speedily implementing the comprehensive program for progress in science and technology, successfully implementing the socio-economic development plans, strengthening the international positions of the socialist states and achieving the aims of their peaceable foreign policy were noted.

The states represented at the meeting favor constructive cooperation with the governments, parties, public organizations, and movements concerned with the destinies of peace on earth, with all peoples with the aims of creating a comprehensive international security system, affirming the principle of peaceful coexistence in inter-state relations. They stress that at present ensuring the security of states is above all a political issue, which is to be resolved only through political means.

The Warsaw Treaty member-states will do everything in their power so that 1986, which the United Nations Organization has declared an international year of peace, will be marked with real progress towards an improvement in European and world affairs.

The meeting of the foreign ministers committee proceeded in an atmosphere of friendship and comradely cooperation. It was agreed that the next meeting will be held in Bucharest.

CEMA MACHINE BUILDING SESSION IN BUDAPEST NOTED

LD210037 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1900 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] A routine session of the CEMA committee on cooperation in machine building has taken place in Budapest. Taking part in its work were representatives of Bulgaria, Hungary, Vietnam, the GDR, Cuba, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the USSR, Czechoslovakia, and also Yugoslavia. Questions on implementing the comprehensive program of scientific and technological progress of CEMA countries up to the year 2000, including questions on speeding up scientific and technological progress in machine building industries and significantly raising the quality of machines and equipment, were considered. Representatives of the countries in the committee were received by Lazar, member of the MSZMP Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the Hungarian Council of Ministers.

UN SECRETARY GENERAL PRAISES SOVIET UN ACTIVITY

LD210808 Moscow TASS in English 0745 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 21 TASS -- U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar spoke highly of the U.S.S.R.'s activity at the United Nations Organization aimed at promoting peace, international security, mutual understanding and cooperation among nations. Receiving the credentials from Yuriy Dubinin, permanent representative of the U.S.S.R. to the United Nations and representative of the U.S.S.R. in the Security Council, he stressed the importance of the Soviet peace initiatives for curbing the arms race, removing the threat of nuclear catastrophe and ensuring universal security through disarmament. The U.N. secretary general pointed out that at the present-day complex international situation the principal task of the United Nations is to intensify efforts to maintain world peace and security and to work for peace all over the world.

ARBATOV ON NEED FOR INTERNATIONAL BREAKTHROUGH

AU171611 Sofia TRUD in Bulgarian 11 Mar 86 p 4

[Academician Georgiy Arbatov article: "The Decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress: Strategic Course Toward Universal Security"]

[Text] In the international arena a breakthrough is needed for the better. The nations of the world expect it and are insistently demanding it. The practical approach toward this great goal was yet again confirmed in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee delivered by Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev. This report defines the basic aims and directions of the party's foreign policy strategy. The humanism of the communist ideology and its moral values also determine our ideal for building international relations at this stage; it is an ideal for a world free of weapons and force, a world in which each people freely chooses its own path of development. And as was noted in the Political Report, "in the future the main line of the party's activity in the world arena remains the struggle against the nuclear threat, against the arms race, and for the preservation and strengthening of general peace." There is no alternative to this policy, and we are not looking for one.

On 3 October 1985 in Paris Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in remarking that human thought possess the sad capacity of lagging behind fast-changing reality, noted that we in the Soviet Union are beginning to rethink many things and to bring them into full conformity with the new realities, including in the military and political fields. In other words, here we are speaking of the development of a new concept for international security, of a new approach toward such security. In the Political Report a detailed analysis is made of everything which arises from the setting of such a task. In the development of the new conception examination is not simply confined to concrete proposals; our approach to these important international problems is also set out in a larger conceptual framework.

First, in our epoch reliable security must not and cannot be provided solely by military-technical means. Security is a political problem and can be solved only by political means. This became particularly evident when new weaponry appeared, which turned military might into a nuclear boomerang. "Security cannot be built forever on the fear of retribution, that is, on the doctrines of "deterrence" or "threats." Second, in developing the new conception concerning security, we proceed from the standpoint that you cannot have security at the expense of another country or to the detriment of another country. Now we can mutually have either security or absolute risk. If we speak of the relations with the United States, the security is mutual, while if we speak in a broader international framework, then universal security and security for all is a term which was coined in the report of the "Palme Commission."

We proceed from the standpoint that such an approach meets mutual interests. Although the United States, as was said in the Political Report, even today remains the engine of militarism, nonetheless such an approach corresponds not only to our interests, but also to those of America. Apart from this, the world does not consist solely of the United States. It is much wider, and universal security meets the interests of the whole of mankind, of all countries and peoples. And there is a further element in our approach. It consists in the fact that the world finds itself in a process of impetuous experimentation and of headlong changes, and no one is in a position to preserve an eternal status quo in the world. This is a reality which we have to take into account -- dozens of states exist in the world, each of which has its own legal rights and interests, but in addition to this all must -- with all the sharp contradictions -- master the science and art of peaceful coexistence, the science and art of behaving in the international arena in a restrained, attentive, and civilized manner, that is, in conditions of correct international dealings and cooperation.

USSR DEPUTY MINISTER ILICHEV ON FOREIGN POLICY

AU272208 Sofia NARODNA MLADEZH in Bulgarian 25 Feb 86 p 33

[Interview with Leonid Ilichev, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, with unnamed NARODNA MLADEZH correspondent; date and place not given]

[Text] "I am glad to take advantage of this opportunity which enables me to address the younger generation in fraternal Bulgaria from the pages of your newspaper. You People show a constant interest in the life of people in our country, in its Communist Party, and in the Soviet state. It is with satisfaction that I note the interested approach of Bulgarian youths to international problems, and I consider this a confirmation of the active stand of those who are the militant reserves of the fighters of communism, for a world without wars, for clear skies over our planet."

This is the opening statement with which Leonid Fedorovich Ilichev, USSR deputy minister of foreign affairs, delegate to the 27th CPSU Congress, began his interview with our correspondent in the USSR.

[NARODNA MLADEZH] Can you describe the characteristic features of the new edition of the CPSU draft program regarding USSR foreign policy at this stage?

[Ilichev] The CPSU Program which is now still valid was adopted at the 22d CPSU Congress in 1961, as you know. The quarter of a century which has elapsed since that time had confirmed the correctness of this program's fundamental, political postulates, as well as our party's and the Soviet state's general line on the international scene. Naturally the basic postulates laid down in the aforementioned program are still valid and are preserved in the new draft program which was submitted to the CPSU congress. This is why the first characteristic feature of this program can be described as a continuation of the existing CPSU program. However, time goes on. Within the last 25 years, and I presume that the majority of your readers are of the same age, or approximately 25 years old, the colonial empires collapsed and dozens of new states were established on their ruins. An approximate military-strategic balance was achieved between the USSR and the United States. The world has changed and it is fully understandable that the time has come to analyze the experience accumulated and the new phenomena of international life on a scientific basis in order to be able to determine the chief trends and goals of our policy under the present historical conditions in a more precise and specific manner. The analysis of the new, contemporary world and of its development from a Marxist-Leninist point of view; the critical evaluation of certain former postulates, which are outdated; and the innovative approach to the crucial problems; and to the strategy and tactics of our country on the world scene can be defined as the second characteristic trait in the foreign policy of the CPSU and of the Soviet state.

The draft program is characterized by anotehr trait as well. The Central Committee Commission which worked on the text of the new draft program based itself on the Leninist instructions stating that the CPSU Program must express our basic views, based on principles, and our long-term political goals, that this program must be an unmistakable and accurate presentation of the goals for which the CPSU is struggling and which it will struggle for within the foreseeable future. This is precisely why the CPSU draft program is based on a strictly realistic approach without going into unnecessary details that are likely to tie our hands and prevent creative innovative actions. In other words, stress is laid on the determination of the strategic trends in the party's work and on its objective evaluation of its own opportunities and future prospects. It is particularly important to stress that in saying all this, we must add that the foreign policy portion of the draft program (and this is quite understandable) is aimed at a peaceful manner of settling the historical controversy between the two opposed social systems into which the contemporary world is divided. We are convinced that socialism is capable of and obliged to prove its advantages by the strength of the creative example and not by the force of weapons.

[NARODNA MLADEZH] The new CPSU draft program stresses the enhanced role of the developing countries in the worldwide political and economic sphere as a characteristic feature of our present-day epoch. How can you describe the importance of the developing countries in the joint struggle for peace and international security?

[Ilichev] The forceful mass presence of the young states on the world scene is a qualitative leap in the system of international relations, which made this sytem a truly worldwide system for the first time in history. The world's political structure changed as a result of this. The participation of all peoples from the East in the settlement of the fate of all mankind, which was predicted by Valdimir Ilich Lenin, became true. If we consider the world of the developing countries and the trends that are prevailing in this world, in their entirety, the answer to your question can be quite definite: The newly liberated countries, as some of the most important political forces of the world, are undeniably playing a positive role in the joint struggle for peace and for international security. In other words, in the deployment of world forces, these countries beong to the antiwar and anti-imperialist forces.

Our party, the CPSU, has always devoted great attention to the consolidation of the relations between the Soviet Union and the newly liberated countries. The new CPSU draft program devotes an entire section to this question, in which the basic trends of the further development of these relations are mapped out.

The alliance of the forces of social progress and of national liberation is a guarantee for a better future for mankind. It is on this basis that the Soviet Union will further develop its relations with the newly liberated countries.

Going back to the thesis that the solution of numerous international problems depends on the newly liberated countries as well, I would like to say that this is not only due to their number, according to which they represent more than two-thirds of the states existing in the world today. It is because in their zone, dangerous conflicts are erupting today, conflicts whose influence reaches for beyond their borders, exacerbating the already tense international situation. Without the participation of the newly liberated countries the chief problem of our contemporary epoch -- the problem of war and peace -- cannot be solved. International security demands today that peace should be ensured not only in Europe, but also in Asia, Africa, and Latin America, as well as on the oceans. To consolidate international security -- this is the cause of every country and every nation, the cause of the broad international coalition of peaceloving forces on our planet.

REACTION CONTINUES TO CONTRA AID CAMPAIGN, VOTE

Reagan Broadcast Hit

PM201155 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[V. Gan article: "Truth Will Out"]

[Text] Washington, 17 Mar -- President Reagan today addressed the country on national television and tried to "substantiate" Washington's support for the anti-Nicaraguan bandits -- the "contras" -- and whitewash its interference in the affairs of a sovereign state.

The President said nothing new in his speech, which was made up of slander and anti-Soviet insinuations. Manipulating a blatant lie, he made unpardonable attacks on the Soviet Union and Cuba, which allegedly have one thought alone -- "a communist takeover of Central America." Presidential advisers had not been idle and had furnished Reagan with a false picture intended to "graphically illustrate" the scale of the "Red threat" in the region. Under this farfetched thesis the President was able to bring up "arguments" amounting to the suggestion that little Nicaragua "is a threat to U.S. security." As if ignorant of the fact that his country maintains diplomatic relations with the Managua government, Reagan called the Sandinists a "criminal regime" guilty of all the mortal sins. He extolled in every way possible the CIA-protected terrorist groups, even going as far as to say that Americans are supposedly "indebted to them" for protecting "U.S. security."

Insisting on a direct military solution to the conflict, the President groundlessly claimed that his administration has "striven and is striving for peace through negotiations." It is well known, however, that responsibility for the breakdown of negotiations rests with Washington, which would have liked to turn them into a means of diktat and of imposing its will on the Nicaraguan Government.

At the same time, Reagan, willingly or unwillingly, disclosed the true state of affairs with respect to the anti-Nicaraguan hysteria. From his words it is evident that the Pentagon considers Central America a most important region in strategic respects both for the United States and for all its allies. It is clear that countries pursuing independent policies in this region stick in American strategists' craw.

Kindling chauvinism and anti-Sovietism, Reagan has virtually blackmailed congressmen who, despite pressure from the administration, show no desire to allocate $100 million in aid for the "contras." In an attempt to deprive the legislators of "freedom to maneuver," the President has stated the issue thus: Either you vote for military supplies for terrorists, or you throw them to "the mercy of communist enemies."

A lie, as is well known, will not stand up for long. The President's speech aroused indignation among the American public and many members of Congress. Answering the President on behalf of the Democrats, Senator J. Sasser from the state of Tennessee said that the majority of Americans do not approve of the administration's aggressive, confrontational policy. On the one hand, he said, the White House is demanding that the people "tighten their belts" to get rid of the budget deficit while, on the other, it is trying to get an allocation of $100 million for undelcared war against Nicaragua. Noting the brutalities committed by the "contras" with American assistance the senator pointed out that almost every government in the region supports the "Contadora process." The Sandinists have indicated their willingness to hold negotiations; but the President insists on "expanding the war against Nicaragua," urging a blind rush into the quagmire of military operations. We have already been in that quagmire, Sasser noted.

During the President's speech, approximately 600 representatives of the American public gathered around the White House fence, protesting U.S. interventionism in Central America. "United States and CIA -- Out of Nicaragua!," "Hands Off the People of Nicaragua!", "Feed the Starving, Not the 'Contras'!" -- the banners read.

"We support the Nicaraguans' right to independent development and their desire to choose their own future for themselves," a representative of the "Information Committee in Support of Nicaragua," which organized the demonstration, told our correspondent. "We are opposed to aid for the 'contras' and to any compromises by Congress in this issue. Our President has not told the truth, in an attempt to blacken the great achievements of the Sandinist government in satisfying the needs of its country's people. This is provocative rhetoric which has nothing in common with actual reality."

...In his speech Reagan claimed that history will call the United States to aocount if the "contras" do not receive American military aid. History will indeed call the United States to account if the blood of a freedom-loving people of a freedom-loving country flows once again in the name of the United States and by the use of its weapons.

Congress Rejects Aid

LD202040 Moscow TASS in English 2002 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 20 TASS -- Today, despite the gross pressure on the part of the White House, the U.S. House of Representatives turned down the administration's request for the allocation of 100 million dollars in aid to the Nicaraguan "contras".

'Sharp Discontent' Noted

LD210803 Moscow TASS in English 0739 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 21 TASS -- President Reagan has expressed sharp discontent with the refusal of the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress to approve the administration's request for the release of 100 million dollars in aid to survivals of Somoza followers. The White House has published a statement by the head of the administration, in which the latter declares his firm determination to go ahead with getting Congress to pass his bill on real and effective aid to gangs of counter-revolutionaries and, among other things, to intensify a campaign of pressure on Congress. Reagan's intensive lobbying campaign is connected with the upcoming vote on the administration's request in the Senate and the votes on the "alternative variants" of aid to the Nicaraguan "contras" in the House of Representatives are scheduled for mid April, Reagan advised the enemies of the Nicaraguan people not to lose hope.

No-Confidence Vote Given

LD210955 Moscow TASS in English 0950 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 21 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Lyutyy Reports:

Washington faced a no-confidence vote from U.S. lawmakers for its policy of institutionalized terrorism against sovereign Nicaragua.

On Thursday, the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress voted to 210 to reject the Reagan administration's request for releasing 100 million dollars in aid to gangs of the survivals of Somoza followers who make attempts with the assistance of the Central Intelligence agency to overthrow the lawful Government of Nicaragua. Seventy million dollars out of this sum were to be allotted to shipments of modern weapons and 30 million -- for equipment, clothing and food for the enemies of the Nicaraguan people.

The results of the vote in the House of Representatives became, as UPI news agency put it, a major foreign policy defeat for President Reagan who personally led a campaign to condition Congress and the public, a campaign which is unprecedented in terms of its intensity and shrillness. Reagan devoted his recent television appearance and also several radio addresses to the issue of boosting aid to the "contras". The President and other senior officials of the administration were engaged in "arms twisting" making numerous telephone calls and summoning congressmen to the White House. Besides, the White House was not averse to employing openly McCarthyist tactics, accusing the opponents of aid to the "contras", of lack of patriotism and all but support of communism. Congressman Ronald Dellums said that attempts were made tolabel him as "red", he was intimidated and hounded.

However, the CBS television network states that despite the intensive lobbying campaign by the White House and its allies in extreme right-wing organisations, the administration's efforts failed to produce a result. This was primarily due to the fact that many lawmakers and Willy-nilly to consider the sentiments of their electors, the majority of whom, as public opinion polls showed, oppose extension of U.S. armed interference in Central America. These sentiments were reflected during stormy two-day debates ahead of the vote. Speaker of the House of Representatives Thomas O'Neill said that the policy of boosting arms shipments to the "contras" pushed the country onto a wrong road, the road of escalating the conflict what could ultimately lead to direct involvement of U.S. troops as was the case in Vietnam.

O'Neill stressed that he was deeply worried over the tactic employed by the administration towards all opponents of this course. He likened the campaign to the times of McCarthyism when those who did not wish their country to be involved in armed ventures abroad were charged with disloyalty to the government.

At the same time, AP news agency writes, the administration's defeat in the House of Representatives still does not by any means signal that the President's bid to secure extra aid for the "contras" has been a setback. The vote is ahead on the Administration's request in the Senate where the Republican Party holds a majority. Besides, a vote on a whole number of "alternative variants" of support of the terrorist anti-Nicaraguan gangs in scheduled inthe House of Representatives in mid-April.

LOMEYKO'S 20 MARCH PRESS BRIEFING REPORTED

[Text] Moscow March 20 TASS -- Soviet and foreign correspondents have been told at a briefing of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR here today that the participants in a regular meeting of the committee of the foreign ministers of the Warsaw Treaty member countries in Warsaw on March 19-20 fully supported the complex of major foreign policy actions of the USSR, outlined by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, in his statement on January 15, 1986, and urged the NATO countries, primarily the USA, Britain and France, to show full responsibility in approaching the proposal on nuclear disarmament.

Addressing the journalists, Vladimir Lomeyko, chief of the Press Department of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, said that the foreign ministers had expressed the hope that the forthcoming Soviet-American summit would concentrate on questions involved in reaching concrete agreement on cuts in nuclear armaments. The United States, naturally, should undertake not to supply its strategic and medium-range missiles to other countries and Britain and France not to build up their appropriate nuclear armaments.

The participants in the meeting especially emphasized that the common interests of the European countries call for rejecting any programs and ideas for spreading the arms race to outer space. They pointed to the dangerous nature of plans for the so-called European Defense Initiative and other projects threatening to accelerate the arms race in the European Continent. Stress was made at the Warsaw meeting, the spokesman for the Soviet Foreign Ministry said, on the urgency of the issue of stopping nuclear testing as a top-priority practical measure that will appreciably improve the atmosphere ahead of the new Soviet-U.S. summit meeting. Attention was also called to the need for effective, including international, verification in all fields of arms limitation, arms reduction and disarmament, verification that should correspond to the scope and nature of the obligations assumed by the sides.

When answering questions from journalists, the head of the Soviet Foreign Ministry's Press Department, said that the Federal Republic of Germany's involvement in the U.S. "star wars" program shows that the West German military-industrial complex wants a part in the arms race which it intends to extend to outer space. Any form of participation in the so-called Strategic Defense Initiative, he said, is dangerous for West Germany itself as well as for other European nations and ultimately for the world in general.

Dwelling on the statement of the U.S. Department of Defense with the help of which it tried to justify the violation of the state frontier of the U.S.S.R. by U.S. naval ships with references to the right of peaceful passage through the territorial waters of a country, Lomeyko emphasized that this provocative action had nothing in common with peaceful passage. It was nothing less than a wide-scale espionage operation against the U.S.S.R. which pursued the aim of collecting intelligence data about the Soviet Armed Forces. An official spokesman for the Washington administration told journalists in the Pentagon in this connection that the decision about the violation of the Soviet state frontier by the U.S. naval ships was a political decision taken at a markedly higher level than the commanders of those two ships. In other words, Lomeyko said, Washington's reaction confirms that the case in point was a pre-planned defiant provocation against the Soviet Union.

REPORTAGE ON U.S. ACTIVITIES IN MEDITERRANEAN

Libyan Forces on Alert

LD201605 Moscow TASS in English 1550 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 20 TASS -- According to a Pentagon spokemsan, the U.S. attack aircraft carrier America sailed through Gibralter and entered the Mediterranean Sea. Escorted by 10 warships, it is heading for a rendezvous with the U.S. naval armada, now on maneuvers in the southern part of the Mediterranean. According to reports from the region of the exercises, the warplanes based on the aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea are drilling tactical technique during training flights in daylight and at nighttime. Surveillance planes stuffed with modern electronic gear make flights in proximity to the frontiers of Libya's air space.

Tripoli March 20 TASS -- The Armed Forces of the Libyan Jamahiriyah have been put on standby alert.

The Libyan people, the JANA news agency reports, is ready to repel any provocation American military may stage and are determined to defend independence and sovereignty of their country. Demonstrations and rallies in support of the anti-imperialist course of the Libyan leadership have been held in the capital of Libya and other cities. The demonstrators have strongly condemned the provocative manuevers of the 6th U.S. fleet off the coast of Libya and branded Washington's policy of blackmail and military pressure.

Lomeyko on Exercises

LD201711 Moscow TASS in English 1656 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 20 TASS -- "The anti-Libyan campaign which has been launched by the United States should not be viewed as some isolated and the only instance," Vladimir Lomeyko, head of the Press Department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, stated here today at a briefing for Soviet and foreign journalists. "The campaign is a link in the chain of U.S. imperialism's actions to destabilize the situation in other parts of the world and in other progressive states, such as Angola, Nicaragua, etc."

In answer to a question as to how the situation around Libya is estimated in the light of the continuing threats and provocations on the part of the USA, the ministry's spokesman pointed out that the U.S. Navy had started large-scale exercises near the Libyan coast, the exercises which are already the fourth ones within a period of about three months. "Today one would like to emphasize once again that the militarist fuss, the U.S. provocative war-games which are directed against the sovereign Arab state cannot be regarded otherwise than the imperial concept of 'neoglobalism' in action. Libya's active anti-imperialist course and its resolute opposition to Washington's attempts at establishing an 'American-style peace' in the Middle East simply 'do not suit' the U.S. Administration. Therefore the USA through methods of crude military-political and economic pressure seeks to undermine the progressive Libyan regime, to intimidate the people of that country and to make it abandon the pursuance of the independent domestic and foreign policy."

The head of the Press Department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs went on to say that the Soviet Union, coming out in support of the Libyan people, most firmly condemned the hostile anti-Libyan campaign launched by the USA and Israel, the economic sanctions and the ostentatious military proparations against the sovereign Arab state. "Such kind of actions cannot be viewed otherwise than posing a threat to peace and security not only in the Mediterranean area but outside it as well."

"It is being expected in Soviet leading circles that a sober-minded view of the existing realities will come to prevail in the USA and that it will seriously weigh the dangerous consequences which a continuation of the U.S. policy with regard to the sovereign Libyan state may lead to."

'Armed Provocation' Begins

PM201126 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 20 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Own correspondent V. Gan dispatch under general heading "Terrorism in Action"]

[Text] Washington, 19 Mar -- The Pentagon is embarking on the implementation of an armed provocation on an unprecedented scale against Libya.

Reagan administration spokesmen have announced that U.S. military maneuvers are beginning today in the immediate vicinity of Libya's shores, with the aircraft carriers Coral Sea and Saratoga, escort ships, and deck aviation taking part. They will be joined in a day or two by a third aircraft carrier, the America. According to reports from Pentagon sources, a total of almost 40 U.S. Navy ships will be involved in these games. The Defense Department is transparently hinting at the likelihood that its naval armada will intrude into the Gulf of Sidra, which is under Libyan sovereignty.

Actually, people in Washington not only make no secret but even boast of the brazen decision to exert military pressure on the indepedent Arab state. CBS-TV cited statements by U.S. Administration officials who frankly declared that it is more than just a question of "simple maneuvers." They noted that while the United States had previously "limited itself basically to threats," now it is "fully prepared to act." CBS pointed out that the participants in the maneuvers "will essentially provoke Libya into a conflict."

By exercising the "right of might," Washington is yet again demonstrating that, as far as it is concerned, international law and the elementary norms of interstate relations are not worth a cent.

Navy Actions Noted

PM201718 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 20 Mar 86 Second Edition p 3

[TASS Report: "U.S. Naval Provocation"]

[Text] Washington, 19 Mar -- In connection with the violation by American warships of the USSR state border in the Black Sea and the protest made by the Soviet Union to the American side for this reason, the U.S. Department of the Navy has made a statement in which it tries to justify this hostile action. It claims that the transit of two U.S. Navy ships off Soviet shores to the south of the Crimean Peninsula was neither "defiant" nor "provocative." In this respect the department cites some "right of peaceful passage." What this "peaceful passage" means in Washington's interpretation is discussed in an article published by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The violation of the USSR state border in the Black Sea off the southern coast of the Crimea by American warships on 13 March this year was carried out within the framework of a regular large-scale U.S. espionage operation against the USSR under orders from the Pentagon, the newspaper reported. One of the aims of this preplanned action, it writes, citing official representatives of the U.S. Defnese Department, was to "gather intelligence" about the Soviet Union and its Armed Forces. In this connection numerous listening devices and other electronic apparatus for gathering information on the Armed Forces and arms were installed on board the cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron which penetrated Soviet waters.

Officials have indicated, THE NEW YORK TIMES continues, that the order to carry out this action was issued by the Joint Chiefs of Staff on behalf of Defense Secretary C. Weinberger and that similar "exercises" are planned for the Gulf of Sidra off the Libyan coast.

Pentagon representatives have also stated that the action in the Black Sea and the similar operations planned off Libyan shores also have the aim of "supporting President Reagan's appeal to Congress to approve an increase in military expenditure in fiscal 1987, which begins on 1 October." "When the United States has flexed its muscles in the past, officials have pointed out, such incidents have led to increased support for the President's policy in Congress," the newspaper notes.

Thus, the claimed "right of peaceful passage" for its warships through foreign territorial waters is simply a screen with which the United States tries to conceal preplanned provocation by the U.S. military against sovereign states. The Pentagon has already officially announced the beginning of new maneuvers by the U.S. Navy in direct proximity of the Libyan coast. The aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea, at present in the Mediterranean, will participate in the fourth "show of muscle" in under 3 months, as well the strike aircraft carrier America hurrying to join them, which will enter the waters of the Mediterranean sea in the next 2 days. A representative of the U.S. Defense Department reports that deck aircraft from the aircraft carrier America will be in active operation from the very first day of the maneuvers. With the arrival of the America in the Mediterranean, more than 40 U.S. Navy warships will be concentrated near the Libyan coast.

As the CBS television company has reported, the present maneuvers go beyond the bounds of "ordinary exercises." Judging by its words, Washington is trying to provoke Libya in order to gain a pretext for making a military strike against this country, whose independent, anti-imperialist course, as is well known, has long irritated Washington. "In the past we have only talked, but this time we are quite ready for action," CBS quotes the words of one American official representative.

Agayants Comments

LD201727 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1130 GMT 20 Mar 86

[International affairs journalist Nikolay Agayants commentary]

[Text] The latest U.S. naval maneuvers off the Gulf of Sidra are one more link in the chain of Washington's provocations against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, says a report from a JANA correspondent in Tripoli. Here is a Mayak commentary: At the microphone is international affairs journalist Nikolay Agayants:

Two U.S. aircraft carriers, the Coral Sea and the Saratoga, have now been plying the waters of the Mediterranean for more than 2 months and the strike aircraft carrier America is heading toward them at full steam from the Atlantic accompanied by 10 destroyers, cruisers, and auxiliary vessels. In all, let me remind you, this armada from the U.S. 6th Fleet now numbers over 40 fighting ships. These are the main participants in the latest stage of the dangerous war games undertaken by the Pentagon off the coast of Libya.

In the words of a correspondent for the CBS television network, these will be more than routine exercises. Their purpose is to provoke the Libyan Armed Forces in order to have a pretext for a strike at Libyan territory. Citing a spokesman for the Washington administration who asked to remain anonymous, AP writes that this time U.S. ships and aircraft may try to violate the waters and airspace in the Gulf of Sidra in order to see what retaliatory measures Libya might take to such a provocation. According to information in the U.S. mass media, the Pentagon has long since earmarked targets and installations at which strikes might be launched by the U.S. Navy and Air Force. The U.S. special propaganda services are now clearly seeking excuses and justifications, if one can call them that, for undertaking armed action against the Jamahiriyah. The imperialist ideologues' fabrications about a threat to the United States from Tripoli are absurd and groundless. The simple fact is that Washington cannot reconcile itself to the independent line Libya follows on the international scene, with its reluctance to submit to U.S. dictates and its frank opposition to Washington's plans for resolving the Middle East conflict.

True to the spirit of the doctrine of militant neoglobalism, these aggressive actions against Libya by the most powerful state in the capitalist world cannot fail to arouse, and indeed they are, serious alarm and anxiety among the peoples of the Mediterranean region, who are resolutely demanding that Washington stop its dangerous playing with fire.

AYTMATOV 'NOT HINTING AT CIA' IN PALME ARTICLE

PM201355 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 17 Mar 86 p 8

[Interview with Soviet writer Chingiz Aytmatov by Disa Hastad: "Not Hinting at CIA" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] "The people who murdered Olof Palme do not need to come from the United States or the CIA -- even though it does seem to be a case of reactionary forces. When I wrote my article in PRAVDA, I was shocked at the murder and at how easy it is to murder someone. If people are murdered on the streets of neutral Sweden too, it is the murder of democracy," Soviet author Chingiz Aytmatov told DAGENS NYHETER. Aytmatov is at present visiting Stockholm and was commenting on the article he wrote in PRAVDA when the news of Palme's murder become known.

The phrase "this terrorist act of violence was not carried out by people from another planet but by forces here on earth that are interested in driving whole regions and countries to the right" was interpreted by Swedish newspapers as a reference to the CIA and the United States. The previous day, the TASS news agency had hinted at the same idea.

Chingiz Aytmatov is now clearly alarmed that his words could be interpreted as such a clear reference and told me how he was given the task of writing the article: "We were sitting there at the congress at 2200 hours; it was Chebirkov who read the message about Palme's death. We all rose. Everyone was shaken. Personally I was shocked. I thought: If these neutral countries, which are like buffer zones between the East and West, are no longer secure places of refuge and terrorism, and murder is instead able to occur on the open street -- where can we feel safe?

"And in this way it was a murder, not only of Palme as a human being and politician, but of democracy."

SHULTZ TOUR AIMS TO PRESSURE GREECE, TURKEY

LD210925 Moscow TASS in English 0908 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 21 TASS -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz is beginning today a ten-day tour of West European countries. It is not concealed here that the main aim of the tour is an attempt to exert pressure on the governments of the two countries of the NATO's southern flank -- Greece and Turkey to get their consent for preservation of U.S. military bases of their territory. In the course of his trip George Shultz will make brief stop-overs in France and Italy.

COMMENTATOR HITS U.S. WARSHIPS VISIT TO KARACHI

BK201015 Moscow in Hindi to India 1400 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Unattributed Commentary]

[Text] The visit of six warships led by the nuclear aircraft carrier Enterprise of the U.S. 7th Fleet to Karachi port is a matter of serious concern. First of all, the presence of the U.S. warships near India's coast says a lot by itself; and now a special contingent of the U.S. 7th fleet, whose area of operation includes the Pacific and Indian Oceans, is visiting Karachi port. In fact, it is a welcome visit for the U.S. ships to this port which the Pentagon considers a (?forward) post for the support of its fleet activities in the Indian Ocean. In this connection, it is worth recalling that the Pentagon has about 30 bases in the Indian Ocean region; foremost among them the multipurpose military base on Diego Garcia.

American military planners, however, think that this base is far from the Asian mainland, and the visit of the U.S. warships to Karachi port is considered the first step toward using this new port. Not only U.S. warships, but also the Rapid Deployment Force would be able to use this facility. A contingent of this force has been deployed on the ships now visiting Karachi port.

The visits of the U.S. warships to Karachi should be seen in the context of U.S. plans touse Pakistan strategically in the framework of U.S.-Pakistan military cooperation. In 1981, when the U.S. Navy's frigate (Hermes) visited Karachi, negotiations between the United States and Pakistan for $3.2 billion in U.S. military aid to Pakistan were at a peak.

Today, when many U.S. warships are at anchor in Karachi, taks on $6.5 billion in new military aid are nearing completion. It could be suggested that the visit of the Enterprise is meant to test whether the Pakistani rulers are ready to consider the wishes of the partner from across the ocean or not.

The visits of the U.S. warships to Pakistani ports are part of the plan to use Pakistan for U.S. strategic objectives. This plan came to light in 1980 when CBS reported it.

The plan revealed the use of Pakistani ports and airports by U.S. warships and planes and the stationing of technical experts first -- and later soldiers -- on Pakistani military bases. Now when Pakistan has allowed the United States to use its military bases in return for weapons, the denial by the U.S. State Department to this effect in 1980 is shown to be baseless.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz spoke before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee at the time when U.S. warships were present in Karachi. Shultz expressed readiness to provide further military aid to Pakistan. As before, he expects to gain military bases in return.

A special resolution adopted at the 13th Congress of the Communist Party of India condemned U.S. military activities near the Indian coasts because the visit of the U.S. warships to Pakistan poses a direct threat to Indian security.

U.S. POLICY TOWARD AFGHAN REBELS CRITICIZED

Meese Visit Scored

PM201122 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Message to the Bandits"]

[Text] Washington, 18 Mar -- THE WASHINGTON TIMES reports that President Reagan has instructed Attorney General Edwin Meese to convey a greetings message to the Afghan "freedom-fighters" at the end of March.

Department spokesman P. Korten stated in this connection that Meese will read the President's message at an "Afghan refugee" camp near the Pakistani border with the DRA. It is no secret that in official Washington both terms are used to describe the dushman gangs which carry out gangsterlike armed raids against the Afghan people and Government with the help of U.S. weapons and the CIA.

The attorney general will carry out Reagan's instruction during a trip to a number of countries in the course of which he will visit a dushman camp in Pakistan. The official "cover" for the trip to Thailand, Burma, India, Pakistan, and Italy by the delegation of representatives from various U.S. departments headed by Meese is to "study the problem of the spread of narcotics in the world." However, it is absolutely obvious that the political "high point" of the trip will be the visit by a U.S. Administration member to an Afghan terrorist camp near the city of Peshawar. As the Justice Department spokesman pointed out, the "trip is being made on President Reagan's personal instructions."

Meese's candidacy for the post of delegation leader was, by all accounts, no accident. Not so long ago he was part of the intelligence section of the U.S. Army Reserve with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Moreover, the current attorney gerneral's belligerent mood was so great that he even -- without blushing, as the saying goes -- promoted himself. Nor, judging by his speeches, has Meese moderated his militarists ardor.

Meese's trip is the latest in a series of provocative trips by ranking Washington officials to camps of the enemies of the Afghan people in order to coordinate the waging of the undeclared war against the sovereign DRA. This war, which is part and parcel of the notorious "neoglobalism strategy" is now being made more and more extensive in scope.

Shultz Assures Support

LD211419 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1305 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 21 Mar (TASS) -- Political observer Askold Biryukov writes: U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz has not passed by the opportunity of once again stating the U.S. "resolve" to continue its blood-letting undeclared war against the DRA. Speaking on the occasion of the new year which begins today in Afghanistan, he extolled the "national liberation struggle" of the Afghan dushmans, at whose hands this war is being waged, and assured these bandits and terrorists that the United States "will support the cause of the heroic Afghan resistance until such time as it is no longer necessary..."

In the same statement, the U.S. secretary of state allowed himself "a few words" on Washington's policy in relation to a political settlement. These words, said as if in passing, also confirm only one fact, albeit an already well-known one: The U.S. position on the issue of a political settlement of the situation in Afghanistan remains stiffly negative. It is aimed at continuing to sabotage efforts to settle this issue at the negotiating table and, in essence, at keeping the situation around this country at the boiling point.

The head of the U.S. State Department is still attempting to put the cart before the horse, as the saying goes.

First, he is demanding the withdrawal from Afghanistan of the limited contingent of Soviet troops, sent into that country at the request of its leadership, and only then will he be prepared to discuss a political settlement by diplomatic means. The secretary of state's statement contains, however, not a hint of what was the first cause of the conflict, which has lasted almost 8 years now, and really must be eliminated first of all if a way to a political settlement is to be paved.

This cause is well known: The armed interference from without, mounting from year to year. During these years, imperialism and the counterrevolution it maintains have turned Afghanistan into a bleeding wound. The Soviet Union, which came to the aid of the friendly country, supports its efforts to defend the sovereignty of the DRA.

The U.S. secretary of state should know that the USSR would like to bring the Soviet troops home in the shortest time. The time scale for their stage-by-stage withdrawal has been agreed to with Kabul. In order for it to begin, a political settlement must be reached that will secure a real halt to, and reliably guarantee the nonresumption of, armed interference from outside in the internal affairs of the DRA. There are, however, no hints in Shultz' statement of a halt to this armed interference, whose main organizer and orchestrator is the U.S. Administration.

It is evident that Washington does not with to remove the thorn in the flesh represented by interference from outside in the DRA's affairs, and in so doing to remove the cause of the conflict. What is more, the administration's actions demonstrate the complete opposite: The United States intends to strive for its continuation and extension with all the negative consequences for the causes of peace and security in the region and throughout the world.

USSR, CANADA DISCUSS FISHING RIGHTS IN LENINGRAD

[Text] Moscow March 20 TASS -- There was useful exchange of opinions on Soviet Canadian fishing contacts and on the problems the solution of which contribute to the development of these contacts at the second round of bilateral consultations on relationships in the industry that took place in Leningrad, TASS has been told by Vyacheslav Zilanov, head of the Foreign Relations and General Supplies Department of the Ministry of Fishing of the USSR.

He said that Soviet fishing in Canada's 200-mile zone met the interests of the sides and that there were good opportunities for expanding it if Soviet ships were given better working conditions. The Soviet fleet does not offer competition to Canadian fishermen. It is fishing within the scientific catch quotas and concentrates on those species which Canadian fishermen practically do not fish. Moreover, the USSR pays Canada substantial license fees, which keep growing from one year to the next.

As for the demands of the Canadian delegation that the Soviet Union should buy fish from Canada, some of them put Soviet importers in a less advantageous position as compared with other buyers. For instance, the Canadian side refuses to count as Soviet purchases fish imports through mixed societies with the particiaption of Soviet capital, but such restrictions are not applied to other states buying fish from Canada. If these artificial restrictions are not lifted, the Soviet side will have to suspend its fish purchases from Canadian companies, Zilanov said. He noted that the USSR buys fish from Canada though it is not a traditional importer of fish products.

"All this shows that Soviet fishermen do not seek unilateral advantage in developing their contacts with the Canadian partners. That is why we hope for a more constructive approach of the Canadian side to the solution of the problems examined during the latest round of consultations. The Soviet Union stands for broadening and strengthening mutually beneficial and equal contacts with Canada in fishing both on a bilateral and on a multilateral basis," Zilanov said. It was noted at the consultations that the two sides had good experience of successful cooperation in that field, in particular, in exercising international control over fishing.

[TASS report: "Delegation's Visit"]

[Text] Delhi, 19 Mar -- A Soviet-Indian intergovernmental agreement on holding a USSR festival in India and an Indian festival in the USSR in 1987-1988 was signed here 18 March. The large-scale comprehensive festivals which will be held on a reciprocal basis will be devoted to the 70th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution and the 40th anniversary of India's independence. These reviews of the best aspects and achievements in the basic spheres of life and cooperation in the two countries will last for 1 year after their opening. Festival events will take place in the capitals of union republics, the administrative centers of Indian states and federal territories, other major cities, and various regions of the USSR and India. The program of events will cover the spheres of culture, art, science, education, cinematography, television and radio, press, sports, and public, youth, and women's organizations.

The agreement was signed by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of culture, and P.V. Narasimha Rao, Indian minister of human resources.

Speaking at the ceremony, both sides emphasized that they intend to organize the festival program to the highest standard and in line with the best traditions and profoundly meaningful relations between the two countries. Both sides will apply all their energy to ensure that the festival becomes a memborable landmark in the history of Indian-Soviet friendship and cooperation.

People in the USSR, the leader of the Soviet delegation stressed, react with particular gratification to the fact that great India will be the first state to be represented at such a large-scale festival. He expressed confidence that the festivals will help to deepen mutual understanding and to strengthen the friendship of the Soviet and Indian peoples, and will open new avenues of multifaceted cooperation between the two countries.

In the evening P.V. Narasimha Rao hosted a dinner in honor of P.N. Demichev. [Moscow Television Service in Russian at 2148 GMT on 20 March adds: "Comrade Demichev was also received by Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. During their conversation, which was held in a warm and friendly atmosphere, they discussed bilateral relations and ways of further developing multifaceted Soviet-Indian cooperation."]

[Text] New Delhi March 21 TASS -- The CPSU delegation led by Petr Demichev, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, has left New Delhi for Moscow today. The delegation attended the 13th Congress of the Communist Party of India, which was held in the city of Patna, Bihar State, on March 12-17. In the course of the government visit to New Delhi an intergovernmental agreement was signed on the holding of a USSR festival in India and a festival of India in the USSR in 1987-1988.

In the International Delhi Airport the delegation was seen off by P.V. Narasimho Rao, India's minister of manpower resources and home affairs, and other officials.

AUSTRALIA PROTESTS PLANNED U.S. AID TO 'CONTRAS'

LD202113 Moscow TASS in English 1420 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Canberra March 20 TASS -- The Australian Government lodged an official protest with the U.S. Embassy over the Washington administration's plans to supply financial aid to Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries. Addressing the House of Representatives of the Federal Parliament, Australian Prime Minister Robert James Lee Hawke emphasized that steps aimed at honoring the principle of non-intervention and respect for the rights of nations to decide their destiny themselves would come in line with the interests of the United States and the interests of Central American nations.

SRV FOREIGN MINISTRY REJECTS KHMER COMMUNIQUE

LD192255 Moscow TASS in English 1941 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Hanoi March 19 TASS -- A spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam (SRV) today came forward with a statement in connection with the provocative communique issued in Beijing on March 17 by the leaders of the three Khmer reactionary groupings. The communique, addressed to the Government of Vietnam, constitutes in its essence an attempt at gross interference in the internal affairs of sovereign Kampuchea. The counter-revolutionary leaders, among them the Polpotian criminals, driven out of the country, want behind the back of the Kampuchean people to impose their power upon them under the cover of the so-called "quadri-partite coalition government". That proposal, the spokesman's statement says, is neither more nor less than a Beijing-orchestrated spectacle aimed at calumniating Vietnam or at drawing it into the dishonest game, at interfering with the growing tendency towards a dialogue in South-East Asia, at supporting the Polpotian butchers and at saving the so-called "tripartite coalition government" of Khmer reactionaries from breaking up. The SRV's Ministry of Foreign Affairs is stating again that Vietnam recognizes only the Government of the People's Republic of Kampuchea (PRK) as the sole legitimate representative of the Kampuchean people. The internal problems of Kampuchea should be solved by the Kampuchean people themselves. The fate of the Polpotians and Khmer reactionaries, who perpetrated crimes against the Kampuchean people, will likewise be decided by the Kampuchean people themselves. Vietnam fully supports the PRK's just stand on a political settlement in Kampuchea, the statement emphasises.

MARCOS FUNDING, PHILIPPINE PROTESTS REPORTED

OW210451 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1145 GMT 18 Mar 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast, presented by Bronislav Myakota]

[Text] The Philippines Government is continuing its investigation into the siphoning of considerable funds from the state treasury during the rule of the former adminstration. It has become known that the former Philippines president generously provided money to the head of the White House and his closest aides, particularly Secretary of Defense Weinberger and CIA Director Casey. Mass demonstrations in support of the country's new President Aquino are being held in Manila and other Philippines cities. A mass protest campaign began today against the arbitrary rule of U.S. authorities in U.S. military bases. More than 30,000 Filipino employees from seven U.S. military establishments in the Philippines are taking part in demonstrations, picket lines, and strikes. They include such Pentagon bases as Subic Bay and Clark Field. Trade union leaders have embarked on this action in response to the refusal of U.S. commanders to adopt the conditions of a collective labor agreement proposed by the Filipino side that envisages improvements in labor and living conditions and increases in social benefits for Filipino workers. In connection with this, the local press has been noting the growing class consciousness of the Filipino working people.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON SHEVARDNAZE VISIT TO POLAND

Meets Soviet Activists

PM201438 [Editorial Report] Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 20 March 1986 First Edition carries on page 4, under the general heading "Friendly Meetings in Warsaw," four TASS dispatches datelined Warsaw 4 March totalling 700 words and covering the activities of USSR Foreign Minister E.A. Shevardnadze in Warsaw.

In addition to reports on the 18 March meeting and exchange of speeches with W. Jaruzelski, wreath-laying ceremonies at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and the monument to those who fell in the service of People's Poland, and a meeting at the Polish-Soviet Friendship Society, PRAVDA carries the following passages:

"E.A. Shevardnadze toured the sights of the capital. In the evening [of 18 March] he attended a show at Warsaw's Teatr Wielki.

"Warsaw, 19 Mar -- A conference of the aktiv of party organizations of Soviet foreign institutions in Poland devoted to the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of Communists working in Poland in implementing its decisions was held here 18 March. A report was delivered by E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR foreign minister, who is on an official friendly visit to Poland. Having spoken in detail about the results of the Soviet Communist forum, he emphasized its great international significance and dwelt on the tasks set by the congress in strengthening fraternal ties and comprehensive fruitful cooperation betwee socialist states. Soviet specialists working in fraternal Poland can and must make their contribution to this process, the speaker noted."

Warsaw TV Interview

LD202117 Warsaw Television Service in Polish 1900 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Interview with Foreign Affairs Minister Eduard Shevardnadze by correspondent Jerzy Wajszczuk on 20 March in Warsaw; questions and answers in Russian with superimposed Polish translation -- recorded]

[Text] [Wajszczuk] I would like to begin with a somewhat informal question. Is this your first visit to Warsaw and Poland?

[Shevardnadze] I am sorry to say so, but unfortunately that is the truth. However, I must say that like every Soviet citizen I know a great deal about Poland, about the Polish nation, its glorious history, and its present. I read a lot about Poland and like everybody else I am interested in the life of the fraternal Polish nation, and in the conditions in which it builds new social relations.

I also like Polish music and the Polish arts as a whole -- film, theater. I had the opportunity to become better acquainted with Polish art. I saw a Polish ballet in the Great Theater, and noted its excellent choreography and very high artistic standard. But I have not had direct contact with Poland until now. Now for the first time I have seen Warsaw and have had my first meeting with inhabitants of Warsaw and with Poland.

I know, I know, now you are going to ask me about my impressions. [laugh]

[Wajszczuk] Oh no, now I would like to turn to more formal questions. For almost a year the Soviet foreign policy machine has been going at full power. Could you define the main directions of Soviet foreign policy today?

[Shevardnadze] It is difficult to give a short answer to such question, the more so as the 27th congress of our party has just ended. The 27th CPSU Congress adopted our program, the program of peace and the concept of security in the contemporary world, taking into consideration all factors -- be they military or political. It also includes the issues of economic security with all the aspects of this problem. The congress has acknowledged peace as the highest value and peaceful coexistence as the main principle in international relations. The basis of such a line is the stance taken by Vladimir Lenin. This was developed at the April plenum of the CPSU Central Committee in 1985. As I have already said it has also been proclaimed at the 27th congress, and so with these principles and concepts as foundations we now move on to practice.

[Wajszczuk] Of particular importance to the contemporary world are Soviet-American relations. What can you say about the dialectics and specific character of these relations in current conditions?

[Shevardnadze] First of all, I would like to say that Comrade Gorbachev stressed that we do not look at the contemporary world exclusively through Soviet-American relations. Every state, every nation has its own place under the sun and our stance takes into consideration the policy of each state and takes into consideration the differing characteristics of such states -- regions and continents. Soviet-American relations do, however, define to a significant degree and in some spheres decisively, the general climate of international relations. Unfortunately, recent years -- since the beginning of the eighties -- have not produced anything good for us. The U.S. Administration was to blame for the increasingly aggravated situation. And as everyone knows the Geneva meeting took place and it brought about specific results. But I would not say that a radical improvement of the international atmosphere has occurred. However, certain results were acheived. The concept of a Geneva spirit was formed, and this has some significance.

[Wajszczuk] How do current Soviet-American relations appear?

[Shevardnadze] In Geneva Comrade Gorbachev and President Reagan agreed to a follow-up meeting, to a further stage of talks. We are taking preparations for this meeting very seriously, and all our notions and our concepts of this meeting were presented by Mikhail Gorbachev in his declaration of 15 January 1986. It contains our proposals for the liquidation of nuclear arms, for the solution of this problem in stages to the end of the current century. It also contains our proposals for the liquidation of all types of weapons of mass destruction. We also proposed, as we see it, a universal system of control and other imperative measures for the fulfillment of this programe.

[Wajszczuk] And one more question about internationl relations. Of particular importance to Europe is European security. What do you think about this?

[Shevardnadze] We all agree with this and I will also say that this is an important element, an important factor of world security in general -- precisely the case of Europe, of European security. The West also agrees with this verbally but when it comes to concrete actions, it turns out that our partners in the West are still not ready.

Here I have concrete examples in mind. Recently we proposed the abolition of Soviet medium-range missiles -- the so called SS-20's -- and also the abolition of U.S. missiles deployed in Europe, such as Pershing, cruise, and also tactical missiles.

When we raise the subject during direct negotiations, for example during talks in Geneva, it appears that our interlocutors are not prepared for that. As a matter of fact, to put it bluntly, they do not want to part with U.S. missiles.

[Wojszczuk] You took part in the gala session of the United Nations. How do you see the tasks of this organization in today's world?

[Shevardnadze] I think that we all, all states -- but first and foremost the socialist states, progressive states, and progressive mankind -- everybody should unite in order to consolidate the authority and the influence of the United Nations. This is a good organization, with good principles and with excellent humanitarian goals, and I think that we should all care about the strengthening of the authority and prestige of the organization.

[Wojszczuk] And a final question. Here I would like to return to Polish matters. It is of the utmost importance for the Polish nation -- the fraternal and friendly relations between the Soviet Union and Poland, between Poland and the Soviet Union. How do you, as minister of foreign affairs see these relations?

[Shevardnadze] In one of my speeches during official and formal meetings I called our relationship the relationship of hearts. These are not words and rhetoric to me, this is my deepest conviction; our relationship is very cordial indeed.

Our relations, our cooperation, and our friendship are, in my view, the best guarantee of sovereignty, independence, and freedom for our nations. This is the best guarantee of development for our nations and of implementation of all our plans, the plans adopted by the 27th congress of our party and those plans which will be adopted at the 10th PZPR Congress. I know how seriously and thoroughly Polish comrades and the Polish nation are preparing themselves for the 10th congress.

[Wojszczuk] In the name of Polish viewers I would like to thank you from the bottom of my heart for this meeting.

[Shevardnadze] But I have not said everything yet. I would like to convey warm greetings to the fraternal Polish nation and to sincerely thank the residents of Warsaw for their friendship, brotherhood, and warmth which we felt during our stay here. I particularly would like to thank my colleague Comrade Marian Orzechowski who invited me here and with whom I held very interesting talks. I also thank Comrade Wojciech Jaruzelski who devoted a great deal of his attention to us -- and I have magnificent impressions from the meetings with him. We talked about the plans of the Central Committee, about the great organizational and political work which is currently being conducted by your party. This really is a cause for pride. I thank you, therefore, once again and wish many successes and happiness for the whole Polish nation.

[Wojszczuk] Thank you very much.

MOSCOW MEETING MARKS BULGARIAN TREATY DATE

PM201433 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 Second Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Treaty Anniversary"]

[Text] A ceremonial meeting of representatives of Moscow workers was held on 17 March to mark the 38th anniversary of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance between the USSR and the People's Republic of Bulgaria.

It was noted in the speeches that the conclusion of the treaty was a glorious page in the annals of relations between the two states. The document has served as a firm foundation for multifaceted fraternal relations in the name of common noble aims -- building socialism and communism and strengthening general peace.

F. Spasov, minister plenipotentiary and counselor at the Buglarian Embassy in the USSR, said that in the almost 40 years since the treaty was concluded, the relations of good-neighborliness and close cooperation between the Bulgarian and Soviet peoples have been enriched with new ideological and spiritual ties and with specific deeds. The treaty is a guarantee of Bulgaria's constant progress along the path of building developed socialism.

D. Zhulev, Bulgarian ambassador to the USSR, was present.

REPORT ON NATO NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP MEETING

LD202234 Moscow TASS in English 1801 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Wuerzburg March 20 TASS -- TASS correspondents Vladimir Serov and Sergey Sosnovskiy report: The NATO Nuclear Planning Group opened its spring session in Wuerzburg, West Germany, today. Chaired by NATO Secretary-General Lord Carrington, it is being attended by the defense ministers of the bloc's member countries. Greece, Spain and Turkey sent their permanent representatives at the NATO headquarters to the meeting.

The venue of the session, which is being held amid strict secrecy, is sealed off from the outside world by heavy police details and Federal Border Guard Patrols. Commentators take the view that the principal aim of Pentagon chief Caspar Weinberger and General James Abrahamson, director of the "Strategic Defense Initiative" organization who also arrived here, will be to draw the allies even deeper into Washington's militarist plans, in particular the ominous "star wars" program.

West German Defense Minister Manfred Woerner said in an interview with the local paper MAIN POST that SDI-related issues will be among the main themes of discussions at the session.

Observers believe that Washington's envoys are also going to exert quite an effort to try to discredit the far-reaching blueprint for disarmament, including a plan to eliminate nuclear weapons step by step by the year 2000, which has been proposed by the Soviet Union and won broad international support. The United States will also be prodding the allies into continuing the nuclear arms buildup in Europe.

Weinberger and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl held talks on the eve of the session and are reported by today's press to have agreed in principle about signing an agreement on West German firms' participation in the SDI.

The NATO policy of stepping up military preparations, a course the current meeting in Wuerzburg is called upon to fix even more firmly, is a source of mounting public anxiety and has drawn protests from West German peace forces. The Bavarian branch of the Association of Persons Victimized Under Nazism -- the Union of Anti-Fascists issued a statement urging the government to renounce any involvement in the SDI. "We demand that the Federal Republic of Germany should not sail subserviently in the wake of the U.S. strategy of a first nuclear strike and 'star wars'. A war threat must never again be flowing from German soil," the statement said.

UK, FRG REPORTEDLY UPSET BY U.S. PRESSURE ON SDI

[V. Drobkov "Rejoinder": "Stew With SDI Sauce"]

[Text] Strange events are happening in the upper echelons across the ocean! To start with, Washington's allies were collectively shocked by the Pentagon's demand in the form of an ultimatum that they join the U.S. "Strategic Defense Initiative." Later on, mesmerized by promises of profits in the billions and "sharing of advanced technology" they, admittedly not so collectively, still fell for the bait of orders for space weapons. Now some West Europeans are complaining increasingly loudly that the transatlantic "clients'" embrace is becoming painfully tight. Matters have reached the point of open expressions of dissatisfaction, even by the allies who were most obliging in the past.

For example, a Pentagon delegation for SDI affairs was urgently recalled almost before it had arrived in Britain. The reason for this was the sharp indignation against the unceremonious Yankees, who crudely attempted to dictate their own terms to British firms.

What was at issue was no more and no less than total U.S. control over any research work, and even over the actual British scientists involved with SDI. Addording to London's THE GUARDIAN, these plans by Washington "could lead to a new political scandal in connection with the extraterritorial application of domestic U.S. laws." Prior to their arrival in Britain, the Pentagon's emissaries encountered the very same hostile reception in a number of other allied countries.

No sooner had the passions aroused by this story cooled down when the alarm was sounded by FRG concerns. It appeared that the West German monopolies, which were just about to divide the spoils of SDI orders, are in jeopardy not only of being overtaken by pushy American competitors, but also of finding themselves in slave-like dependence on the Petnagon. The newspaper WESTDEUTSCHE ALLEGMEINE complains that the Americans intend to prohibit their future partners from utilizing even the results of research work "which is not directly connected with SDI."

According to the FRG press, U.S. ambitions can be explained by the haste with which the West German chancellor promised to sign the agreement on SDI with Washington "even before the Easter holidays." The SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes that the Americans are already exploiting this haste to the utmost for their own purposes. "Despite the fact that Kohl only intended to offer one finger, they intend to unceremoniously grab the whole hand," the newspaper concludes. There you have it, a completely accurate description of the Pentagon's appetites. How can one not recall the story about the rabbit which was inordinately flattered by an invitation to dine at the bear's. Arriving at the set hour, the poor guy discovered that he would indeed share the host's table, but in the form of rabbit stew...

Kohl Yields To Pressure

LD202102 Moscow TASS in English 1411 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Bonn March 20 TASS -- West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, yielding to U.S. pressure, has actually consented to his country's participation in Washington's plans to prepare for "star wars." That is the way local political observers regard the results of the Wednesday talks between the head of the Bonn cabinet and U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in Grafenwoehr (Rheinland-Pfalz).

The two sides have reportedly come to terms concerning the conclusion of agreements between the FRG and the USA on the participation of West German firms in SDI research work and on gerneral technological exchanges. Helmut Kohl announced during a press conference that relevant agreements will be signed next week by West German Minister of Economics Martin Bangemann during his visit to Washington.

The head of the Bonn government took this step despite protests from the public and members of political parties, including those belonging to the ruling coalition. Helmut Schaefer, leading foreign policy expert in the Free Democratic Party group in the Bundestag, said that talks with the USA concerning West Germany's participation in the SDI may undedmine the Bonn cabinet's prestige in the foreign policy field. He said that in his opinion the Federal Republic should not seek a military agreement with the USA. Olaf Feldmann, also a member of the Free Democratic Party group in the Bundestag, criticised Bonn's undue haste in the matter of the FRG's participation in the "star wars" programme.

UK 'Blindly Following' U.S.

LD201136 Moscow Domestic Service in Russion 0830 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Viktor Levin commentary]

[Text] British Foreign Secretary Howe, speaking in London before foreign journalists, has called the Soviet peace proposals propaganda. Here is a Mayak commentary by Viktor Levin:

From the mouths of stiff-lipped British gentlemen, the word propaganda sounds like bad language. Everything that fails to gratify their tender ears and grates on their refined taste is described as propaganda. Having slapped this label on something, they think there is nothing more to say on the matter. However, the matter concerns an issue of paramount importance; moreover, it must be stressed, of importance both for Britain and for mankind as a whole. The Soviet Union proposes complete elimination of all nuclear weapons in the next 15 years. Our proposals are specific and realistic. Besides, we are not only putting forward an idea which the international public has greeted with enthusiasm, but we are also taking a real step on the way to its implementation. This step is the unilateral introduction by the Soviet Union of a moratorium on all nuclear explosions. We first established this moratorium from 6 August to the end of 1985, then extended it to 31 March. Then last week, in reply to the leaders of the six states, Comrade Gorbachev stated our willingness not to carry out nuclear tests after 31 March, too, until the first nuclear explosion in the United States. Each time, when announcing our decision, we have called on the United States to follow our example and at the same time begin working on a treaty on the complete halting of nuclear testing.

That is to say, we are providing an example of the first step being carried out on the way to the full elimination of nuclear weapons. Howe, however, disparagingly terms these real and highly important actions propaganda. It is known that in those cases where a diplomat is unable to say anything to the point, he tries to move conversation onto a different plane. The British foreign secretary is unable to speak about the Soviet peace initiatives objectively. The government of which he is part is blindly following Washington's course. I would like to recall the words of the foreign minister of another country, also belonging to NATO, which incidentally also very zealously follows Washington: It would be very sad if the Soviet proposals were called propaganda. Genscher, head of the FRG Foreign Ministry said that.

ZAMYATIN REPORTEDLY NEXT SOVIET AMBASSADOR TO UK

LD201453 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1434 GMT 20 Mar 86

[By David Bradshaw, PA political staff]

[Text] Soviet leader Mr Mikhail Gorbachev has appointed a key aide to be the next Soviet ambassador in London. The appointment of 67-year-old Kremlin veteran Mr Leonid Zamyatin will be announced shortly, reliable sources in London confirmed today. He will replace the present ambassador Mr Viktor Popov, who has been in London since 1980. The appointment is almost certain to mean the upgrading of the London post in the growing propaganda war between the Soviet Union and United States.

Mr Zamyatin, a communications expert who is regarded as a hardliner, is at present head of the International Information Division of the powerful Central Committee in Moscow. He played a key role during last year's Geneva summit between Mr Gorbachev and U.S. President Reagan, dealing comfortably at press conferences with difficult questions about Soviet policy. The Foreign Office today refused to comment on the reports that Mr Zamyatin would be taking over in London.

FRANCE'S CHIRAC FACES DIFFICULTIES IN NEW GOVERNMENT

LD202218 Moscow TASS in English 2200 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Paris March 20 TASS -- TASS correspondent Yuriy Lopatin reports: Jacques Chirac, leader of the largest French right-wing party, Rally for the Republic, has been named the new prime minister of the country. He has accepted the proposal of President Mitterrand to form and lead a new government. Chirac handed to the president a list of new cabinet ministiers.

The president today received the resignation of the cabinet led by Laurent Fabious The change of government is a result of parliamentary elections on March 16, in which the Socialists suffered a setback and the right-wing forces put together won the majority in the National Assembly.

Local observers note that the protracted talks between the president and Chirac prior to his appointment and the fact that he had spent almost two days in intensive consultations with the leaders of right-wing parties and groupings before finally accepting testify to difficulties faced by the leadership of France as the country enters the period of "cohabitation" of the Socialist head of state and the right-wing parliamentary majority.

According to press reports, during the talks between Mitterrand and Chirac, there have emerged substantial differences between the positions of the sides. Since the right-wing forces have a very slight majority in the National Assembly, Chirac tried to reserve for his cabinet the right to issue governmental decrees on a broad range of issues, primarily social and economic, without parliamentary approval. Mitterrand for his part stressed that the head of state should retain in full his leading role, stipulated by the Constitution, especially in matters of defense and foreign policy. In particular, at the start of the talks he resolutely declined the initial candidatures for the posts of the external relations and defense ministers.

At the same time the democratic press points out that the president's point of view coincides with that of the right-wing majority on a number of economic and social problems. The head of state, L'HUMANITE stresses today, will not block the measures envisioned in the governmental program of the right-wing parties in favour of the interests of big capital, including projects to denationalize state-controlled businesses.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR CARTLEDGE VISITS UZBEKISTAN

[Text] Great Britain's ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Soviet Union, Bryan George Cartledge, has arrived in Uzbekistan. He has visited the Uzbek SSR Ministry of Foriegn Affairs, the Academy of Sciences, and the Tashkent State University named after Vladimir Lenin. The guest also toured the Uzbek SSR economic products exhibition and acquainted himself with sites of interest in the Uzbek capital. Comrade Dzhurabekov, first deputy chairman of the Uzbek SSR Council of Ministers Presidium and chairman of the State Committee for the Agro-Industrial Complex, received Bryan George Cartledge on 17 March.

ALBANIAN GOVERNMENT DEMANDS UK RETURN GOLD

LD192238 Moscow TASS in English 2218 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 19 TASS -- Albania demands that London return Albanian gold stock which is kept in British money boxes. How did it happen that Albanian gold wound up there and why does London refuse to return it to the legitimate owner?

In the spring of 1945 when the "Third Reich" broke up, the Soviet weekly NEW TIMES relates, Albanian gold was discovered by allied troops in one of salt mines in Germany's south. In keeping with the norms of international law, all the discovered gold the weight of which, according to Albanian press data, is more than 2,454 kilograms was to be returned to the owner. The implementation of this agreement was entrusted to a tripartite commission consisting of representatives of the United States, Britain and France. The commission officially recognised the Albanian Government's legitimate rights to the gold found in Germany.

However, a decision on the return of the gold to Albania was dragged out, and the gold was turned over to Britain for safe-keeping.

Presently London blocked the gold, making use of the so-called Corfu Channel incident: On October 22, 1946, two British destroyers Somarez and Volage struck mines that remained after the war, and sank not far from the Albanian port of Sarande. But what has Albania got to do with that? At that time it had neither sea mines nor craft for planting them.

Albania has repeatedly raised the question of returning the gold belonging to it. However, London up to now replies in the negative. The legitimacy of the demand of the People's Socialist Republic of Albania for the return of the gold belonging to the Albanian people is obvious to any unbiased person.

ITALIAN BUSINESS SPOKESMAN ON JOINT TRADE OUTLOOK

[Interview with Emilio Rocchi, secretary general of the Italian-Soviet Chamber of Commerce, by M. Ilinskiy under the "IZVESTIYA Interview" rubric: "We Support Cooperation with the USSR" -- date not given]

[Text] Milan -- The 21st General Assembly of the Italian-Soviet Chamber of Commerce [CCIS] has ended work in Milan. Your correspondent asked Emilio Rocchi, secretary general of the CCIS, to comment on its work, role, and significance in the development of Soviet-Italian trade and economic ties.

"Above all I should like to draw attention to the fact," he noted, "that the chamber's present lofty forum was the first meeting between prominent representatives of Italian and Soviet business circles since the 27th CPSU Congress."

The active participation of representatives of Italian business circles in the work of the present CCIS assembly provided further evidence of the chamber's standing and an indication of its useful activity aimed at effectively promoting the development of mutually beneficial trade, economic, and scientific-technical cooperation between the Soviet Union and Italy. The number of CCIS members now exceeds 400. And that is far from the limit.

The CPSU Central Committee's Political Report to the 27th congress put forward a Soviet program for safeguarding peace and the peoples' security -- a program which is concrete, realistic, and vital for the fate of the peace. This program and the USSR's other peace-loving proposals meets the aspirations of all progressive mankind. If this program is implemented in full, the international division of labor will undoubtedly receive further positive development. In this connection the Draft Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000 envisage considerable expansion of the Soviet Union's economic ties with Western countries. What are the prospects for Italian-Soviet economic and scientific-technical cooperation in this regard?

The year 1985 was a particular "transitional period" between the hiatus in our economic relations which, unfortunately, lasted quite a long time, and development through the conclusion of important business contacts. New opportunities are now opening up. The Draft Basic Guidelines are of undoubted interest for Italian business circles, because that document provides a basis on which to determine the sphere in which Italian-Soviet cooperation is to receive long-term development. And there is a secure basis for that: During talks in Moscow last May, M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; and B. Craxi, prime minister of Italy; confirmed a readiness to develop and improve trade, economic, scientific, and technical cooperation between the USSR and Italy. This trade will be on a more balanced basis in accordance with existing long-term agreements, including the 1984 program for strengthening economic, industrial, and technical cooperation through the year 1990.

We have learned from the 27th CPSU Congress documents, E. Rocchi stressed, that the USSR is planning to double its national income and industrial production by the end of the century by means of a sharp increase in labor productivity and changes in its structural policy and to increase national economic efficiency and the Soviet people's prosperity. This will have a positive influence on world trade as a whole and on Italian-Soviet economic ties in particular.

The further development of Italian-Soviet trade, economic, scientific, and technical relations, E. Rocchi said in conclusion, sets the CCIS new and larger scale tasks. We have real reserves for fruitful business cooperation in the power industry, electronics, electrotechnical, agroindustrial, public catering, consumer services, construction, transport, and advertising Soviet and Italian products.

SOVIET ENVOY ON PORTUGAL, U.S. UNITA TIES

LD141646 Lisbon International Service in Portugese 1200 GMT 14 Mar 86

[Text] The Soviet ambassador in Lisbon has strongly condemned the support lent by Ronald Reagan to UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] and pledged that the Soviet Union wholly backs the legitimate government of Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos.

Addressing a press conference in Lisbon, that was held to appraise the outcome of the 27th CPSU Congress -- a conference which came to be dominated by topics on southern Africa and relations between the USSR and Portugal -- Valentin Vdovin described the U.S. President's stand on aid to Jonas Savimbi as clearly negative because UNITA's aim is to bring down a legitimate government. Vdovin said that his country and Cuba are giving the Angolan Government all their support in the political and economic spheres, as well as assistance to strengthen its Armed Forces against the external aggression -- from UNITA and the South African apartheid regime -- of which Angola is victim.

Answering a question on the matter, Vdovin rejected the South African president's conditional proposal for elections in Namibia, emphasizing that the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola is a matter on which only Angola and Cuba have a say. As for Mozambique, Vdovin argued that the Soviet Union had lost a faithful friend to the United States. The ambassador said his country's relations with Mozambique are still on the ascent, not descent. But, he said, it is up to Mozambique to decide with whom it should make deals and rapports.

Regarding relations between his country and Portugal, the ambassador underscored the importance to his country of Mario Soares' election, importance which could be judged by the composition of the Soviet delegation to the installation of the new president of the Republic. Vdovin described relations between Lisbon and Moscow as normal, after having improved recently. What matters, he said, is that there is mutual interest in seeing our relations developed to a qualitatively higher level.

ECONOMIST CLAIMS WEST 'CREATED' OPEC CRISIS

LD202342 Moscow International Service in Arabic 1530 GMT 20 Mar 86

[(?Andrey Nestrinkov) commentary: "OPEC, For The Success of Work"]

[Text] The conference of OPEC representatives that began on the 16th of this month in order to discuss issues concerning the stability of the oil market is still continuing in Geneva. We asked Soviet economist and scientist (?Andrey Nestrinkov) to comment on the progress of the conference. He wrote the following commentary:

The OPEC oil ministers, who are meeting in Geneva, are facing a complicated mission. The crisis of the oil market, which has struck the Arab oil countries and their allies in the OPEC heavily, is not an accidental market phenomenon. It was created by the policy being continuously applied by the imperialist cartels in order to weaken the positions of the small countries in the international oil trade.

The crisis was immediately preceded by a sharp increase, with the approval of London, in oil production from the North Sea and a sale of a part of the U.S. stratetic reserve. These two actions flooded the market, which was already full, and caused a rapid deterioration in prices, which have shrunk to less than half of what they were last December.

The OPEC countries believe the way to stabilize the market and raise prices is to regulate oil production by all the major oil-producing countries. This call was responded to by a number of new oil-producing countries which are not OPEC members. Yesterday, the coordination of oil policies was discussed in a meeting for OPEC countries in which Angola, Malaysia, Egypt, Mexico, and Oman participated.

Adopting a constructive stance, OPEC called for finding a joint language with the Western countries as well. Mani' Ibn Sa'id al-Utaybah, the United Arab Emirates oil minister, said on Tuesday that OPEC needs cooperation of some kind with Britain. Western governments and cartels, which are benefitting from the current crisis, do not want an agreement with OPEC. For instance, the British representative again on Tuesday firmly rejected the possibility of any cooperation with OPEC or any reduction in oil production in the North Sea.

The clear Western hostility toward OPEC presents again very clearly the issue of the unity of the members of this organization. It is no secret that their views are not always the same. This has also become apparent during the current conference. For instance, Algeria and Libya want a reduction in oil production, which will lead to a rapid price increase, while the Gulf countries believe that the cartels will not long be able to combat the competition of cheap Arab oil. Also, it is no secret that the OPEC members have in the past repeatedly violated production quotas they had previously agreed to.

However, disagreements inside OPEC, as many Arab commentators say, should not blur the principal issue that unites them: the joint struggle against the cartels. The Saudi official spokesman said that the best way to avoid disagreements is to strictly implement the quota resolution.

It seems that the OPEC conference will continue until the end of the week. The ministers prefer not to report any tangible results of the meeting as yet. The recommendations of the special experts committee, which was formed on Monday to predict the market situation, are not yet known.

Only one thing is known: The participants in the conference insist on working hard to draw up an agreed upon course against the destructive actions of Western cartels.

SOVIET DELEGATION VISITS VENEZUELAN CONGRESS

PM201104 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Text] Caracas, 18 Mar -- The USSR Supreme Soviet delegation headed by Ya. Vagris, deputy chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, which is on an official visit here, visited the Venezuelan congress, where it was received by Leonardo Ferrer, deputy president of the congress. On the delegation's behalf Ya. Vagris thanked the congress leadership for the invitation to visit Venezuela. During the talk, he drew attention to the new large-scale Soviet peace initiatives reflected in the documents of the recent 27th CPSU Congress in Moscow. These initiatives, the head of the Soviet delegation stressed, concern the most important problems of the day -- maintaining peace, ensuring security, and removing the threat of nuclear war. The specific task of eliminating nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons by the end of this century has been set. Vagris pointed to the close interconnection between disarmament and states' economic development. World peace, he noted, is the most importance condition in order to implement the USSR's majestic tasks of economic and social development set by the 27th CPSU Congress. The socioeconomic prosperity of states also depends on world peace. That is why countries -- however small -- must do everything possible to return the planet to the path of the relaxation of international tension. The delegation head expressed satisfaction at the state of Soviet-Venezuelan relations, a great contribution to which is made by constantly expanding parliamentary ties.

L. Ferrer supported the idea that fruitful contacts between the parliamentarians of the USSR and Venezuela are particularly important now that great activeness is required to maintain peace and remove the threat of nuclear catastrophe. He believes that regional conflicts should not have a negative influence on carrying out these vitally important tasks. Venezuela, the congress deputy president noted, makes a high assessment of the proposals put forth by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and further developed at the 27th CPSU Congress. They are being extensively discussed in the Venezuelan parliament. L. Ferrer noted the immense importance of the USSR's proposals for strengthening economic security in the world. These proposals are shared by all developing states encountering problems such as economic crises, huge foreign debts, and the constant growth in unemployment that now extends, on average, to 20 percent of the able-bodied population of Latin America.

The USSR Supreme Soviet delegation also met with Ruben Carpio Castillo and Osvaldo Alvarez Paz, chairmen of the Senate and chamber of Deputies Commissions for International Policy. An extensive exchange of opinions was held on the most important questions of the day and bilateral relations. The sides expressed their desire to continue to expand and strengthen Soviet-Venezuelan ties for the good of the two countries' peoples. During a ceremony at the Venezuelan National Pantheon the Soviet delegation laid a wreath at the sarcophagus bearing the ashes of Simon Bolivar, a true son of the Venezuelan people and a fighter to liberate the Latin American countries from Spanish dominion.

COSTA RICA DENIES SOVIET EXTRADITION REQUEST

PA192240 Paris AFP IN Spanish 2124 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Excerpt] San Jose, 19 Mar (AFP) -- The Costa Rican Government today refused, due to faulty presentation, an extradition request presented by the Soviet Union for Ukrainian Bogdan Koziy, 62 who has been described as a "Nazi war criminal." Costa Rican Foreign Minister Carlos Jose Gutierrez has sent a note to the Soviet Embassy in San Jose saying that the Soviet extradition request for Koziy, dated 13 March, "cannot be accepted" because it does not meet the legal and formal requirements. Gutierrez said that his office only receives the requests, and only the tribunals can make a decision about the contents of the requests. Costa Rica and the Soviet Union do not have an extradition treaty, but the request for Koziy could follow its due course if the Soviet Embassy again presents its request according to Costa Rican law.

PRAVDA Carries Speech by Salvadoran Communist

PM061943 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 Second Edition pp 10-11

["Speech by Comrade Shafik Jorge Handal, Secretary General of the Communist Party of El Salvador Central Committee" (PRAVDA headline) — date, place not specified]

[Text] Esteemed comrades and friends! I convey to you warm greetings from all the Salvadoran revolutionaries united in the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, of which the Communist Party of El Salvador is an integral and militant part.

Nearly 7 decades have elapsed since the Great October Socialist Revolution, which opened the age of socialism — of national liberation. Today Lenin's party, following the revolutionary traditions of Great October, is taking the historical initiative in overcoming inertia, conservatism, and other negative features which have led to stagnation phenomena, in renewing revolutionary thinking and morality, and in improving socialism, thereby accelerating its development and paving the way toward communism.

Soviet society is now living through a time of impressive changes. These changes started with resolute actions by the realistically minded party leadership, which listens sensitively to the people's aspirations and criticisms and possesses the necessary courage and farsightedness — qualities for which K. Marx and V.I. Lenin were noted — to challenge dogmas, prejudices, and bureaucracy and to eliminate all obstacles in the path of progress and the formation of the new type of person.

I must say that the entire course of the 27th CPSU Congress — beginning with the CPSU Central Committee Political Report delivered by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, a report permeated by wisdom, militancy, and a profound faith in the masses as well as in the Communists — and the words and deeds, the frank, emotive, and constructive speeches of the delegates have been a great revolutionary education for us.

The experience of world history has already demonstrated — and will certainly demonstrate again, in the course of the enormous work of improving socialism which has begun today in the Soviet Union — that the will of the people's masses, who have become masters of their own fate, is a motive force for progress to an immeasurably greater degree than egotistical individualism and the insatiable thirst for profit which characterize capitalism and are praised to the skies by bourgeois ideology and propaganda.

We are convinced that the 27th CPSU Congress will have a tremendous influence on the development of real socialism — both in the Soviet Union and in the other socialist countries — as well as on the development of the world communist and workers movement and the struggle of all the revolutionary forces of today. Its decisions will enrich revolutionary theory and practice and serve the cause of national liberation and the struggle for peace.

Together with an effective program for accelerating the country's socioeconomic development, the CPSU has put forward a program of ensuring and strengthening peace — the boldest program of all time. The peoples see M.S. Gorbachev's 15 January 1986 statement as an expression of their vital interests and the worldwide movement in support of it will undoubtedly grow from day to day. We are confident that the militarist course being stubbornly pursued by the Reagan administration and its crazy "star wars" plans will inevitably fail. The peoples will win, the cause of peace will win!

Comrades! For 5 years now the Salvadoran people have been waging a difficult struggle, advancing step by step toward victory. The enemy has a great superiority in resources: In effect we are fighting not only against Duarte's antipopular regime, but against U.S. imperialism, which supplies that regime with weapons, money, and military advisers. Since 1979 the Salvadoran military has killed more than 60,000 people. Since 1980 the country has been in a state of siege. The regime's opponents are abducted and tortured; the peaceful population in regions of hostilities are shelled and bombed. And Washington cynically depicts all these actions as a model of democracy and respect for human rights! Moreover, it seeks to impose the Salvadoran "model" in Nicaragua also. But that is a pointless exercise! The Salvadoran patriots will never tolerate a reactionary, inhuman system in their country. The heroic people of Nicaragua are fully determined to defend their revolution.

Since 1983 a broad strike movement has been developing in the country and protest rallies and demonstrations are held against the present regime's policy. A meeting was held in San Salvador on 8 February this year with the participation of more than 2,000 delegates representing over 100 organizations or working people in the cities and countryside, many state and private enterprises, and even certain groupings which originally supported the Duarte government. They united for the joint struggle in defense of the economic interests of the people's masses and democratic and civil rights, the struggle for a just political settlement of the military conflict on the basis of the restoration of the country's independence and sovereignty which have been flouted by the dictatorship, which would make it possible to eliminate the social and political factors which gave rise to the armed conflict.

The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front has launched a revolutionary war over almost the entire territory of the country. This is an integral part of the nationwide struggle against the reactionary regime. At present, a situation has arisen in El Salvador where there is virtually dual power. Political contradictions between various groupings of the ruling classes are being exacerbated. The military leadership is split by internal disputes. The economic crisis is deepening and no way out can be seen. The development of the situation in the country as a whole leads to the emergence of a new moment in the revolutionary situation, to decisive battles between a people filled with determination to win and be free and the puppet proimperialist regime.

We are confident that our struggle will always find support among the world's peoples and will continue to count on the solidarity of the Soviet people.

Comrades! The 27th CPSU Congress is nearing its end. The implementation of its decisions will help strengthen the Soviet Union's economic might, consolidate universal peace, and develop the struggle of all mankind's progressive forces. That is what determines its worldwide historic significance. Hail the 27th CPSU Congress! Hail the immortal, eternally living ideas of K. Marx and V.I. Lenin! Hail socialism, national liberation, internationalism, and peace! (prolonged applause).

Veteran Miner Appeals to Arts, Science for Help

LD021727 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1200 GMT 1 Mar 86

[Speech by Petrov, senior inspector of the Voroshilovgrad Trust Stakhanovshakhtostroy and member of the CPSU since 1927, at the 27th CPSU Congress in Moscow on 1 March — recorded]

[Text] Still at the dawn of Soviet power Vladimir Ilich Lenin said: Now, when power is firmly in hands of workers, everything depends on proletarian discipline and proletarian organization. These words are exceptionally topical today. I, as a member of the party obkom, often happen to be in mines, plants, and on construction sites and meet with Communists and nonparty members. The militant spirit of working people, the depth of their understanding of their duty, and the striving to fulfill this duty honorably and conscientiously are pleasing. But at times one meets also those who do not reorganize themselves but who set themselves up. It is especially intolerable when Communists are in such a position. It is no secret that the individual party members have come to terms with the role of mediocre members [serednyaki]. They have no objection to discussing the honor and role of the party member. But when the things arise they do not rush, so to speak, to the front line. What kind of a Communist are you, I ask, if you refuse to move to the section that is lagging behind to assume a greater task when it is needed? [applause] For a Communist there is no such question as: do I want to, or do I not; or of discussing personal advantages. And it is very correct that the strict demand on each party member that allows a deviation from the proletarian discipline in the Leninist understanding of this word will now be fixed in our party rules with added precision. Especially high demands have to be made of those Communists who have been entrusted with the leadership of party organizations.

As an erstwhile party organizer of the Central Committee of the All-Union Communist Party (Bolsheviks), I can say that the educational and cultural standards of secretaries of party organizations have now improved considerably. The forms of party work are also changing. But let us be frank: They are not always improved. Moreover, sometimes things that ought to be kept in circulation are written off. In my time such an amount of useless paperwork did not exist. The secretaries of primary party organizations are sometimes simply incapable of noticing what is new and getting things moving because of the avalanche of paperwork. I believe that they must be released from this bondage. After all, their main job is to work not with papers but with living people. [applause]

It is painful that — and I am to say it directly — that workers in literature and art are sometimes not taking a far-sighted position. This has been very corectly expressed in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report. As a miner who has been working 61 years, I have a complaint to raise with the heads of associations such as those of writers, composers, artists, and in particular cinema workers. They are greatly in arrears vis-a-vis the miners. Let me cite three examples: tell me if I am right. In 50 years only one serious so-called film for miners, "Great Life," has been made. [applause] I ask you: Do the miners today really have a poor life?. No, it is not just great, it is a splendid life. [applause] We have hundreds of heroes, thousands of frontrankers with the highest possible labor productivity. We have culture, amenities, education — everything has appeared. So why can't they make a picture from which the young people coming to the mining industry could learn and thus become a firm part of us? You, comrade cinema workers, are at fault here! [applause]

And I would like to say to the comrade writers that in my lifetime I can well remember only one serious book, which was published also 50 years ago, entitled The Miners by Boris Gorbatov. Since then, apart from brochures and small books, I have seen nothing. [applause]

And now about composers. [laughter, followed by applause] They wrote songs for us, known not just to us miners, but also to many of you, no doubt such as "The Dark Mounds Sleep." [laughter] And we have been singing it for 40 years. [laughter] "The Dark Mounds Sleep." Moreover, for the information of the composer: We no longer create slagheaps in the Donbass. [laughter] In 10 years' time there will probably be none left. So I ask you, what will we be singing then? [laughter and applause]

On behalf of miners I make a request: Please make something new for us, something good to delight us, so that the young generation will see us. And I believe that the heroic work of famous miners rightfully demands that you turn and meet our request. [applause]

Much more could be done for miners by our scientists and designers. The country needs a lot of coal. For decades we have been begging our own minister of coal industry. But we have not appealed to science; there was no way in. But now we shall appeal [laughter] for them to make for us a combine for carrying out preparatory works in areas of unusual rock formations, so that they may reduce the vibration on the mechanical pick. I went to the Zvezdnyy Gorodok, where they train the astronauts against vibration. Our miner working on the mechanical pick vibrates 6 hours a day with this mechanical pick. [laughter and applause] This is being widely discussed at authoritative conferences, meetings, and gatherings; but it is not getting through to the people in our ministry and science. On behalf of Donbass miners I would like to ask esteemed President of the USSR Academy of Science Anatoliy Petrovich Aleksandrov, who is sitting next to me, [laughter] to take this issue in hand and to help, so that science may replace this very mechanical pick that was used 50 years ago by Stakhanov.

Now the situation is such that it is yet again necessary to move ahead of time, to hasten courageously into tomorrow, to conquer the deep seams of progress. New records are needed now, records of ideas, records of creativity. The honorable fulfillment of this task is the highest form of happiness for a true communist. On behalf of the communists of older generations I declare: We will not harm the honor and glory of our native Communist Party created by Lenin who is forever alive and great. [applause]

Gorbachev Expresses Thanks for Congratulations

LD220941 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
0800 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev has thanked party and other public organizations of working people for the congratulations which arrived after the 27th CPSU Congress in connection with his selection to the post of general secretary of the CPSU Committee.

These congratulations, he notes, once again speak of the fact that the strategic course taken by the 27th CPSU Congress on the acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development is a cause common to all people, the cause of every person. Ahead lies a huge amount of work. Already this year we must take a noticeable step forward in the implementation of plans mapped out by the congress. The construction of a new society has more than once set us tasks of historic significance. We have solved them successfully in the past. To realize the decisions of the 27th congress is the unswerving desire of the Soviet people.

Congratulations have come from state and public figures, and from citizens of foreign states. In expressing my sincere gratitude, I would like to affirm that the Soviet Union, faithful to the ideas of peace and freedom, will consistently try to achieve a radical improvement in the world political climate and the establishment of just principles of international security. We see the path to this in a decisive curtailment of the arms race, in joint efforts by the world community to remove the threat of war and to overcome mistrust and enmity in international relations. Mankind can and must learn to live in peace and harmony. That is our conviction.

Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev also expressed his profound gratitude to all Soviet people, as well as foreign citizens, for the warm congratulations in connection with his birthday.

Crew Dies in IL-14 Plane Crash Over Antarctic

LD231627 Moscow World Service in English
1600 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] The USSR Ministry of Civil Aviation has announced the crash of a Soviet IL-14 aircraft over the Antarctic. The aircraft was on a flight between the Molodezhnaya and Vostok stations when it encountered a violent wind and a heavy snowstorm when visibility was reduced virtually to nil. The pilots reported a forced attempt to land and then communication with the plane broke off. Due to the storm and deep clefts in the ice the rescue team managed to reach the scene of the catastrophe only several days later but were unable to save the crew.

Kazakh Geology Ministry Actions Questioned

PM211631 Moscow LITERATURNAYA GAZETA in Russian

[Report by LITERATURNAYA GAZETA "Man and Economy" section: "And Another Thing: Arising From the Items 'An Audit Took Place...' and 'Refutation'"]

[Text] Nearly 2 months ago, on 22 January this year, LITERATURNAYA GAZETA printed on page 1 an official reply from Comrade Grebenyuk, deputy chairman of the Kazakh SSR Council of Ministers, to Pavel Bolin's articles "An Audit Took Place..." and "Refutation" (19 June and 30 October 1985). Let us recall that they dealt with write ups and other financial abuses at the Kazgidrogeologiya geological production association, the connivance on the part of the republican Ministry of Geology, and the persecution of a person who uncovered gross violations and exposed those guilty of window dressing.

The reply was remarkably brief: The newspaper articles had been examined at a session of the Kazakh SSR Council of Ministers Presidium and "an appropriate assessment was given of the work of the Kazakh SSR Ministry of Geology Collegium and personally of Minister Comrade S.Ye. Chakabayev, who was reprimanded." And that is all. Not a word of explanation. Yet the USSR Ministry of Geology, on investigating the LITERATURNAYA GAZETA items, lodged serious complaints against S.Ye. Chakabayev: The instances of write ups at the association which the newspaper publicized and also others which had taken place earlier were known to him.

The unconvincing nature of the reply naturally caused indignation. The editorial office then considered it necessary to publicly ask three questions. Here they are:

1. How are the words "appropriate assessment" to be understood? What kind of assessment, first? And how specifically was it expressed?

2. Is not such a lapidary reply disrespectful to the readers who showed a keen interest in the newspaper articles?

3. Does this reply accord with the present atmosphere in the country, in which a wide, public discussion of the most acute and pressing problems of our life is taking place everywhere? Does it meet the party's demand — to uncover negative phenomena openly rather than secretly, without fear and in full?

These questions were published in LITERATURNAYA GAZETA before the 27th party congress. Today we are all the more convinced of their correctness, since the congress has once again emphasized the significance of publicity. But there is still no reply.

It is particularly important to recall this also because the flagrant attempt to avoid a direct and principled discussion plays into the hands of those who violate the demands of the laws and our morality. S.Ye. Chakabayev has not changed his position. The connivance with window dressers goes on. Here is the proof.

The USSR Ministry of Geology relieved A.K. Dzhakelov, general director of Kazgidrogeologiya, of his duties after the LITERATURNAYA GAZETA articles, for write ups, thriftlessness, and gross violations of labor legislation and of the party principles of cadre selection and placing. Where is he now? In a rank and file post? Nothing of the kind: He has been apointed chief of an experimental-methodological expedition, that is, of a leading component in the same association. Perhaps he has suffered materially? Yes, but not much: He used to recieve R550 a month, now he receives R500.

The USSR Ministry of Geology instructed the Kazakh SSR Ministry of Geology Collegium to "take disciplinary proceedings against the officials guilty of violations and ensure that the bonuses received illegally are recovered from the leaders of the Kazgidrogeologiya association." Has this directive from the union ministry been carried out? We have received no reply from Kazakhstan.

In view of all this, we are forced to ask yet another question in addition to the previous three: when will LITERATURNAYA GAZETA's readers, who continue to show interest in the articles which began with "An Audit Took Place...", at last hear an accurate and exhaustive reply from Kazakhstan about the measures taken on the basis of these articles? A reply meeting today's party criteria — frankness, sincerity, and commitment in discussing the most urgent problems of life, constructiveness, and a critical and self-critical attitude to the cause.

Markus Responds to Claims of Broadcast 'Pressure'

LD211631 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1500 GMT 21 Mar

[Text] Moscow, 21 Mar (TASS) — The British Broadcasting Corporation — not so long ago the BBC broadcast a slanderous report that an appearance on Central Television by Soviet citizen S.V. Markus, in which he condemned his unlawful activities, was allegedly made under pressure from the authorities.

S.V. Markus has made the following statement via TASS regarding the above-mentioned BBC radio broadcast.

I have learned of the reaction of BBC commentators to my appearance on Soviet Central Television on 4 January 1986: It was asserted that it had been "wrested under the severest pressure from the authorites." But what are these assertions based on? On an analysis of the reasons which caused me to reassess the values and circumstances of my life? No, the commentators made no such effort.

However, anybody wishing to arrive at an objective understanding of the changes in me, so unexpected at first glance, should first read carefully the open letter to TASS and APN, of which the television appearance is a brief resume, and then gather convincing material from life.

I will not repeat what has been already stated, but will dwell on the following points.

The "severest pressure" was exerted upon me not by the authorities, but by my own reflections. It was recognition of the acute nature of those global problems threatening to destroy contemporary civilization through the fault of the participants in the "crusade against socialism." Secondly, it was those extremely important tasks which began to be resolved in our country after the April CPSU Central Committee Plenum. Those who do not believe in the reality and efficacy of thought will never believe that the changes in me [moi peremeny] are genuine and will remain prisoners of related ideological cliches.

Further: Detention in any country is not like staying at a health resort, but it has one unquestionable advantage — an unlimited opportunity for meditation and self-analysis. None of those who were close to me will say that I was beaten up, hungry, stupefied,or frightened.

It is precisely for this reason that my initiative to write an open letter and appear on television was accepted, although it is obvious that I have become neither an atheist nor a Marxist

Lastly: Manipulations with my name and experience with a view of fighting socialism are henceforth not warranted by anything and I demand these speculations be stopped. What is more I will make every effort in the future in order to become one of the last who justified his hostility to socialist statehood with religious motives, the last "religious dissident."

The search for a new human unity in the face of the growing threat of global catastrophes — this, in my opinion, is the main thing to which all of us in Britain, Russia, and all other countries are are called upon to dedicate our best efforts!

Zagladin Evaluates Results of CPSU Congress

PM201643 Moscow NEW TIMES in English No 10, 17 Mar 86 pp 3-6

[Article by Vadim Zagladin: "The Party Congress: Hope and Confidence; Notes of a Delegate"]

[Text] On March 1, the 27th CPSU Congress passed its halfway point. Discussion of the first items on the agenda was completed, a resolution approved on the Central Committee Political Report, and the new text of the party programme and amendments to the party rules were adopted. On March 3, Soviet Premier Nikolay Ryzhkov delivered his report on the Basic Guidelines for economic and social development of the country, and at this writing the debate on it is in full swing.

The deliberations at the congress have differed in some rather important essentials from debates at previous congresses. Of course, formerly too the delegates discussed in detail the proposals put forward by the Central Committee, amendments and new considerations were advanced, and wishes for the future voiced. All this is traditional at our party forums.

A new departure at this congress has perhaps been the markedly businesslike, sharply critical and at the same time optimistic character of the discussion. There is less ceremonial (although the atmosphere is one of uplift, even festive) and the tone is more matter-of-fact and concrete. Clearly, the very spirit of the Political Report of the Central Committee, its frankness, clarity in posing issues and emphasis on purposefulness and the unity of words and deeds, was communicated to the delegates.

The speakers deal with unresolved problems and criticize shortcomings. As a rule, they are self-critical. The stress is laid on what has to be done not only to rectify mistakes, but to give new impetus to all our efforts. Not only on doing what has been left undone, but on forging ahead more vigorously. Speaking of the significance of what has been achieved, delegates are not carried away by the successes, but seek to find in them points of departure for further purposeful advance.

The keynote is acceleration. This is in the centre of attention. Naturally, domestic affairs are linked with external, international affairs. On the one hand, the speakers invariably support the party's plans to help ensure all-embracing international security. On the other, they are clearly aware that the most reliable groundwork for our successes in the foreign policy arena is our own labour, the performance of each on the job.

It should perhaps be noted that the speeches of the delegates this time are, so to say, more individual than at previous congresses. This too is understandable, for the more concrete and businesslike the approach, the more clearly expressed are individual thoughts and opinions.

Indeed, one can only marvel at the diversity of our great party. Each of its 19,000,000-odd members is a personality, with his own unique individuality. Only to our opponents does it occur to talk of stereotyped uniformity of Communists.

The party, of course, is close-knit and strong by virtue of its unity. But this is not the unity of some mechanically contrived giant, but the unity of the living organism, the collective inspired by single-minded determination to work towards lofty, high-minded goals. The unity of the party is the unity of people working towards a common goal. It is a unity of thought and quest, of joint conclusions and bold creative endeavour.

It was this creative unity that was manifest in the discussion of the previous items on the agenda and is manifest now in the debate on the guidelines for economic and social development of the country.

Nikolay Ryzhkov's report, like the report of the CPSU General Secretary, was strictly realistic, critical and self-critical, and at the same time deeply optimistic.

It, of course, dealt first of all with the country's development since the previous congress. The results are something we can only be proud of. Our opponents abroad maintain that "the Russians are having to revise their programme inasmuch as it has proved a failure during the past stage." This is something that has been repeated latterly in the West scores, if not hundreds of times. This one-sided appraisal is, of course, utterly false.

True, we have not achieved all the targets we set ourselves in the past. This was clearly stated in the report of the Soviet premier, as it had been in the Political Report of the Central Committee. But how can anyone belittle the achievements registered in the quarter-century since the adoption of the first text of the party's third programme? National income increased nearly fourfold and industrial production nearly five times over, while the productivity of social labour more than trebled. All this made it possible to take a substantial stride forward in resolving socio-economic problems. The per capita real income of the Soviet people increased 2.6 times in these 25 years, and 267 million people were provided with better housing. The country went over to compulsory secondary education and a far-reaching reform of our secondary school system was initiated, and is now being carried forward.

All this momentous progress is what enables the Soviet Union to play a weighty role in both the world economy and in world politics.

Nevertheless, the fact remains that we accomplished less than we had planned and of course less than we wanted. The report of the head of the Soviet Government gives a concrete, matter-of-fact account of why this happened — in order to point the way to a real acceleration of our further development.

One of the foreign guests at the congress told me that he had tangibly sensed the delegates' awareness of the dialectical interconnection between pride in past achievements and dissatisfaction with failure to achieve all that had been planned, the dialectic of successes and problems. This meaningful evaluation indeed offers the key to an understanding of the tasks facing the country.

The targets set for the future are truly impressive. in the 15 years until the year 2000 the object is to double the country's economic potential. Here is a relevant figure from Ryzhkov's report: the aggregate national income in 1986-2000 is to amount to 12 trillion rubles, more than in all the preceding years of Soviet power. This is essential in order to resolve the pressing domestic political, and primarily social, tasks, and to safeguard the country's security.

A very important step in this direction is to be taken in the 12th Five-Year-Plan period. In the coming five years the accent is to be replaced on effectiveness, on higher productivity of labour, which is to lay the basis for the further rapid advance of the country.

Suffice it to say that during the 12th Five-Year-Plan period the national income is to rise 3.5-4 per cent annually, as against 3.1 per cent during the 11th Five-Year Plan. Anyone acquainted in the slightest with economic problems will appreciate how far from simple it will be to achieve such an acceleration of the growth of the national income.

I shall not go into the details. It is plain to see that the tasks facing the country are tremendous and far from simple. This is clearly stated in the documents submitted to the congress. Awareness of the fact is palpably felt in the delegates' speeches.

Our opponents in the West are taking a rather equivocal stance these days. On the one hand, no one ventures to deny the magnitude and significance of the tasks posed by the congress or that the fulfillment of the projected plans will result in a qualitative change in Soviet society as a whole. The well-known American scholar, Professor R. Schlesinger of the University of California, has observed that it can be said without exaggeration that this is the beginning of a fundamentally new stage in the life of Soviet society. The Japanese TOKYO SHIMBUN writes: "Congresses of the Communist Party are important landmarks in the life of the Soviet Union. The present congress may be described as an 'epochal congress,' ushering in a new historical stage in the life of the country." On the other hand, few Western commentators have not sought to cast a shadow of doubt on our plans. This is done in different ways. Some say point-blank that they do not believe our plans are feasible, others in one or another way qualify the tasks we have set as "excessive." And all sorts of advice is offered us.

What kind of advice?

On the first day of the congress I had occasion to take part in a direct Moscow-Paris radio hookup sponsored by the French Europe-1 broadcasting station. I had two collocutors. One was the well-known radio commentator Jean Pierre Elkabbach, the other, former U.S. ambassador to France, Evan Galbraith. The latter bluntly declared: "You will get nowhere. If something comes out of it, it will happen only if you restore freedom in the economy, renounce state planning, and give free rein to private initiative."

Galbraith was crude about it. Other advisers of the same order use more moderate language. To believe them, socialism in the U.S.S.R. can be saved only if it ceases to be socialism.

A touching picture! Diehard opponents of socialism advising us on how to improve it! It would appear that socialism can be improved only by being destroyed....

No, we cannot take such "advice" seriously. Look back at the history of our country. In less than seven decades it has developed from a poverty-stricken land into an advanced power. Thanks to what? To socialism. We stood our ground in that most destructive of wars — World War II. It may be confidently said that no other country, had it been placed in a situation we found ourselves in 1941, could have withstood the onslaught of the nazi war machine. The countries of continental Europe were unable to withstand it. But we withstood it. And not only withstood it, but won. Thanks to what? To socialism. In particular to the fact that the socialist planned economy based on public ownership of the means of production enabled us to restructure the economy within an unprecedentedly short period of time — moreover, at a time when the industrially most developed part of the country was under enemy occupation — and to build up an economic potential that ensured our victory.

During the celebration of the 40th anniversary of victory a great deal of weighty data was published showing the relative potentialities of socialism and capitalism as revealed by the war. It was pointed out, for instance, that for its effectiveness the Soviet economy in those years surpassed not only the economy of nazi Germany, but also that of the United States and Britain. With equal expenditure of primary materials we produced more machinery, and of higher quality than, say, the United States whose territory in general was not touched by the hostilities.

Or take postwar restoration, which it would be more correct to call the rebirth of the country. This too was accomplished in a historically brief span of time, and again thanks to socialism. Or the achievement of such summit as the first sputnik, the first man in space, the first atomic electric power station, the first nuclear icebreaker... we indeed have no reason to renounce socialism.

That there have been shortcomings and difficulties in our way is not the fault of socialism. The objective circumstances and, of course, subjective failings and mistakes are to blame.

Now too our party is firmly steering a course aimed not at narrowing down the field of action of socialism in our country but at further strengthening its foundations, at making fuller use of the potential and advantages of our system. In this we see the key to success, a key to communist morrow.

There is still another angle to the comment on the congress decisions relating to the internal political evolution of the country and its economic development. The reference is to those Western commentators who have discerned in our economic plans a "Soviet threat." In what precisely do they see this threat?

The logic of their reasoning (if it can be called that) is this: the Soviet plans envisage a growth of the country's economic potential, hence its military potential and, consequently, the "Soviet military threat" will also grow. Add to this the diverse, utterly unfounded discourses on the subject of the possible "expansionist" plans of Soviet policy in one or another region of the world.

All this could be dismissed as sheer invention. However, since views of this order are being vigorously and persistently circulated, a few more words should be added.

First of all, no attentive reader of the Political Report of the Central Committee, the report delivered by Ryzhkov, and the draft guidelines for the economic and social development of the country (by the time this issue comes off the press the last-mentioned will no longer be a draft, but the finalized document) can fail to see that the emphasis in all our plans is on peaceful construction. The main stress is placed on the creation of the groundwork for meeting the material and spiritual requirements of man, his all-round development.

As a matter of fact, much has been said on this score at the congress. It has been pointed out that not enough attention was paid to the social and cultural sphere and that now this omission has to be rectified and attention to this area sharply increasd.

Incidentally, these are not merely wishes voiced by the delegates. The problem has already been tackled in practice. Even before the congress, following the April 1985 Plenum of the CPSU Central Committee, our party took a number of decisions on focusing more attention on social and cultural problems. Additional funds, materials and manpower — in a word, everything needed to get things going properly — have been allocated for this purpose.

Thus, our plans are not projected at the militarization of the country, but at its peaceful development. Where, then, does the "military threat" come in?

Needless to say, the growth of our economic potential increases our capability to protect our interests, to keep our defences at the necessary level.

Here too it is a matter of defence, not of aggressive designs. The Political Report of the Central Committee clearly declared that the importance we attach to ensuring our security is only natural. We could not act otherwise. For it is nobody's secret that the Pentagon already has plans for the militarization of the United States all the way to the 21st century. Nor is it a secret that there exist old plans for war against our country and that new ones are being drawn up.

It is enough to read the U.S. President's February 26 address to the nation to see that, as distinct from what is happening at our congress, Washington is orienting not on the new realities, but on the outdated and dangerous positions-of-strength concept.

We regard the Soviet-American contacts that have begun with a high sense of responsibility and have no intention of closing the doors to them. This was underscored at the party forum. But we cannot ignore the fact that, although we now and again hear words about peace — and words, even the finest, are only words — the material preparation of war goes on, with the Soviet Union named as the potential enemy. We see all this and shall never close our eyes to it.

As regards the military sphere, our intentions are defensive and our object is to ensure the security of our country and nothing more. Our military potential is limited to reasonable adequacy. But "the character and level of the ceiling," Mikhail Gorbachev said, "continues to be limited by the attitude and actions of the U.S.A. and its bloc partners. In these circumstances we repeat over and over again: the Soviet Union lays no claim to greater security than that enjoyed by others, but it will not settle for less."

Thus, all talk about our country presenting a "military threat" is sheer nonsense. Nonsense that has essentially only one purpose: to justify the further escalation of war preparations by the United States and some of its allies.

Besides the "Soviet military threat" angle, there is another aspect to the talk about the growth of our economic strength presenting a threat to someone. And to some extent this aspect acquires ever greater significance as time goes on. What do I have in mind?

The growth of the might of the socialist countries virtually dooms to failure any attempt at military confrontation with socialism. In these circumstances the centre of gravity in the contest between the two systems in the world arena is shifting towards peaceful competition. Needless to say, competition primarily in the economic sphere, but also in the social sphere.

Socialism has already chalked up a good many points in this competition. Indeed, if in the early postwar years the Soviet Union lagged far behind the United States, at present the levels of development of the two countries have come closer together. On many counts we are catching up with the Americans and in some, have outstripped them.

We know very well, of course, that much more has still to be done, primarily as regards productivity of labour, the speed with which the achievements of science and technology are introduced in production, and so on. Nevertheless the dynamics of competition in the economic sphere is working in favour of socialism.

As for the social sphere, here socialism long ago left capitalism behind. Full employment, free education, free medical services, social security and low rents are something working people in the West can only dream of. Moreover, it is clear that with the acceleration of the rate of development the social advantages of socialism are revealed ever more fully. Our plans on this score are very definite and will be carried out.

But this is precisely what our opponents in the West are afraid of. The Soviet Union's striving to strengthen its peace economy and heighten popular well-being can seem frightening and dangerous only to those who tremble at the thought of socialism revealing more and more fully its potential and advantages, those who fear that all this taken together could expose in the eyes of the working people in the West the limited potential of the capitalist system, its inability to meet the interests of the overwhelming majority of the people.

"As we see it," the Political Report of the Central Committee says, "the main line of struggle in present-day conditions is to create worthy, truly human material and spiritual conditions of life for all nations, to see to it that our planet should be habitable and to deal with its riches rationally. Above all to deal rationally with the greatest value of all — with people and all their potentialities. That is exactly where we offer the capitalist system to compete with us in a setting of lasting peace."

It is precisely this competition that certain Western quarters fear. For, contrary to what they say as a rule, they know full well that the basic class mission of their system is to ensure not the well-being of the people but maximum profits for the monopolies.

Open admission of the existence of such fears occurs rarely, but there is no dearth of indirect admission. For instance, it has been said or written time and again that it is the interests of the West to create difficulties for the Soviet economy, that there should be no growth of popular well-being in our country. How many times, especially in the recent period, have there been hints that the escalation of the arms buildup by the West pursues not only purely military but also economic objectives — the weakening of the Soviet economy, the creation of additional difficulties in the matter of meeting the needs of the population. in short, the object is to stop the improvement of living standards, of the quality of life, in the Soviet Union.

While some Western commentators see dangers and even threats in our plans and intentions, wide sections of the world public derive from them hope for the strengthening of peace and democracy, for social renewal.

Here it is in place to mention the guests of the congress. This time there are more of them than ever before. Communist, workers', revolutionary democratic, socialist, social democratic and labour parties and national liberation movements from 113 countries of all continents sent their envoys to Moscow. This fact alone is testimony to the keen interest evinced in the deliberations of the congress, to recognition of the role of the CPSU and the Soviet State in the international arena.

Still more striking evidence of this are the speeches delivered by our guests and the views they have voiced in the course of numerous conversations and talks.

It is of course impossible to give even an approximate account of all these talks and speeches. But there are some basic aspects common to them all that should be mentioned.

For one thing, our guests have naturally made particular note of the critical and self-critical character of the supreme party forum. As many of them observed, it was as if the truth itself, the unvarnished truth, were speaking out from the congress rostrum. This is seen as an encouraging sign, a token of the intrinsic strength of socialism.

What our guests consider most important is the fact that the criticism has been constructive, aimed not simply at correcting one or another mistake, but at finding the most effective avenues for the further development of Soviet society. The trail-blazing, pioneering character of the congress and its thrust to the future has impressed our foreign visitors.

The fact that both the criticism and the positive proposals at the congress are not of a pragmatic nature but are substantiated theoretically, commands attention. Many of our friends qualify the new generalizations and arguments advanced in the Political Report of the Soviet premier as further development of Marxist-Leninist theory. In this most see proof that the party's present conclusions are well-grounded and that it will continue its theoretical quest in the process of its practical work.

The main point made by our friends is that the congress decisions will help to reveal more fully the potential of socialism, its possibilities. And this in turn will instill in ever new sections of the popular masses faith in socialism, in social progress, in the possibility of effective advance along new lines, and thereby heighten the potential of social progress the world over.

It is no secret that the problems and difficulties encountered in recent years in socialist countries, including our country, have been seized upon by anti-socialist propaganda to undermine faith in the possibility of advance along lines other than capitalist. Our weaknesses and shortcomings have been played up to make it appear as if the striving for social changes is futile, that it can produce no results. The advance of socialism in the Soviet Union, the tapping of its vast intrinsic potential, will expose the falseness of such contentions.

Our friends and comrades from the other socialist countries have naturally underscored the fact that successes in perfecting socialism in the U.S.S.R. will strengthen the socialist world system as a whole and above all consolidate the positions of the socialist community.

The communist movement as a whole and primarily the fraternal parties of the socialist countries have long been fully aware that mechanical copying of one another's experience, the devising of some sort of abstract models, is a futile exercise. But as time goes on it becomes increasingly clear that it is necessary to make a careful study of one another's experience and to utilize the most valuable results of creative Marxist thinking in the various countries to accelerate one's own progress. In view of this, our friends from the other socialist countries have been listening with keen interest to the conclusions drawn by our congress, to the views on ways and means of giving added impetus to the development of socialism voiced at our party forum.

Our comrades from the capitalist countries are interested in everything. In particular, they point to the experience and example of socialism as serving the purpose of exposing the long current Western propaganda contention that technical progress, the scientific and technological revolution, are bound to have negative consequences. Indeed, in the West it has become a standard argument that scientific and technological progress creates nothing short of a threat to people irrespective of the social system they live under. The fact is, however, that both our achievements to date and our plans for the future convincingly show that this is not so.

Scientific and technological progress in itself presents no threat to man. The threat emanates from improper use of technical progress. The capitalist approach to it leads to negative consequences, primarily growing unemployment, social insecurity, poverty and want. In the socialist society technological progress serves man, improves living and working conditions.

All our friends from the capitalist world and the newly independent countries, of course, are impressed by the social plans of our party, by the fact that the policy of the CPSU is a policy that serves the people's interests.

The representatives of newly independent countries have underscored the significance of the solution of the national question in the U.S.S.R., the fact that socialism, through the example of the Soviet Union, has conclusively shown that the new social system can ensure the rapid development of the nations. And not only by enabling them to overcome the backwardness inherited from the past, but also by making it possible for formerly underdeveloped regions to move to the forefront of economic, technological and social progress.

Needless to say, they also point to the importance of the support given by socialism to the struggle of the peoples of the newly independent countries to strengthen their independence and to speed up their economic development.

As I have mentioned above, the number of guests representing socialist, social democratic, and labour parties at this congress is greater than at any previous party forum. The social democratic delegates attach much importance to the very fact that they were invited to attend. They evince a keen interest in many of the points in the Political Report of the Central Committee as well as the report on the Basic Guidelines of economic and social development of the country. Particular attention is commanded by the formulations of the Political Report relating to the further development of relations between the Communists and the Social Democrats. "It is a fact that the ideological differences between the Communists and the Social Democrats are deep, and that their achievements and experience are dissimilar and not equivalent," the Political Report says. "However, an unbiassed look at the standpoints and views of each other is unquestionably useful to both the Communists and the Social Democrats, useful in the first place for furthering the struggle for peace and international security." Our social democratic guests see in these formulations a good groundwork for the fruitful promotion of contacts between the CPSU and the social democratic, socialist and labour parties.

All our foreign guests have of course underscored the significance of the platform advanced by Mikhail Gorbachev for the creation of a comprehensive system of international security. "This is a congress of hope and confidence," one of the guests observed in the course of a conversation during a recess between sessions.

On this score the representatives of the international working-class and liberation movements and Soviet people are at one. We too look to the future with hope. This outlook of hope was the keynote of the April 1985 Plenum of the CPSU Central Committee and now it has been strengthened by the congress. We too are confident, confident of the correctness of the party's line and the consistency and dedication to principle of its leadership, of the purposefulness and feasibility of our plans.

Every civic-minded Soviet citizen knows that realization of the congress decisions depends also on his own labour, on his personal contribution. The personal and the public are closely intertwined in our society. This is an inexhaustible source of strength for our system. It strengthens our confidence in the future, in the success of the plans outlined by the party.

Briefs

All-Union Banner Awards — The Uzbek SSR's Yengiyul City, Zarafshan City, Uzbekistanskiy Rayon in Fergana Oblast and the Tashkent Scientific Research Institute for Central Asia have been awarded the Challange Order of the Red Banner awards of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Council of Ministers, the USSR Council of Trade Unions, and the USSR Komsomol Central Committee for achieving success in all-union socialist competition in 1985, for realizing the plans of that year and the entire 11th 5-Year Plan period, and for fulfilling their socialist obligations. Comrades Kadyrov, chairman of the Uzbek SSR Council of Ministers Presidium; Abdullayeva, secretary of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee; Antonov, secretary of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee; and Alimov, first secretary of the Tashkent Oblast Party Committee, presented the Red Banner awards respectively. The Lenin Kolkhoz in Kara-Kalpak ASSR's Khodzheyli Rayon and the Akhunbabayev Kolkhoz in Tashkent Oblast were also presented with the Red Banner awards and medals of distinction of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Council of Ministers, the USSR Council of Trade Unions, and the USSR Komsomol Central Committee for their highly productive and successful work during the 11th 5-Year Plan period. Politburo Adopts Measures to Improve Agro-Industry

LD222117 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1600 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] As we have already reported, the CPSU Central Committee Politburo adopted measures at a routine meeting which took place on 20 March on further improving the economic mechanism in the agro-industrial complex. Here is our commentator Aleksandr Ruvinskiy:

Among the measures mapped out by the decision of the CPSU Central Committee and the USSR Council of Ministers, I shall make particular note of the changeover to a standardized method for determining volumes of production and purchases of agricultural produce and also of deliveries of material and technical resources. This is a very important provision which will put farms on equal, fair conditions. That is to say, both planning and supplying will be observed proceeding not from the level achieved, but taking into account the real possibilities — the fertility of the land, the area of land, the availability of roads, the availability of machinery at farms, the adequate supply of labor reserves, and many other factors. Such criteria should be worked out by the science of economics. All this will make it possible to make a real assessment of the intensity of plans and pledges.

Of no less significance is the introduction of supply plans for a number of agricultural goods into all-union and republican funds. Alongside this, the resources of meat, milk, and other products will remain at the disposal of local bodies after the fulfillment of supplies to the centralized fund. Thus, the responsibility of oblast, kray, and republican bodies of the agro-industrial complex for supplying the population with food products is enhanced significantly. Also, the personal stake of collective and state farms in above-plan output is raised, since they can now sell it completely through the cooperative trade network, or directly at collective farm markets. The decision also envisages measures to tie payment for work more closely with production, with its volumes and final results. The wages of managers and specialists of farms and of rayon agro-industrial associations have now been made fully dependent on these indices.

I have noted only a few of those important measures that are mapped out in the decision with the aim of raising the initiative and responsibility of workers in the agro-industrial complex for the results of their work and in the final analysis of accelerating the development of our food complex and satisfying needs regarding food products more fully.

Tajik Agro-Industrial Plans Aim To Combat Problems

LD212347 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0915 GMT 19 Mar 86

[Text] Taking part in our program we have Akbar Nusratullayevich Maksumov, first deputy chairman of the Tajik SSR Council of Ministers [title as heard] and chairman of the republic's State Agro-Industrial Committee, who was a delegate to the 27th CPSU Congress:

[Begin recording] The first thing to say is that the organization of the State Agro-Industrial Committee — at rayon, oblast, and republican levels — has been completed and the whole system is now embarking on implementing plans. This is painstaking work and there have been certain difficulties, in particular with regard to bringing together capital construction plans and plans for material and technical supplies. This will require a little more time, but we expect to sort it out quite soon.

We have tried to create a structure fitted to our conditions. Management of material and technical supplies and of planning in the whole industry from top to bottom have been combined into unified blocks. For instance, in the case of cotton the various stages in the production and processing used to be handled by three different ministries: the Ministry of Agriculture, the Ministry of the Cotton Ginning Industry, and the Ministry of the Food Industry. Now all this has been combined into a single complex: from seed growing and production of cotton to its ginning and the processing of primary output. At one time fodder production, a direct sector of animal husbandry, and the processing of animal husbandry produce were divorced in Tajikistan. At present, all this has been combined into a unified block. The entire structure of the republican State Agro-Industrial Committee has now been organized along these lines.

We have tried to strengthen the building section, taking into account that since for the most part the level of development of our republic's agriculture, especially irrigated agriculture, has reached certain limits, further development and increases in agricultural production will undoubtedly depend on a whole range of intensification factors. We are, therefore, attaching special importance to the building block. It was perhaps easier for us to do this than it was for a few other regions in the country because the state cooperative association in Tajikistan was set up considerably earlier and kolkhozstroy operated within the system of the Rural Construction Ministry.

The main task is introducing scientific and technical progress in all sectors of the agro-industrial complex. It is probably not always right that we entrust the introduction of the achievements, the results of scientific research fully and entirely to scientific research institutions. The central apparatus of the State Agro-Industrial Committee is apparently obliged to work first of all on this problem, namely introducing the latest achievements of science and advanced experience, of innovative methods of labor organization, of production organization in all sectors of the agro-industrial complex. Proceeding from this premise we are now drawing up a whole range of very substantial comprehensive programs.

We are to do a great deal in developing the cultivation of orchards, in particular of apricots, taking into account that in Tajikistan, nature itself has created a unique zone for the production of the best varieties of apricots not only in our country, but perhaps in the world. Increasing the production of apricots, increasing the production of processed products, in particular of compotes, is one of our main tasks, the more so as these types of products are used to supply the population of the areas of the far north, the Far East, and other industrial centers in the country. Economist Argues Merits of Family Contract

[Article by Doctor of Economic Sciences G. Shmelev under the rubric "Agro-Industry: Economic Reserves": "Families Under Contract"]

[Text] Hardly anybody today needs to be persuaded of the merits of the collective contract in the countryside. The new form of labor organization and remuneration has proved its advantages and is now extensively applied in fields and livestock units. Those who have mastered the "nonregulated link" system as a rule produce output in greater quantities and of better quality and feel at home with financial autonomy.

Teams and links which have adopted the contract method often have relatives working in them. The need to extensively develop the family contract was noted at the 27th party congress. It is not in conflict with the collective contract. On the contrary, it supplements it. But at the same time, this form has its own characteristic features.

The family becomes the basic independent production cell of a farm. This is characteristic of certain areas high in the mountains of Georgia.

The family contract does not contradict socialist production relations. Land and other basic resources remain public property. And the output obtained is distributed in accordance with socialist principles. Nor is the planning principle abolished. It is sealed in the contract between farm and family. Social control of production, which is carried out on the basis of full financial autonomy, is also retained. This form of contract has many advantages. Remuneration is simplified. There is no need to specify individual labor contributions. The family itself rewards each member on the basis of his services.

Usually these teams and links have a direct and more obvious link with the end result. In tobacco growing, for example, a certain percentage of the value of the output sold is paid.

As a rule, family teams are stable since they are based on kinship ties and mutual assistance. And although personal interests are intensified here, the priority of social interests is nevertheless retained.

How great is the scale of this form of contract? Statistical bodies do not keep detailed records on this. Agricultural organs believe that many thousands of families conclude contracts with kolkhozes and sovkhozes. Take the so-called "hectarage" system [pogektarnichestvo], for example. Families are allocated vegetable, melon, or feed plantations or vineyards. This form of contract is well developed in transhumance sheep farming in Central Asia, the Transcaucasus, and other regions. In Uzbekistan almost all silkworm cocoons are provided by families.

Could it be that these collectives conclude contracts mainly for output involving manual production? In practice, silkworm raising and tobacco growing do not as yet lend themselves very well to mechanization. As a result, should the family contract not be regarded as a temporary, obsolescent form without a future?

Not so. Family subunits with a full range of equipment could work in crop farming. In stockraising the fattening of livestock belonging to kolkhozes and sovkhozes on personal plots is widespread. The year before last around 1.3 million livestock fattening contracts were concluded with the population. On Klinskiy Rayon's Gorkiy Kolkhoz near Moscow, the Dachko and Korkishko families took on the complete running of a dairy unit. A similar thing can be seen on certain Baltic region farms.

Nevertheless there are still a considerable number of leaders who do not like the family contract. Here you encounter not only lack of interest in or underrating of this method, but a sharply negative attitude toward it.

The high incomes upset some people. They make big money, they say. But it is earned!

The notion of excessive income under the family contract is also linked with the fact that the wages of just one person — the head of the family — are taken into account. Yet these wages need to be regarded as the common income of all those involved in the labor process. It must be borne in mind, moreover, that often some or all the work is done during hours when they are not engaged in social production. Thus, it is overtime work. And the pay for it is higher.

The family contract precludes wage leveling. This is the prime factor which the advocates of "average wages" need to fear! As for overpayments, they only occur when the principle of remuneration according to labor is violated.

We still have people who shudder at the adjectives "individual" or "family." They see personal subsidiary farms as a vestige of the individual peasant farm. And the family contract is identified with the farming business. The truth, however, is that there are not the slightest grounds for these assertions. As was noted at the 27th CPSU Congress, a person's attitude to property is shaped primarily by the real conditions in which he is placed. And a family which has adopted the contract system is engaged in a social matter and utilizes social means of production.

At the same time, it is impossible to turn a blind eye to the fact that the family contract is sometimes used as a cover for private enterprise activity. Various abuses do occur. It is therefore necessary to create a more precise legal basis and intensify control. Because to this day there is essentially not a single normative document governing mutual relations between the parties who have concluded a family contract agreement. Surely it is indicative that the recommendations for the creation of financially autonomous nonregulated collectives elaborated by the former Ministry of Agriculture did not even mention the family contract. Is this not a source of distrust in an effective method?

'Cosmos-1736' Artificial Satellite Launched 21 Mar

LD211519 Moscow TASS in English 1503 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 21 TASS — Another artificial earth satellite, Cosmos-1736 was launched in the Soviet Union today.

The sputnik carries scientific equipment for the continuation of the exploration of outer space.

The Sputnik was put into orbit with the following parameters: the initial period of revolution 89.6 minutes, the maximum distance from the earth's surface 278 kilometres, the minimum distance from the earth's surface 255 kilometres, inclination of the orbit 65 degrees.

The equipment on board the sputnik is functioning normally.

'Progress-25' Docks with 'Mir'-'Soyuz T-15' Complex

LD211212 Moscow TASS in English 1203 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 21 TASS — At 14.16 [1116 GMT] Moscow time the spaceship Progress-25 docked with the orbital manned complex Mir-Soyuz T-15.

The mutual search, rendezvous, tethering and docking of spacecraft was done by means of onboard automatic systems. These operations were controlled by the mission control centre and the crew of the orbital complex — cosmonauts Kizim and Solovev. The transport craft docked to the station from the side of the propulsion and instruments section.

The Progress-25 has delivered into orbit fuel for the joint engine, foods, water and apparatuses and equipment necessary for a long functioning of the Mir (Peace) station as the basic block of the sophisticated research complex.

According to telemetric information and reports of the crew on onboard systems of the orbital complex Mir-Soyuz T-15-Progress-25 are functioning normally.

Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovev feel well.

'Mir'-'Soyuz T-15' Reported Functioning Normally

LD220622 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
0304 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Report from the Flight Control Center]

[Text] Cosmonauts Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovev will unload the transport vessel Progress-25 today, which moored with the Mir-Soyuz T-15 space complex yesterday. Approximately 2 metric tons of various freight was put into orbit. The crew will (?stow) in the station foodstuffs, various equipment, additional apparatus and instruments, cine-film, and tools. About 200 liters of drinking water will be pumped from the cargo vessel's tanks into the station's reservoirs. According to telemetric data and the reports of the crew, the manned complex' on-board systems are functioning normally and the cosmonauts are feeling good.

Cosmonaut Solovyev Explains Space Station's Computer

LD222039 [Editorial Report] Moscow Television Service in Russian at 1530 GMT on 22 March broadcasts a 2 and 1/2 - minute video report from onboard the Mir-Progress-25-Soyuz T-15 station.

Cosmonaut Vladimir Solovyev speaks in general terms, first of all, of the appearance of the station as it seems to the crew: a white-winged seagull soaring over the earth. Solovyev says that whereas there was only one on-board computer on the Salyut-7 station, the present station has an on-board computer complex which makes it possible to carry out a large number of tasks autonomously. Solovyev continues, saying that, without being distracted, the cosmonauts can benefit from programs which have been input from earth and which carry out functions for several days — the computer will carry out precise dynamic orientation and switch on the necessary systems while the cosmonauts get on with the business of analysis and scientific work in space.

Solovyev says they are pleased with the station: Yesterday evening they slept and in the morning they started work again. He adds that it will not be long before there are greenhouses in space.

Ovchinnikov Speaks on Outlook for Biotechnology

LD222012 Moscow TASS in English 1728 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 22 TASS — Biotechnology, molecular biology and gene engineering are the fields of science, to which heightened attention will be devoted in the new five-year plan period, said Yuriy Ovchinnikov, vice-president of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR. He was addressing the current general assembly of the academy of Moscow to sum up the results of the work over the past five years and outline plans for the development of this type of research.

The potentialities of these fields of science are vast and are permanently growing, the academician pointed out. Over the past five-ten years biological sciences turned from academic ones into those of decisive significance for progress in science and technology. They became a basis for contemporary health protection. There is now a possibility to create medicinal preparations of a qualitatively new level.

Thus basing themselves on the methods of gene engineering Soviet scientists have developed a number of effective preparations, including human interferon, an effective means for the treatment of infectious diseases, insulin for diabetes patients and a growth hormone. New enzymes, a valuable raw material for the pharmaceutical industry, have been obtained.

Work is done on a large scope in Soviet biology to synthesize new types of microorganisms, Academician Ovchinnikov continued. The methods of cell engineering are used to cultivate virus-free farm crops varieties.

Yet our scientists are not satisfied with what has been achieved so far, Ovchinnikov said. He recalled the criticism of work of biologists from the rostrum of the 27th Congress of the CPSU.

Biological science institutes are planning to restructure their work with an eye to this criticism, and preference will be given to research on topical subjects of science. The research institutes will be fitted out with advanced sophisticated equipment, and the pay to researchers will also be considerably increased.

One of the difficulties often faced by the researchers is the checking of new preparations. While to create these preparations it usually takes on an average half a year, the checking done at various official levels takes several years. Certainly, this carefully multistage checking is determined in a new large measure by concern for the patients in the use of a new preparation. At the same time those who create new preparations and medicines, naturally, wish that the results of their work be put to use for the benefit of patients as soon as possible.

Presidium Commission Examines Environmental Issues

PM181519 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 15 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 2

[TASS report: "Concern for Nature"]

[Text] A routine session of the USSR Council of Ministers Presidium Commission for Environmental Protection and the Rational Use of Resources was held on 13 January.

The session noted that the 27th CPSU Congress paid great attention to questions of the further intensification and improvement of the protection of the country's natural environment. The CPSU Central Committee political report, the new edition of the CPSU Program, and other congress documents and materials note the great importance of environmental protection and the rational use of natural resources for reinforcing the party's course toward the accelerated development of the national economy, increasing prosperity, and improving living and working conditions for Soviet people. The congress stressed that in resolving the global problem of nature conservation full use should be made of socialism's advantage, with its planned organization of production and humanist world outlook.

The commission examined the question of the observance in the Georgian and Tajik SSRs of the fundamentals of legislation on land in the sphere of the protection and rational use of land resources. During the past 5-year plan those republics failed to fulfill the land recultivation plans, considerable areas of valuable farmland there have been set aside as sites for various construction projects, the campaign against soil erosion is inadequate, and the yield of grain and vegetable crops on reclaimed lands is too low.

The commission instructed the Georgian SSR and Tajik SSR Councils of Ministers together with interested USSR ministries and departments to eliminate the shortcomings that have been observed and ensure the strict observance of the requirements of the fundamentals of legislation on land.

There was an examination of the question of measures to improve the construction of nature conservation facilities by the USSR Ministry of Industrial Construction in the 12th 5-Year Plan. The commission noted that year after year that ministry's subcontracting organizations fail to fulfill the plan targets, do not ensure the prompt commissioning of the capacities of facilities for the purification of run off water or of plants involved in the recovery and safe disposal of harmful substances from toxic gases, and in this regard permit poor quality construction and assembly work, deviations from plans, and violations of construction norms and rules.

In the decision taken on this question the commission drew the USSR Ministry of Industrial Construction's attention to the unsatisfactory work of subordinate enterprises and organizations in fulfilling the plan for contract work in the construction of nature conservation facilities in the 11th 5-Year Plan and issued instructions to formulate and implement exhaustive measures in the 12th 5-Year Plan to rectify the serious shortcomings noted and in particular to ensure in the first half of 1986 the commissioning of facilities not commissioned in 1985, to fully satisfy clients' demands for the construction of nature conservation facilities in 1986-1990, and to improve the quality of their construction.

On the basis of a report from the State Committee for Science and Technology there was an examination of the question of the national economy's use of the results of scientific and technical cooperation with foreign countries in the sphere of nature conservation and on the further development of that cooperation. The commission instructed the State Committee for Science and Technology and other interested USSR ministries and departments and union republic councils of ministers to ensure the further development and greater effectiveness of the Soviet side's participation in this international cooperation and make greater use of its results in the interests of the country's nature conservation

The commission examined the question of clearing the Sayano-Shushensk GES reservoir of fallen trees and of accelerating the work to remove trees from the reservoir's flood zone. It was noted that the blockage of reservoirs with lumber has an adverse effect on their ecological condition and causes the national economy considerable harm since conditions for shipping, the operation of GES's, and other forms of water use are thereby worsened. However, the USSR Ministry of Power and Electrification and the USSR Ministry of the Timber, Pulp and Paper, and Wood Processing Industry are not taking the necessary measures to ensure the prompt resolution of questions of improving the organization and techniques of tree clearance work when building GES's and to overcome the consequences of poor-quality work in this respect.

The commission instructed those ministries to ensure the fundamental improvement of tree felling and clearance work in the flood zones of reservoirs belonging to GES's in Siberia and the Far East and of work to clear their waters and banks of timber.

The commission session was chaired by V.S. Murakhovksiy, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers.

Sokolov Addresses Ministry Aktiv Meeting on Congress

LD211710 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1600 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] A meeting of the USSR Ministry of Defense party aktiv, at which Marshal of the Soviet Union Sokolov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, USSR minister of defense spoke, took place in Moscow today.

Participants in the meeting stressed that as long as a danger of imperialism unleashing aggressive wars and military conflicts exists, the party will pay unabated attention to strengthening the defensive might of the USSR, strengthening its security and the readiness of the armed forces to rout any aggressor.

In accordance with the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, as was noted in the speeches, it is essential to comprehensively raise the combat readiness of the Armed Forces, to educate fighters in the spirit of vigilance and constant readiness to defend the gains of socialism, and to strengthen the combat community [boyevoye sodruzhestvo] with the armies of fraternal socialist countries.

Tasks of strengthening party influence over the perfection of the administrative activity style of commanders and staff and for raising its efficiency were also discussed.

Kulikov Addresses Transbaykal Garrison Meeting

PM211447 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Second Edition p 2

[Correspondent Lieutenant Colonel A. Bedzhanyan report: "At Transbaykal Garrison"]

[Text] A meeting has taken place at "N" garrison between military servicemen and members of their families and Marshal of the Soviet Union V.G. Kulikov, commander in chief of the Warsaw Pact Joint Armed Forces, USSR first deputy defense minister, member of the CPSU Central Committee, and delegate to the 27th CPSU Congress. Marshal of the Soviet Union V.G. Kulikov described the work of the congress, which took place at a decisive turning point in our country's history, and its decisions, aimed at accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and improving the international situation. The congress materials paid great attention to the country's defense capability.

Taking part in the meeting were 27th CPSU Congress delegates Colonel General S.I. Postnikov, member of the CPSU Central Auditing Commission and commander of the Order of Lenin Transbaykal Military District, Colonel General V.S. Nechayev, deputy chief of the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate, and Lieutenant General I.Ya. Solodilov, member of the military council and chief of the district's political directorate.

Northern Commander Commemorates Army, Navy Day

AU122021 Warsaw ZOLNIERZ WOLNOSCI in Polish 22-23 Feb 86 p 2

[Speech by Colonel General Aleksandr Kovtunov, commander of the Northern Group of the Soviet Armed Forces, at a concert held at the Polish Theater in Warsaw on 21 February to mark the 68th anniversary of the formation of the Soviet Armed Forces]

[Excerpts] The 68th anniversary of the Soviet Army and the Soviet Navy is being celebrated at a time when the achievements of the last 5 years are being discussed in the CPSU and throughout our country, when discussion of precongress documents is still in progress. These documents set out future tasks and prospects for the development of Soviet society.

Our achievements are significant. But life continually places new, higher demands on the work of all citizens and all Soviet society. That is why the Communist Party will go to the 27th congress with documents of great political importance: The draft new edtion of the CPSU Program, changes to the party statute, and the main lines of economic and social development for the 12th 5-year period and the period leading up to the year 2000. These documents contain party program goals, key issues relating to party economic strategy, and set out forms and methods of working with the masses at the present stage of development and in the future.

While improving itself domestically, our nation takes into account the complex, strained, and tense state of the international situation. It understands that the contemporary world is reaching a point which, if exceeded, could result in a course of events beyond our control. This is the direct consequence of imperialism's aggressive policy, which is first and foremost the policy of reactionary circles in the United States of America, who are increasing and improving the strategic means of attack. At the same time, they are forcing the "star wars" program to go ahead. Realization of this program will mean the transfer of the arms race to space. U.S. imperialism has declared numerous regions of the world and even entire continents to be "spheres of vital intersts" for the United States. It has accorded itself the right to hinder the peaceful and just resolution of conflicts in various regions of the world and the right to conduct undeclared wars and to interfere in the internal affairs of sovereign states. This is the case with U.S. policy toward poland.

The United States is accompanied along this path leading to the threat of war by its allies. The governments of many West European countries have disregarded national security and have deployed U.S. first-strike weapons on their territory. By making such decisions these governments have placed a great responsibility for the fate of Europe and world peace upon themselves. Neither can one now ignore the increased activity of revanchist forces in the FRG, where certain circles are openly calling for a new "march to the East." While fully subordinating themselves to the United States, they are are also trying to gain access to nuclear weapons and other contemporary instruments of warfare.

The Soviet Union and the other socialist countries believe it is possible to return to disarmament, mutual trust, and cooperation despite the tensions that exist. For this to be achieved there must be an end to the conduct of policy from a position of strength and a return to the observance of the norms of international law.

The removal of the threat of nuclear war hanging over us and the complete liberation of the planet from deadly nuclear weapons is an essential condition for securing a peaceful future for the peoples of Europe. The policy of the CPSU is directed at achieving this goal. Clear confirmation of this position was provided by the speech delivered by M.S. Gorbachev, CPSU general secretary, on 15 January this year, in which he said: "We want 1986 to be more than just a year of peace. we want it to make it possible to end the 20th century under the banner of peace and nuclear disarmament..., so that mankind will be able to greet the year 2000 under a peaceful sky, so that it will not know fear of destruction by nuclear, chemical, or other means, so that it will be deeply convinced of the possibility of its own survivial and the preservation of the human race.

We know that the Soviet Union's new peace initiatives have generated great interest and have won general support among you in the PPR [Polish People's Republic]. This is attested to by the speeches made by representatives of the leadership of your country, by many articles in the press, and by the results of many meetings between our generals and officers, and representatives of party and state organs, and social organizations, and meetings with troops of the Polish Army and the youth of fraternal Poland.

I believe that Army General Wojciech Jaruzelski, PZPR Central Committee first secretary and chairman of the State Council, expressed the universal conviction of the entire peace-loving Polish nation with regard to the Soviet rpospoals when he described M.S. Gorbachev's proposals as: "being, in its essence, of historic significance and providing a real prospect of an integrated disarmament program before the end of the century."

However, although almost a month has elapsed since M.S. Gorbachev's declaration was published in the press, a constructive reply from across the ocean has not been heard so far. Speeches made by various political, state, and army activists in the West contain notions such as "unrealistic" or "unacceptable" in relation to the Soviet peace initiatives and talk of the supposed unilateral advantages which the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact are to gain from their implementation. Moreover, theUnited States is continuing to implement its "star wars" program, to develop new weapons, and to display its strength during maneuvers close to the borders of countries which are members of the socialist community.

Under these conditions, the Soviet Union and its allies are conducting an active struggle for peace and for an improvement in the international situation. The socialist countries are aware of the aggressive character of imperialism's preparations for war and are strengthening their unity and cohesion, expanding mutual aid and support, displaying a high degree of vigiliance, and taking concrete steps to maintain a continual and high level of combat readiness.

The Communist Party and the Soviet people are making all possible efforts to ensure that the Soviet Armed Forces are in a position which does not allow imperialism to have strategic superiority over them and are taking steps to comprehensively improve the defensive capacity of the fatherland. The armed forces of the fraternal socialist countries stand arm-in-arm with the Soviet Army in guarding socialist achievements. The might, cohesion, and constant high level of combat readiness of the armies of the Warsaw Pact member-states guarantees that no supporters of military adventures will manage to surprise us and that every potential aggressor must reckon with a decisive response on our part.

The 68th anniversary of the Soviet Army and Navy is being celebrated by the Soviet people and the soldiers of the Armed Forces in a mood of political enthusiasm and enthusiasm for work generated by the preparations for the highest forum of Soviet Communists — the 27th CPSU Congress.

FURTHER REACTION TO U.S. NUCLEAR TEST BLAST

Gan Comments in PRAVDA

PM241419 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Report by own correspondent V. Gan: "Shameful Page"]

[Text] Washington, 23 Mar -- Americans will long remember the day which has inscribed yet another shameful page in the "career record" of the present U.S. Administration's militarist activity. By a decision of official Washington's nuclear weapon test code-named "Glencove" has been carried out on a test range in Nevada. The yield of the detonated device was up to 150 kilotons -- several times more than the bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

When the explosion occurred a group of antiwar movement activists were in the immediate vicinity of the test range. Your correspondent liaised by telephone with Jessie Koks, the founder and national coordinator of the "American Peace Test" organization, who took part in this demonstration. Here is what she said.

"There were 90 of us. We gathered in the region where the explosion was to be carried out at about 0700. We sang antiwar songs. Shortly after 0800 the police arrested eight demonstrators. Soon we learned that early that morning, before we had assembled, six people who had come from Los Angeles -- three men and three women -- had penetrated the site of the forthcoming explosion. Informing the authorities of the fact, we demanded that the tests be deferred in order not to imperil people's lives. The explosion was not deferred..."

The first this year (and the eighth since the Soviet Union introduced its unilateral moratorium), the explosion in Nevada is directly connected with the work to create a qualitatively new nuclear weapon. Administration spokesmen state that the aim of "Glencoe" was to test a warhead for the Midgetman mobile ICBM. But there are widespread suspicions in the U.S. Congress that the explosion was carried out within the framework of work on the "star wars" program providing for the creation of a nuclear-pumped X-ray laser.

Today's explosion in the Nevada desert has caused considerable political shockwaves in Washington itself. J. Wright, the leader of the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives, said: "There is evidence that they were in a hurry to carry out the explosion in order to wreck the expanding support for the moratorium for whose introduction the overwhelming majority in the Senate and the House of Representatives were calling."

In her talk with your correspondent, Jessie Koks said that the R. Reagan administration is not worried by the opinion of its own people. These words were reiterated by the participants in a mass protest demonstration against the nuclear explosion in Washington, Providence, and other U.S. cities.

[Own correspondent G. Vasilyev report under the general heading "The Explosion in Nevada and Its Angry Echo: The World's Peace-Loving Forces Protest the Nuclear Explosion in Nevada, the Arms Race on Earth, and the Plans To Take It Into Space"]

[Text] New York, 24 Mar -- The explosion of a nuclear device by the Pentagon at a testing range in Nevada has caused indignation and protests in the United States. Rejecting the administration's fallacious argument that by means of improving nuclear weapons the United States "will strengthen international security," Senator Mark Hatfield (Republican, from Oregon) stated: "This (the explosion of a nuclear device -- G.V.) not only fails to bring us closer to peace, but, on the contrary, leads us along a path which brings us closer to war."

The Nevada explosion, which was carried out earlier than originally planned (the newspapers write that this was done in order to spare the administration the growing public pressure in favor of a Soviet-U.S. accord on this question), finally tore away the camouflage from those who try by various means to disguise their reluctance to do anything at all that would also draw down the rate of fulfillment of U.S. military programs. An article published in THE NEW YORK TIMES says: At first the American Administration explained its reluctance to join the moratorium on nuclear tests by references to the fact that the Soviet Union has supposedly carried out more explosions than the United States, so that the Americans had to catch up. This "argument" did not stand up to comparison with the facts. Even according to the U.S. figures which the newspaper publishes, in 1985, before the announcement of the moratorium, the Soviet Union carried out 8 tests, and the United States 15.

When the first fallacious argument collapsed, the White House and the Pentagon tried to demonstrate that they could not accept the ending of tests because of the problem of verification of such an agreement. The Soviet Union's officially expressed consent to certain forms of on-site verification robbed the American militarists of this camouflage too. Now the U.S. military-industrial complex has come straight out with it. It has been stated frankly in Washington that the continuation of nuclear tests is necessary in order to test the latest types of arms that are being developed in laboratories and design centers, first and foremost space arms under the "star wars" program.

Zholkver on Public Opinion

[Political observer Aleksandr Zholkver commentary]

[Text] It can be stated with certainty that the U.S. nuclear explosion has provoked an explosion of general indignation. What does such a reaction on the part of world public opinion show? Primarily that people in the world are aware of the danger of Washington's policy of force, which jeopardizes the future of all mankind. If Washington is so fond of talking about the global nature of its foreign policies, then it should be noted that they have found truly global condemnation.

In this regard, it seems to me necessary to point out the serious propaganda defeat suffered by Washington. It has exerted, and is exerting, considerable efforts to present nuclear weapons as a sort of guarantor of peace. It is no accident that the President calls U.S. missiles with nuclear warheads nothing other than peace-keepers.

The angry reaction to the nuclear explosion in Nevada shows graphically that people reject such a blasphemous insult to the interests of general security and to common sense itself.

I would add to this that the condemnation of the testing of nuclear weapons is quite evidently spreading to the U.S. plans to use these lethal weapons in space. If the world shuddered, in the full sense of the word, from the underground explosion in Nevada, they you can perfectly well imagine what the consequences of carrying such weapons into space could be.

In taking account of the reaction of world public opinion, I can foresee that Washington will again complain of Moscow's propaganda intrigues and of the success of its peace offensive. Well, as they say, don't blame the mirror if your face is crooked. In the mirror of world public opinion the fundamental differences in the policies of the two states are really graphically reflected -- of the Soviet Union, which in its unilateral moratorium has rejected nuclear explosions, and of the United States, which continues to play nuclear poker. And so, Washington pillories itself.

Finally, another consideration expressed in particular by the leader of the majority in the U.S. Congress: The Washington administration rushed the explosion in Nevada, fearing the wider and wider support in the world for the Soviet proposal for stopping nuclear tests. Yes, however paradoxical it may be, the U.S. ruling circles, even though they possess the most destructive weapons, are clearly nervous and afraid; they are afraid of the increasingly active antiwar movement in the world, and they are afraid of their own people too.

Fedorov Cites Reaction in U.S.

LD231711 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1537 GMT 23 Mar 86

[By TASS political observer Sergey Fedorov]

[Excerpts] Moscow, 23 Mar (TASS) -- The powerful 150-kiloton U.S. nuclear explosion in Nevada not only shook the buildings in Las Vegas, situated 130 km from the site of the tests, but has also provoked a real political earthquake in Washington. It is a long time since the White House has been under such fierce fire of criticism from the Capitol as after this explosion. The fact that the latest nuclear test was carried out despite the demand of the House of Representatives and many members of the Senate to immediately renew talks with the Soviet Union on a complete and comprehensive prohibition of nuclear weapons tests says eloquently that the U.S. Administration gives obvious preference to stepping up the arms race, rather than achieving peace. President Reagan's protestations about its striving "to make nuclear weapons outdated and powerless" is no more than a propagandist cover for the continuation of the arrogant plans to improve old and create new means of mass destruction, including those destined for space.

It is common knowledge that the nuclear tests are in their own way a "litmus paper," which makes it possible to precisely define the true attitude to all problems of arms limitation and reduction. In giving the order to press the button at the Nevada range, the opponents of disarmament have hurried not only to explode a nuclear device but also to undermine the idea of a nuclear peace and to foist on the world the opinion: Mankind is no longer supposed to live without fearing for its own future. The legitimate question also arises: Can the elaboration of ever newer types of nuclear weapons in the United States really correspond with an admission of the impermissibility of nuclear war and of attempts to achieve military superiority as contained in the joint Soviet-U.S. statement of the summit-level meeting in Geneva?

The explosion in Nevada is in its way an "answer" Washington-style to the gesture of good will on the part of the USSR, which declared that it would not carry out nuclear tests, even after the 31 March expiration of its unilateral moratorium before the first nuclear explosion in the United States. More likely, some people in Washington, torpedoing the Soviet moratorium in this way, would be pleased if the Soviet Union is forced to renew its nuclear tests. Then certainly U.S. propaganda, turning everything upside down, would try to place the blame for breaking off talks on nuclear disarmament onto Moscow and ensure that Washington's hands are free to carry out its "star wars" program...

The Nevada explosion was also given the codename "Glencove," "Glenkov" -- with a clear allusion to the name of the residence of the USSR permanent representation at the United Nations, which has done much to establish understanding in the world community of the necessity of reaching agreement [dogovor] on the complete and comprehensive prohibition of nuclear weapons tests, and providing for a nonnuclear peace. The reaction of the public on all continents to the latest militarist demonstration by the nuclear maniacs is convincing; there are now even more supporters of nonnuclear politics. There are now even more people with common sense, ready to sign the statement of the American National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy: "Reagan simply lacks the political will to make a step toward ending the arms race."

TANJUG Sees Summit Postponement

["Soviet Nuclear Test Ban Likely To Be Lifted" -- TANJUG heading]

[Text] Moscow, March 23 (TANJUG) -- The Soviet Union is likely to resume nuclear testing following yesterday's underground nuclear test in Nevada.

After the U.S. action, Moscow has indicated it will not "sit with folded arms." The self-imposed Soviet moratorium was originally to last until December 31, but was extended to March 31 this year, in expectation of Washington's decision to join it.

Meanwhile, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, responding to an appeal by leaders of the six countries which signed the Delhi Declaration, left open the possibility of the moratorium being extended past the end of March, but only until the first American nuclear test. That took place yesterday.

Sources in Moscow believe that the U.S. test in Nevada "has blown up" what has remained of the "Geneva spirit" following the Reagan-Gorbachev meeting last November, and that their new meeting, scheduled for this year in Washington, will probably be put off for better times.

Soviet party paper PRAVDA calls the U.S. test "an affront to all peoples of the world" and says that by it the U.S. "has neglected the demands of its own people."

Many foreign observers in Moscow believe that the Soviet test ban, announced on August 6 last, was the "most realistic and practical" Soviet peace initiative, since the two superpowers and about ten other countries have the equipment which can easily detect nuclear tests anywhere in the world.

IZVESTIYA EDITORIAL ON SOVIET DISARMAMENT POLICY

[Editorial: "The 27th CPSU Congress on the Struggle for Disarmament"]

[Text] Is there anyone among us who does not wish for peace for his own home? Is there anyone who does not strive for a better, purer, and fairer life? No, there are no such people!

The plans drawn up by the 27th congress are daring, the scale of the deeds to be accomplished is grand. But our responsibility to history is even greater.

The leaders of modern imperialism are aware that each one of our successes and each victory in the struggle for the goals and ideals of Great October strengthens the potential for peace and progress on a worldwide scale. Imperialism perceives this as a threat to its very existence. So it embarks on attempts to halt the march of history, to undermine the positions of socialism, and to gain social revenge on a worldwide scale. It does not shrink from direct crimes against mankind. "The gravest crime committed by imperialism against the peoples," the CPSU Program emphasizes, "is the race in nuclear and other arms which it has unleashed on an unprecedented scale."

The consequences are obvious. The race has already led to an excessively high level of the balance of nuclear potentials. So far only equal danger is ensured for each of the opposing sides at this level. But the continuation of the arms race can only enhance this equal danger and take it to limits at which parity ceases to be a factor of restraint.

Consequently, it is primarily necessary to greatly reduce the level of military confrontation and to guarantee really equal security at the lowest possible level of strategic balance.

Under conditions when imperialism continues to count on achieving military superiority over the USSR and the socialist community, one of our most important tasks is to continue maintaining our Armed Forces at a level that rules out any superiority by the forces of imperialism.

But socialism has never of its own will tied its future to military solutions of international problems. Our ideal is a world without weapons or violence.

This ideal contains a concentrated expression of the humanism of communist ideology and its lofty moral values. This ideal contains the CPSU's aspiration to set man free for creative purposes.

The CPSU and the Soviet state link progress in this direction with disarmament as one of the most important foundations of international security in general. In this connection the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th congress stressed the growing need to resolve the task of outlawing nuclear weapons and totally eliminating means of mass destruction.

This is a task of a truly world historic scale. It is a task on which the answer to the question of whether mankind will exist or not depends.

World War I, which was unleashed by imperialism, enveloped 38 states. The result was 10 million killed and 28 billion dollars in damage from the destruction of material assets.

World War II enveloped 72 states. The result was 55 million killed and 316 billion dollars in damage.

Today imperialism is creating the threat of a third world war. If it is not prevented it will not bypass a single state and, as a result of the direct effects of nuclear strikes alone, could kill at least half of mankind.

In order to prevent this it is necessary to resolutely and irrevocably break with the type of thinking and actions which for centuries were built on the acceptability and permissibility of wars and armed conflicts. This necessitates a new philosophy of security corresponding to the demands of the nuclear space and a platform of concrete actions for the sake of saving the earth from nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons.

The program -- historic in terms of its scale and importance -- for totally eliminating mass destruction weapons by the end of this century and preventing the danger of war put forward in the 15 January 1986 statement by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee is an organic fusion of the philosophy of shaping a secure world with a reliable platform of concrete actions. The 27th Congress proclaimed the struggle to implement that program as the central avenue for the USSR's foreign policy in the years ahead.

The plan for concrete action which is put forward in the statement, a plan with a strict time course, demonstrates the USSR's desire to act in the military sphere in such a way as to ensure that nobody has any grounds to fear for their own security or doubts as to the purely defensive thrust of Soviet military doctrine. But both our country and our allies must equally be spared from feeling a threat.

In this connection it was stated at the 27th CPSU Congress: The Soviet Union is in favor of removing weapons of mass destruction from circulation and of confronting military potential within the bounds of a reasonable sufficiency. But since these bounds continue to be limited by the positions and actions of the United States and its partners in military blocs, our country's principled position is defined by a clear, laconic formula: The Soviet Union does not claim greater security and will not accept lesser security.

The USSR approaches the American "star wars" program from this position too. The Soviet Communists' congress stressed once again: It is extremely necessary, before it is too late, to seek a solution guaranteeing us against the transfer of the arms race into space.

The Soviet Union proceeds on the basis that a sharp reduction in nuclear potential could help substantially in overcoming this obstacle to radical disarmament. The resolution of the question of medium-range missiles in the European zone separately could be a real step in this direction. The possibility of an accord also exists on the question of ending nulcear tests.

The Soviet Union is not merely ready for such accords in the most important avenues of arms limitation and reduction -- it actively seeks them. This desire is confirmed by the USSR's decision not to carry out nuclear explosions even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States, as was announced after the 27th CPSU Congress in the CPSU Central Committee general secretary's reply to the joint message from the leaders of the "Delhi Six."

However, it is hard to discover in the American leadership's position any serious readiness to embark in practice on the resolution of cardinal problems of eliminating the nuclear threat. Yet Washington's practical actions heavily negated its assurances of its desire for peace and averting the danger of war.

The latest test explosion of a nuclear device, carried out by the Pentagon the other day, was an open challenge to mankind, which sees the ending of nuclear tests as the direct path to ending the creation of more and more new types of thermonuclear weapons and reducing the arsenals of such weapons. Here the White House has a special fondness for attempts to submerge genuine disarmament beneath verbal variations on the theme of verification. These attempts are futile. The 27th congress reaffirmed that all-embracing, very strict verification [proverka] is probably the most important component in the disarmament process, and that therefore disarmament with verification [kontrol] is impossible; but verification [kontrol] without disarmament, which is what the United States proposes, does not make sense.

What does make sense, is envisaged by the concept of an all-embracing international security system put forward in the CPSU Congress Committee Political Report to the 27th congress, is a "strictly verifiable [kontrolirumoye] lowering of the levels of states' military potentials to the limit of what is reasonably sufficient." What also makes sense, furthermore, and is envisaged by the fundamentals of such a system in the military field is the renunciation by nuclear powers of war -- both nuclear and conventional -- against each other or against third states; the prevention of an arms race in space, the termination of all nuclear weapons tests and the complete elimination of nuclear weapons, the banning and destruction of chemical weapons, and the renunciation of the creation [sozdaniye] of other means of mass destruction; the disbandment of military groupings with the prior renunciation of the expansion of or formation of new groupings; and the proportional and balanced reduction of military budgets.

But it does not all depend on us. The aims of the most egoistic groups of the U.S. ruling elite, linked with the military-industrial complex, openly conflict with the aims of our people and of all the peoples of the world, including the American people. For those circles disarmament means a loss of profits and a political risk, M.S. Gorbachev noted, whereas for us it means gains in all respects: economic, political, and moral.

Imperialist reaction's schemes and actions should not be dismissed. At the same time something else must surely be visible: that there have never been such real opportunities for preserving and consolidating peace. By pooling their efforts the peoples can and must avert the threat of nuclear destruction.

The decisive factor here will be the successful implementation of the plans and outlines put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress. Achieving the targets set by the congress will also be of great international significance. The consolidation of the material basis of our motherland's might will serve to further affirm the principle of peaceful coexistence and will make a weighty contribution to the cause of consolidating world peace.

It is this that socialism sees as its historic calling.

KRASNAYA ZVEZDA EDITORIAL ON PEACE EFFORTS

PM200929 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 18 Mar 86 Second Edition p 1

[Editorial: "Strategy of Universal Security"]

[Text] The appeal for peace and the peoples' security rang out with new force from Moscow, from the platform of the 27th CPSU Congress. This impassioned appeal prompted every sensible person to think about this question: Can mankind escape the nuclear danger, or will imperialism's policy of confrontation, leading to the increased likelihood of nuclear conflict, gain the upper hand?

The Soviet Union's firm determination to uphold a peaceful future for the peoples was expressed convincingly in the Political Report to the congress, delivered by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. Numerous responses to this document from various corners of the globe indicate that people of good will received it as a program for the development of universal security. Even our ideological opponents and enemies are forced to recognize the the unswerving desire of the Land of the Soviets to find ways of improving international relations.

At the Soviet Communists' forum and in the new edition of the CPSU Program which the congress adopted, a profoundly scientific, Marxist-Leninist characterization of the modern world was given. It is marked by a complex, multifaceted approach, dynamism, and the existence of opposing trends and contradictions. The social shifts of our age are changing the conditions for future social development. Mankind's progress is impossible without socialism. World socialism is a mighty international formation built on a highly developed economy, a solid scientific base, and a reliable military-political potential. Socialism not only constantly improves social relations, demonstrating the real humanism of the entire tenor of its life. It erects an increasingly firm barrier against the ideology and politics of war and militarism, reaction and violence, and against all forms of misanthropy, and actively promotes social progress.

At the same time the 27th CPSU Congress drew the conclusion that in present-day conditions imperialism represents a growing threat to mankind's very existence. The world of capital is finding it difficult to understand the realities of our times and has not renounced the ideology and politics and hegemonism. Imperialism is prompted to translate the competition between the two systems into the language of military confrontation by the desire for social revanche, its own inner mainsprings, and its very socioeconomic nature. The problems and crises experienced by capitalism arise within itself and are the logical result of the inner antagonistic contradictions of an old society. Being unable to cope with the exacerbating problems of the descending phase of capitalism's development, the ruling circles of imperialist countries resort to methods and means which are undoubtedly incapable of saving a society doomed by history itself. Imperialism, the Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress stresses, constantly generates an aggressive adventurist policy by virtue of its social nature.

The U.S. ruling circles are particularly attached to the policy of total opposition and military confrontation. They are noted for their aggressive military behavior, the growing militarization of policy and thought, and disregard for other people's interests. The United States is the locomotive of militarism.

The main aim of the CPSU's international strategy is extremely clear -- to give the Soviet people the opportunity to work in conditions of lasting peace and freedom. Socialism unreservedly rejects war as a means of resolving interstate contradictions and ideological disputes. The atmosphere of nuclear confrontation imposes the need for new approaches, forms, and methods of mutual relations between different social systems, states, and regions. That approach is adopted -- as the whole world can see -- by the CPSU. "In the future," the 27th party congress resolution on the CPSU Central Committee Political Report notes, "the main avenue of the party's activity in the international arena must continue to be the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and strengthening of universal peace."

You cannot save and preserve peace unless you break -- resolutely and beyond recall -- with a way of thinking and acting which was built over the centuries on the acceptability and permissibility of wars and armed conflicts. What does this require?

Above all, it must be realized that not only nuclear war itself, but preparations for it -- that is, the arms race and the desire for military superiority -- objectively cannot bring anyone a political gain. Confrontation between capitalism and socialism can only flow in the form of peaceful competition and peaceful rivalry.

The large-scale Soviet initiatives set forth in the 15 January statement are designed to play a tremendous practical role in delivering mankind from nuclear weapons this century. The comprehensive peace program put forward by the USSR is in essence an alloy of the philosophy of creating a secure world in the nuclear and space age, and a platform of concrete actions. That means concrete actions, within a strict time frame. The Soviet Union intends to strive persistently for its implementation, regarding this as the central avenue of its foreign policy in the coming years. Soviet military doctrine is also in full accordance with the letter and spirit of the intitiatives put forward. Its thrust is purely defensive.

The USSR is in favor of taking weapons of mass destruction out of circulation and limiting military potential to within the bounds of reasonable sufficiency. However, the nature and level of those limits continue to be governed by the positions and actions of the United States and its partners in various blocs. The 27th congress of Lenin's party told the whole world: The Soviet Union does not claim greater security but will not accept lesser security.

It was stressed at the congress that it is extremely necessary, before it is too late, to seek a real solution to guarantee us against the transfer of the arms race to space. The "star wars" program cannot be allowed to be used as a stimulus to further the arms race and a barrier on the path to radical disarmament.

The USSR advocates the creation of an all-embracing system of international security. The fundamentals for such a system, forumulated by the congress, are a new contribution to world politics. They incorporate a series of measures in the military, political, economic, and humanitarian spheres. "Success in the battle against war," M.S. Gorbachev stated, "must be achieved without fail. That success will be a historic victory for all mankind, for every person on earth. The CPSU sees active participation in this battle as the very essence of its foreign policy strategy." The socialist community countries are with us in waging this battle for peace. The world communist movement, the forces of national and social liberation, and the mighty antiwar movement defend the peoples' security.

The party's course of preserving peace and delivering the world from the nuclear threat, a course so vividly demonstrated by the 27th CPSU Congress, is fully approved and unanimously supported by our country's working people and the servicemen of the Armed Forces. Soviet servicemen see it as their duty to further increase the defense capability of the beloved motherland, and the combat might of the Army and Navy, to achieve new successes in combat and political training, and to strengthen military discipline.

In a single formation with the fraternal armies of the other Warsaw Pact states, the Soviet Armed Forces watch vigilantly over peace and reliably ensure the security of the peoples of the socialist community countries.

ALLEGATIONS OF USSR TREATY VIOLATIONS CRITICIZED

PM201034 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Second Edition p 3

[Article by Colonel of the Reserve V. Chernyshev, candidate of technical sciences: "In a Web of Lies"]

[Text] It has already become an established custom in Washington that, as soon as Congress starts debating the latest military budget, the decrepit scarecrow of the "Soviet military threat" is taken out of storage and dusted off, any tears are urgently patched up, and it is paraded at the head of a new attempt to wring out some cash for yet another round of the arms race.

This method was established way back by the late lamented John Foster Dulles. He was the author of the scenario to be followed when pushing through militarist plans: "In order to force the country to carry the burden linked with maintaining a large military machine," he wrote in the book "War, Peace, and Change," "it is necessary to create an emotional situation equivalent to a war mentality. It is necessary to paint a picture of an external threat.... This demands the development of an ideology of a hero-nation and a villain-nation to the highest possible degree, and also the cultivation of readiness for sacrifice among the population." The incumbent U.S. Administration has, so to speak, "refined" this scenairo. Forgeries are now made not only when a new military budget is awaiting approval; the web of lies which, according to the Dulles recipe, is meant to create an "emotional situation" is being spun continuously. Reports, brochures, and "studies" are produced one after the other on the side of the ocean. The U.S. Administration is making considerable efforts to accuse the Soviet Union of allegedly violating the treaties and agreements it has signed.

The question is: Why are these mountains of lies piling up? The goals that are pursued are different: To diminish the significance of Soviet peace initiatives and simultaneously to whitewash the U.S. leadership's plans and deeds which are dangerous for mankind; to shift onto the USSR the blame for its own actions which undermine treaties and agreements; to cover up and even to justify the repudiation of accords which hinder Washington; and to prevent any constructive agreements between the USSR and the United States on curbing the arms race and improving the international situation.

It is typical that the slanderous campaigns in this direction center primarily on those treaty and agreement provisions which hinder most of all the implementation of U.S. military programs. For example, there is talk about some kind of "violations" by the Soviet Union of the ABM Treaty and the SALT II Treaty. Counting on people who are uninformed about the real state of affairs and are unfamiliar with the content of these treaties, official Washington does not even bother about the elementary logic of its own fabrications.

It is claimed, for example, that the USSR is implementing its own ABM program, that it is "ahead of" the United States in this sphere, and that it is possibly even "preparing an ABM system for the country's territory." And that the U.S. "star wars" program is nothing but a "response" to the Soviet work. Yet, when the White House advanced the "star wars" program 3 years ago, it was presented in a completely different fashion, as a new means which would supposedly render nuclear weapons "powerless and obsolete." It is not without reason that the Western mass news media immediately described the current "interpretation" as an "insult" to the authors of the U.S. program. The U.S. attempts to convince the world public that the USSR is supposedly conducting work on a "star wars" program, the British newspaper THE GUARDIAN wrote, contradict earlier statements by President Reagan, who presented his SDI plans as "a potential means of deliverance" from the threat of nuclear war.

Nor does the thesis about the Soviet Union being "ahead of" the United States stand up to any close examination. After all, the White House chief repeatedly promised to "share SDI technology" with the USSR. There is obviously something to be "shared." Yet, quite recently, speaking on nationwide television, the President openly declared in connection with U.S. space weapons: "We must translate our advantage at laboratory level into an advantage in specific weapons." All this goes to confirm yet again that it is the United States and not the USSR that is aiming to undermine the ABM Treaty by developing [razrabatyvaya] a large-scale ABM system with space-based components.

The situation is no better as regards the claims by U.S. Administration spokesmen that the USSR is allegedly developing [razrabatyvat] laser weapons. In connection with these fabrications, U.S. specialists recall that in March 1977 J. Carter, who was president at the time, at the clumsy prompting of the Pentagon accused the USSR of attempts to "blind" U.S. early warning satellites by using lasers. The Pentagon was subsequently forced to admit that soldering work on a major pipeline, which was taking place in the USSR, had been mistaken for "attempts to blind."

But the present U.S. Administration has learned nothing from this lesson. At times Washington finds itself in an awkward situation in its desire to "accuse" the Soviet Union. For example, in the latest report on "violations" of international commitments by the Soviet Union which was sent to the U.S. Congress in December 1985, the administration "made a revelation": "Only the USSR has an operational ABM system." And yet the existence of the ABM system deployed around Moscow is strictly in line with the ABM Treaty. Let us recall that systems with similar potential exist also in the United States, which is also in line with the treaty.

The "facts" cited in Washington's reports and studies are clearly meant for those who have never even looked at the text of the Soviet-American treaty. It was not without reason that Senator D. Bumpers, addressing the Senate recently, complained about the administration's so-called "reports" on the observance of agreements. A lack of information which creates confusion in Congress and throughout the country -- this is how he described the U.S. Government "reports." In his speech, the senator cited an example offering vivid evidence of the unscrupulousness of the administration, which is concealing the real state of affairs not only from the public but also from Congress. U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, presenting the deployment of the SS-25 ICBM (Soviet codename RS-12M) in the USSR as a violation of the SALT II Treaty, "does not tell us that the Russians are dismantling older missiles in order not to exceed the ceilings set by the treaty," D. Bumpers concluded. For our party, let us add that in actual fact this is not a new but a modernized missile and that its specifications are fully in line with the relevant provisions of SALT II.

Incidentally, the White House has gotten into a real mess as a result of its claims about alleged violations of SALT II provisions by the Soviet Union. And at least twice, at that. Let us recall that initially, in late 1985, the U.S. representative on the Permanent Consultative Commission, which was officially set up by the sides for verification [proverka] of the observance of agreements that have been concluded, confirmed in the U.S. Congress that the USSR honors the commitments it has made. Later on, in February 1986, in the report "The Military Position of the United States" which they submitted to Congress, the Joint Chiefs of Staff cited "evaluations by intelligence organs" indicating that the Soviet Union fully honors its commitments. "It would be grave irresponsibility on the part of the administration," THE NEW YORK TIMES wrote in this connection, "to officially accuse the Soviet Union of violating the quantitative ceilings imposed by SALT II."

Nor does the thesis about the Soviet Union being "ahead of" the United States stand up to any close examination. After all, the White House chief repeatedly promised to "share SDI technology" with the USSR. There is obviously something to be "shared." Yet, quite recently, speaking on nationwide television, the President openly declared in connection with U.S. space weapons: "We must translate our advantage at laboratory level into an advantage in specific weapons." U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, presenting the deployment of the SS-25 ICBM (Soviet codename RS-12M) in the USSR as a violation of the SALT II Treaty, "does not tell us that the Russians are dismantling older missiles in order not to exceed the ceilings set by the treaty," D. Bumpers concluded. For our party, let us add that in actual fact this is not a new but a modernized missile and that its specifications are fully in line with the relevant provisions of SALT II.

Incidentally, the White House has gotten into a real mess as a result of its claims about alleged violations of SALT II provisions by the Soviet Union. And at least twice, at that. Let us recall that initially, in late 1985, the U.S. representative on the Permanent Consultative Commission, which was officially set up by the sides for verification [proverka] of the observance of agreements that have been concluded, confirmed in the U.S. Congress that the USSR honors the commitments it has made. Later on, in February 1986, in the report "The Military Position of the United States" which they submitted to Congress, the Joint Chiefs of Staff cited "evaluations by intelligence organs" indicating that the Soviet Union fully honors its commitments. "It would be grave irresponsibility on the part of the administration," THE NEW YORK TIMES wrote in this connection, "to officially accuse the Soviet Union of violating the quantitative ceilings imposed by SALT II."

The originators of all kinds of insinuations in the U.S. leadership are champions of the interests of those circles which obstruct the full application of treaties and agreements previously signed by the United States. Actually, they make no secret of their aspirations. "We must examine the possibility of a real breakdown of the ABM Treaty," Weinberger declared. His assistant Perle also called openly for the SALT II Treaty to be "discarded as unnecessary for America."

This policy is dangerous for the entire world. Today mutual relations between the USSR and the United States will depend largely on whether the positive elements achieved in the seventies will be successfully preserved. The Soviet Union does not pursue military superiority, and it has no incentive to repudiate or violate accords elaborated on the basis of equality and identical security. It is official Washington that continues to seek ways to achieve military superiority over the USSR. A reminder must be issued once more: The Soviet Union is in a position to make an adequate response to any challenge that people want to make. And if we are forced to, the response will be made.

VASILYEV ON 'INSANITY' OF U.S. ASAT TEST PLAN

[G. Vasilyev article: "Aiming...At the Stars"]

[Text] New York 17 Mar -- To what subterfuge will the Pentagon not resort in its maniacal desire to turn space into a battlefield of the future! Last year the U.S. Congress passed a resolution banning the testing of American antisatellite weapons for as long as the Soviet Union observed its declared moratorium on such tests. It would seem that a ban is a ban. But this has not been the case here. Cunning people in C. Weinberger's department are seeking detours so as to continue tests already begun in the United States.

Since the Congress decision declares a ban on the launching of missiles aimed at targets in space, Pentagon "experimenters" have chosen themselves another "worthy target." As THE NEW YORK TIMES recently reported, the U.S. Air Force has decided to shoot at the stars. As the antisatellite missiles fires from F-15 fighters have a self-guiding device and stars have infrared radiation, these distant luminaries suit those in the Pentagon perfectly. It is planned to shoot at the stars twice in the coming months. It is proposed to spend more than $330 million on the program to develop, create, and test antisatellite weapons in 1988.

Among Americans concerned with the future of our planet there is no doubt that launching missiles aimed at the stars is the same as testing antisatellite weapons when missiles are fired at target in the atmosphere or in space.

"Errant caravans in an expanse of cast incandescent bodies," as a poet once said. From time immemorial the distant stars glimmering out of the depths of the universe have stirred people, inspired writers and visionaries, and engendered in man the desire to break loose into the expanse of space. For the Pentagon, however, a star is just another suitable target for a missile. There is something symbolic in this characterizing the insanity of militarists.

EDITORIAL VIEWS WARSAW PACT UNITY GOALS

[Editorial: "Unbreakable Fraternal Alliance"]

[Text] Progress in our age is rightfully identified with socialism. World socialism is a powerful international formation, relying on a highly developed economy, a solid scientific base, and a reliable military-political potential. Socialism is a real opportunity available to all of mankind, an example of orientation toward the future. Having turned into a powerful moral and material force, socialism has demonstrated the prospects opening up for world civilization.

Relations of socialist internationalism have become embodied most fully in the socialist community. The community countries belonging to CEMA and the Warsaw Pact, united by shared fundamental interests and objectives and by bonds of broad multifaceted coooperation, coordinate their actions in international affairs. The community augments the strength of fraternal states in socialist building and helps to ensure their reliable security.

The objective need for the increasing rapprochement of socialist countries stems from the very nature of socialism. The CPSU attaches paramount importance to the development and strengthening of friendly ties between the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. This is inscribed in the new edition of the CPSU Program which was adopted by the 27th congress. The utmost strengthening of friendship and the development and improvement of ties between the Soviet Union and the socialist community countries are objects of the party's particular concern. The ruling communist and workers parties are the driving force of their comprehensive cooperation. During the days when the 27th CPSU Congress was in session in our motherland's capital, meetings took place between M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and leaders of fraternal parties and states. The unity of views of the socialist community countries' communists on the basic issues of our time was emphasized again in the course of these meetings, and their joint determination to continue to strengthen cohesion by all means and to struggle actively for peace and international security was expressed with renewed force. The new edition of the CPSU Program says Soviet Communists advocate the increasingly efficient interaction of the fraternal countries in the international arena with due consideration for the situation and interests of each one of them and for the community's common interests.

Important reserves for the socioeconomic development of each one of the socialist countries are contained in the development of socialist economic integration and in participation in CEMA's work. The CPSU advocates the further deepening of socialist economic integration as the material base for the socialist countries' cohesion.

The peoples of the socialist states have to resolve their creative tasks under complex circumstances. The socialist world is opposed by a strong and dangerous enemy -- imperialism -- which, in today's conditions, poses a growing threat to mankind's very existence. Imperialism and imperialism alone bears the responsibility for wars and conflicts in our century, for unleashing and constantly whipping up the arms race, and for opening up new avenues for it. Pursuing their aggressive policies, the imperialist states have intensified their military preparations still further in the last few years. The United States is intensively deploying ground-, air-, and sea-based strategic offensive forces and is engaged in the development [razrabotka] of weapons based on new physical principles. The number of U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe is growing. The United States is carrying out a restructuring of its Armed Forces with a view to considerably enhancing their combat potential. Similar military preparations are also in progress in other NATO countries. All this creates a real threat to the Soviet Union and the other socialist states.

This is why, as long as the imperialist NATO military bloc exists, the CPSU deems it necessary to make every possible contribution to improving the activity of the Warsaw Pact as an instrument of collective defense against imperialism's aggressive aspirations and of joint struggle for lasting peace and the expansion of international cooperation. The USSR Armed Forces are developing as an inalienable component of the combat community of the armies of the socialist Warsaw Pact states. The strengthening of the fraternal armies' unity and their joint training to defend the gains of socialism will remain the subject of constant concern on the part of the party of Soviet Communists. The fraternal armies' servicemen firmly guard peace and socialism in a unified combat formation.

Vast importance is attached to socialist community countries' unity and cohesion. On a worldwide scale they serve the great goal which is rallying increasingly broad masses of people from all continents and inspiring them to energetic actions. This goal is to prevent a nuclear catastrophe for the sake of preserving life on earth. Thanks to the persistent efforts by the fraternal socialist states, thanks to their cohesion and will for peace, real preconditions are emerging in our age for resolving the most immediate and fundamental task of our time -- to avert the threat of nuclear war, halt the arms race and primarily the nuclear arms race, and move on to disarmament. In accordance with the socialist community's general strategic course of a decisive turnabout from confrontation to cooperation, the Soviet Union has put forth a radical and, at the same time, realistic program which envisages the total elimination of nuclear weapons everywhere by the year 2000 given the banning of the creation [sozdaniye], testing, and deployment of space strike weapons. This program, supported by all socialist community countries, has opened up a reliable path toward liberating mankind from the threat of destruction.

The regular session of the Warsaw Pact States Foreign Ministers Committee which ended a few days ago in the Polish capital emphasized anew that, in the present complex international situation, particular importance attaches to the constant strengthening of the Warsaw Pact states' unity and cohesion. The states represented at the session reaffirmed the importance of their defensive alliance for ensuring their security and peaceful development and for strengthening European and universal peace. They will continue to cooperate closely in international affairs and in the elaboration and implementation of a coordinated peace policy.

Welded together by close and unbreakable unity, the socialist community countries have become the most prestigious force of our time, without which it is impossible to resolve a single question of world politics. It is a firm bulwark of peace on earth, the most consistent defender of healthy, peaceful, and democratic principles in international relations, and the main obstacle in the path of imperialist reaction.

IZVESTIYA CITED ON OPEC COUNTRIES PLIGHT

LD232126 Moscow TASS in English 1935 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 23 TASS -- Brisk trade and feverish machinations with oil tankers in full load, with securities and contracts have been going on in recent days in the oil spot markets in Rotterdam and London, the newspaper IZVESTIYA says today. Millions of barrels of oil have changed hands tens of times by telephone and telex. Many businessmen have pocketed a million of dollars a day on these operations.

The goings-on in the oil markets are being attentively followed not only by the owners of such oil giants as Exxon, British Petroleum, Royal Dutch Shell, Mobil Oil, Texaco and other companies, but also political leaders in Washington, London, and other Western capitals. Incidentally, they are doing their utmost in an attempt to [word indistinct] the market and ensure a further drop in the prices. The U.S. Administration proposes, for example, that a moratorium be introduced on an increase in the strategic oil reserves, which are to make 750 million barrels, and are now 500 million. Besides, they plan to sell to the private sector three reserve oil fields belonging to the U.S. Navy -- which, according to its designs, will result in a new drop in the prices.

In an attempt at countering the West's offensive in the oil markets, the newspaper IZVESTIYA continues, the oil ministers of a number of Latin American, African and Persian Gulf Arab states have held regional meetings. The participants in the meetings have urged the oil exporting countries to intensify their efforts for stabilising the market. Meanwhile the oil ministers of Algeria, Libya and Iran proposed that the OPEC countries should stop oil output for two weeks every month.

The current instability in the world market, it is pointed out in the joint communique, is a result of the political pressure and the pre-planned strategy in order to deal a blow to the gains of the oil-exporting countries and deprive them of the oil revenues they badly need for economic and social development.

Well, this conclusion is borne out by the facts, the newspaper points out. As a result of coordinated pressure brought to bear on the OPEC countries, and other oil-producing states, the West has succeeded in ensuring a sharp and considerable cut in the prices. Over the recent four months alone, the prices of oil have declined from 28 to 12 dollars per barrel. As a result, almost all the oil producing countries of the developing world began encountering enormous financial and economic difficulties, and many of them, including Nigeria, Mexico and Indonesia, have found themselves on the verge of a financial crisis.

A triple blow has been dealt, as a matter of fact, to the oil-producing countries. First, their currency earnings from oil output are sharply declining. Second, they began suffering big losses as a result of a considerable drop in the U.S. currency rate, since the accounts for oil are settled in dollars. Third, they are forced to stop prospecting for oil, considerably slash spending on development and slash hundreds of thousands of workers from oil fields, oil refineries and other plants, the newspaper IZVESTIYA stresses.

WEEKLY 'INTERNATIONAL OBSERVERS ROUNDTABLE'

LD231727 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1230 GMT 23 Mar 86

["International Observers Roundtable" program with Nikolay Agayants; Spartak Beglov, APN political observer; and Vitaliy Sobolev, All-Union Radio foreign policy commentator]

[Text] [Agayants] Good afternoon, comrades. With snowstorms, winds, unexpected frosts, and snowfalls winter is departing -- very unwillingly, but still it is departing and making way for spring. That's the state of affairs in nature. As for our planet's political climate, unfortunately, a genuine warming-up is still a long way off. This is confirmed by the events of the past week which have reflected like a mirror the two principle trends, the two courses of development of contemporary international relations. On one hand, the course of the Soviet Union and the other socialist states towards curbing the giddy arms race on earth and preventing its extension into space and towards averting nuclear war and achieving detente; on the other hand, the adventurist, militaristic, and aggressive course of the United States and its partners in various types of military blocs. Here are just a few of the most vivid examples of this confrontation: The communique of the meeting of the committee of the ministers of foreign affairs of the Warsaw Pact participant states and the documents of the meeting of NATO's nuclear planning group; the Soviet Union's continuing peaceful research of the universe and Washington's striving by hook or by crook to draw its allies even further into its dangerous 'star wars' program; the USSR's proposals on the peaceful settlement of regional conflicts and the Reaganite doctrine of neoglobalism in action.

[Sobolev] I would like to add, Nikolay Ivanovich, that the difference between the two approaches and the two trends is reflected in this week's major internal political events in the socialist and the bourgeois countries. On one hand, there are the large plans for peaceful construction that were discussed at the meetings of the supreme bodies of state power of Bulgaria and Hungary, and at workers' assemblies, for example, in Mongolia where the basic guidelines for social and economic development over the new 5-year-period have been put forward for discussion. They have been discussed in the course of preparations for the fraternal parties' congresses -- the Czechoslovak Communists' forum, for example, begins tomorrow.

On the other hand are the militaristic budgets depriving the poor of what little they have left. At the moment draft state budgets are being discussed in the United States and Great Britain and are being strongly criticized in those countries. In the United States, the Senate Budget Committee has cut the share earmarked for the Pentagon by $25 billion, but still what remains is 3 percent more -- and 3 percent is a very considerable amount -- than the United States current military appropriation.

In Britain, the Labor leader Kinnock has called the Conservatives' financial program a present to the rich and even a Conservative MP -- Latham -- has admitted that the draft does not take into account the interests of the poor. I am going into this, perhaps in detail, because the details make it possible for each citizen of a given country and not only diplomats and journalists, to experience for themselves, so to speak, the difference between the two foreign policy courses. The Central Committee's Political Report to the 27th congress states that the CPSU's international strategy is determined by the basic tasks of the country's economic and social development. The principle objective of this strategy is to guarantee the Soviet people the opportunity of working in conditions of stable peace and freeedom -- such is the party's primary and key demand of our foreign policy.

[Agayants] The routine meeting of the committee of the ministers of foreign affairs of the Warsaw Pact participant states held in Warsaw on 19 and 20 March, once again affirmed that the international situation continues to remain extremely tense and dangerous.

The ministers expressed serious concern over the fact that the arms race and particularly the nuclear arms race is being stepped up and that Washington is undertaking specific actions to expand it into near-earth orbits. One cannot fail to be alarmed, states the communique adopted in Warsaw, that the deployment of Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in West Europe is not ceasing and that the imperialist policy of strength and interference in the domestic affairs of other states is continuing. All this, of course, is increasing the danger of a world-wide nuclear disaster threatening the destruction of life on our planet.

The Warsaw Pact participant states have made an urgent appeal to the NATO member countries -- above all to the United States, Great Britain and France -- to display realism and responsibility in the aim of achieving accords taking into account the interests of both sides and all other states on the radical reduction of nuclear weapons and their subsequent elimination and on the prevention of an arms race in space. So, as we can see, the struggle against the nuclear danger, against the unbridled build-up of neclear weapons and the struggle to preserve and consolidate peace, remain the main thrust of the foreign policy activity of our party and our state. But what about the West? How is it reacting to the Soviet peace initiatives?

Further, it is well known that the 27th CPSU Congress gave, as we say, a start in life to the extremely important idea of creating a comprehensive system of international security. Its main foundations, as formulated in the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee to the congress, are of an all-round, integrated and constructive nature and touch on the military, political, economic, and humanitarian aspects of the modern concept of international security. As has already been noted in numerous comments in the foreign mass information media and in speeches by prominent politicians and public figures in various countries, this is a very important step for achieving an accord on today's cardinal problems.

[Sobolev] At this point, Nikolay Ivanovich, it is evidently worth mentioning once again the very significant clause of the Central Committee's Political Report to our party's congress which talks about the essence of contemporary capitalism. Imperialism is also pushed into translating the competition between the two systems into the language of military confrontation by inner springs -- by its social and economic essence itself. By virtue of its social nature imperialism constantly generates -- that is, engenders -- an aggressive and adventurist policy. So states the report.

[Agayants] Yes, Vitaliy Sergeyevich. And this is all especially characteristic of U.S. politics where the right wing -- the monopolist bourgeoisie -- sees the whipping-up of international tension as a justification for the growth of military expenditure, global claims, and interference in the domestic affairs of other states.

[Beglov] The thing is that by the development of events Western governments were faced with the question of whether they are willing to part with nuclear weapons and whether they are ready for practical steps which would lead to the creation of firm foundations for international security. And when the leaders of the United States and the other NATO countries were faced with a test of their political will they began to take recourse to, I would say, a sort of hackneyed kind of maneuvering. They started to claim that the Western stance is allegedly a stance of realism, whereas the proposals of the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries are a propaganda stance. However, in these clever dodges of all kinds, aimed at proving the unprovable, they expose themselves in the sense that they are disavowing their own policies, their own stances, to which at one time they practically, I would say, swore their loyalty before the whole world.

Let us think back to what happened in Geneva after the summit meeting between the USSR and United States leaders when President Reagan was taking his leave of Comrade Gorbachev.

He said that before leaving Geneva he wanted to stress that he was firmly resolved to make use of any opportunity in order to create a safer world. Let us recall what British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher announced from high governmental rostra a year before that when the USSR Supreme Soviet delegation led by Comrade Gorbachev was being received in London, in December 1984. She said that there is no sense in balance at ever higher levels of arms; we are entering into disarmament negotiations fully resolved to make them succeed, we do not want to have heaps of nuclear weapons but want negotiations to be held between the United States and the Soviet Union. At that time everyone was campaigning for the rapid elimination of both American and Soviet medium range missiles in Europe and everyone swore loyalty to the cause of radically reducing nuclear weapons.

But what is happening now in light of what has been said in Washington over the past few weeks in connection with the Soviet proposal on ending nuclear tests, the Soviet Union's extension of the unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions, and in connection with the appeal from the participants of the Delhi Six to the two powers not to sanction any new nuclear tests before the summit meeting? Statements of a totally different kind are now emanating from Washington, saying that we will evidently have to get used to nuclear weapons for a long time to come and that nuclear tests must continue because as long as nuclear weapons exist they have to be improved.

[Agayants] Within the course of this dangerous policy of Washington's which is giving rise to just indignation on the part of all people of good will on our planet no matter where they live and no matter the views to which they adhere, within the course of this policy there is the new explosion of a nuclear device under the code-name "Glencoe" at the proving ground in Nevada and there are the preparations which are taking place at full speed for the testing of an x-ray laser triggered by a nuclear explosion which is scheduled to take place in April. All these are links in a single chain and they are evidence of the fact that the U.S. Administration, in response to the good-will steps taken by the Soviet Union, is making a point of ignoring all calls for a halt to nuclear tests and for the achievement of most important accords in this field.

[Beglov] And so if one has to say what really are the positions now clashing with each other, I would put it this way: One position is that of reason and realism and this is reflected in the Soviet proposals; and there is also the position based on tricks, provisos and conditions in which one can clearly see an unwillingness on the part of the Western powers to part with nuclear weapons and reduce the level of military confrontation both in Europe and globally.

[Agayants] That is all quite right, Spartak Ivanovich and it seems to me that one circumstance of no mean importance in the implementation of such a hard line by Washington -- judging by latest events -- is also the calculation the United States is making upon being able to use the tension that exists in the world to put pressure upon its allies in order to make them as obedient and unlikely to give trouble as possible. This is also confirmed by the visit to London and Bonn of Caspar Weinberger, the Pentagon boss and it is confirmed in full measure by the results of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group, which has ended its work in the West German town of Wuerzburg.

[Beglov] Yes, both in Wuerzburg and generally as far as Weinberger's arrival in West Europe is concerned, I would say that a kind of open trading has taken place around the question of what the British leadership is going to get in return for its support of SDI and what the FRG is going to get for the fact that it, too, is going to become involved in the implementation of this program. And overall the deal took place in this sense: That the U.S. secretary of defense essentially gave a pledge that the United States will support in every way this inflexible position on the part of Great Britain on the need to build up British arsenals and on the fact that this issue has blocked the first stage proposed by the Soviet Union for nuclear disarmament, namely the elimination of U.S. and Soviet medium range missiles in Europe.

Furthermore some things about this deal simply hit one in their shamelessness. For example, some figures in the FRG had this to say: We want very much to get involved in the Strategic Defense Initiative program and we will try to convince our public that we will gain in the technological sense and will get access to U.S. technology, but at the same time we will try to distance ourselves from the military aspects of this project.

[Agayants] In this connection, Spartak Ivanovich, I would like to make the following observation: Today space is the most advanced frontier of mankind, whose fate depends to a large extent upon the routes that are going to be taken by the further mastery of space around the earth and the purposes for which it is going to be used: Peaceful ones, which are capable of giving people colossal economic and scientific and technical advantages; or military ones, which will lead to an intensification of the arms race and the growth of the threat of nuclear war. Our position, the position of the Soviet Union, is of the utmost clarity, consistent and unambiguous: We are in favor of wide cooperation in the name of peace and in the name of clear skies over our planet. This was confirmed yet again by the work done by Vega automatic stations on the Venus-Halley's comet project and it is being confirmed, too, by the continuing space watch of Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev on the Mir-Soyuz T-15 manned complex.

[Sobolev] The idea of a "star peace" instead of "star wars" -- put forward by the Soviet Union -- the Soviet proposals on international cooperation in space exploration; and the real cooperation which is still continuing despite Washington's displeasure is attractive to people, including American space specialists. For example, look at the extent to which they are writing in the United States about the prospects for an international manned flight to Mars: Americans consider -- and I believe they do so with good reason -- that it would indeed be good to carry out this grandiose undertaking jointly. American scientists invited to Moscow to observe the progress of the flight by the space stations to Halley's Comet returned home, according to the American journal US NEWS AND WORLD REPORT, struck not just by the technical achievements but by the spirit of international cooperation that pervades the Vega project. The journal noted with satisfaction that the apparatus for analyzing the dust was made available for this project by American scientists. The United States did not send its own station to the comet. They have not thrown all their strength and their resources into the Pentagon's space taxi-cabs, as they call the shuttle-craft in the West. Just listen the tone of what was said, for example, by President Smith of the American Astronautical Society, about Soviet space exploration: They possess phenomenal launch capabilities. While (?Johnson), a space equipment specialist from the (?Teledyne Brown Engineering) Company put it like this: No country has a greater right to take pride in its achievements in space exploration than the Soviet Union. And one ought to add that this is because our country has always wanted to see space as something peaceful, to see it as an arena for cooperation between different countries.

[Agayants] As you know, comrades, in Washington and in some Western Europe capitals they hold a diametrically opposite point of view: There they favor the active militarization of space and strive at any price to achieve implementation of the notorious Strategic Defense Initiative, that is to say the selfsame "star wars." Things are threatening to become irreversible and for that reason the following words were spoken from the platform of our congress in the political report; let me remind you of them: It is essential in the extreme, before it is too late, to seek out real solutions that would guarantee that the arms race will not be carried over into space. One cannot allow the "star wars" program to be used as a stimulus for a further arms race and as an obstacle on the path towards radical disarmament. The Soviet peace proposals, including the latest ones, are aimed directly at solving this important problem in a practical key.

[Beglov] At the same time American, generals and politicans -- like Abrahamson, the leader of the SDI project -- are rubbing their hands and telling their colleagues in Washington that they have in fact obtained agreement to the kind of contribution to the trategic Defense Initiative by the British and by the FRG representatives that will make the development [sozdaniye] of some types of space strike weapons cheaper and more rapid.

[Agayants] An admission of the utmost cynicism.

[Beglov] In that sense, if we are going to talk about cynicism, then if one goes over to Tokyo one can quote a Japanese industrialist who said that of course we understand that this idea is connected with war: We would not like to be involved in the killing of innocent people. But just think: How can we pass up the advantages we may get from taking part in this project? Please excuse us but we cannot avoid this temptation. And the result here, you know, is like this: They exchange bows; they curtsey to the public; but in actual fact they make this shameless, crafty, hypocritical, and cynical justification of their involvement in an adventure that might cost mankind very dearly.

[Agayants] The military force in which official Washington puts its trust to such an extent, in order to hold on to its positions, to defend the interests of monopoly capital in general and the military-industrial complex in particular and to hamper the national liberation movement and progressive reforms in the countries that have been liberated, this military force is today clothing itself in a political doctrine which has been given the name of the doctrine of neoglobalism. To the accompaniment of loud phrases about the defense of freedom and democracy throughout the world, this appropriates to the United States the right to interfere in the internal affairs of other states; to seek the subversion and removal of regimes that are not to Uncle Sam's liking; and to give assistance to all manner of anticommunist freedom fighters amongst which the White House numbers the Afghan dushmans, the Nicaraguan contras, and other bandit-like rabble. This doctrine is nothing other than the concept of crude force, diktat, and brazen plunder. In his special message to Congress, President Ronald Reagan stated that the Armed Forces of the United States are allegedly the decisive element in the creation of an appropriate climate in the world. It's not one of the very latest thoughts, we have to admit, but the stubbornness with which they hold on to it in Washington cannot fail to cause alarm.

[Beglov] I would say, Nikolay Ivanovich, that there are various doctrines, but only one policy. There have been so many kinds of labels we remember that were pinned to this policy, which you have just now described in its various manifestations. They called it both the doctrine of pushing back communism and the doctrine of mass retribution. They struck on the label of the doctrine of U.S. vital interests and the doctrine of national security. A new name -- neoglobalism -- was for a while a kind of popular craze. Now the White House has already started talking about the doctrine of supporting democratic revolutions in other countries, so that one aim and one policy is hidden behind all of this in the final analysis.

In my view, it was the famous American publisher and capitalist Henry Luce who was the most frank of all those who ever gave this policy the name it deserves. At the height of World War II, he said that the United States would obtain ideal opportunities to establish world domination in the conditions after the war. It was then that all things were really called by their proper names. After it started to become more and more difficult to conduct this policy, all kinds of labels came pouring out, like from the horn of plenty. I think that the Americans themselves have demonstrated the continuity of this policy, whatever the labels or names used to conceal it.

President Reagan called 20 March -- when the U.S. House of Representatives declined the request to allocate $100 million for military aid to the contras, used by Washington to try to overthrow the legitimate Government of Nicaragua -- a "black day." But on the very day when the government's request was being discussed, it was recalled in Congress, not by chance, that there had already been one resolution adopted by Congress that had brought the United States and the whole world into a very dangerous situation, which was very costly to mankind -- in the first days of August 1964.

[Sobolev] The Tonkin Gulf Resolution?

[Beglov] Exactly -- when the U.S. Congress almost unanimously, with only 2 dissenting votes, with 498 in favor, voted for the notorious Tonkin Gulf Resolution, giving the U.S. President the authority for direct military interference in Vietnam. That was indeed a black day in history, from which the dirty war started. It ended ingloriously for the Americans. Heavy losses and destruction ensured for the Vietnamese people, who defended their right to a homeland and independence.

Universal peace was also threatened. And you have to realize that when this direct link between the two dates and the two resolutions was made in the U.S. Congress, then, generally, you can draw the conclusion that the lessons of the past are not, after all, passing without a trace. Of course, this does not mean that the U.S. Administration won't resort to new ways and means of arm-twisting in order to get what it wants. In no way should this weaken the vigilance of all peace-loving forces. This is very well understood both in Nicaragua and in other countries of Central and Latin America.

[Sobolev] The case of the hundred millions has occupied a large place on the pages of the foreign press for a long time now, and especially this week. This is natural if we take into account how much importance was given it by the U.S. Government. It looked as if it did not have a matter more important in the past few days. Speeches by American leaders, in no matter what connection, if any, they were made, were about one and the same thing: for the future of America, it was vitally essential to spend these $100 million on the Somozists. But here I want first and foremost to note the position of the Nicaraguans -- calm, full of dignity, and confidence in themselves. They naturally gave attention to the skirmish between the White House and Congress, or more accurately between the Republicans and the Democrats, since for them, for the Nicaraguans, allocations mean new destruction and deaths. But Nicaraguans clearly defined their attitude to the debates: With or without the $100 million, the American mercenaries will not consolidate themselves on Nicaraguan soil.

As far as the political sum total is concerned, which so occupied Western journalists, as to who was in the lead, the White House or its opponents; how many Congressmen were for and how many were against; then the Nicaraguans -- I can't find better word -- scorned it. Only an official protest was announced in connection with the fabrications in President Reagan's speech on television and the attacks on Nicaragua. A multitude of unverified information, as our American colleagues delicately expressed themselves, was brought down on the heads of both the American public and wavering Congressmen who hadn't decided how to vote over the $100 million so as not to harm their own political futures, whether to give their vote for hire to the White House or whether to think that the autumn elections were not far off, when they would need the votes of those Americans who don't want a new Vietnam in Central America. And of course, the Democrats are striving to get points in the struggle with the political opponent -- and in this case, the administration is giving them great opportunities.

[Agayants] Incidentally, Vitaliy Sergeyevich, in a special report prepared on the eve of hearings in Congress by a research group of the Democrat faction in parliament, it says, I quote: In the last 5 years the United States has spent more than $500 million on the secret wars against Nicaragua and on ensuring combat operations of contras trying to overthrow the Sandinist government. The present administration, this document stresses, is waging a war in order to destroy the Government of Nicaragua, and uses any pretext to enlist support to achieve this aim. All the propaganda machine was put into motion and the master of the White House himself, as you have already said, beat, it seems, all the records when he gave the reasons for his anti-Nicaraguan intentions.

[Sobolev] And I think, Nikolay Ivanovich, that the excessive zeal of the representatives of the administration played the role of a boomerang. Even people indifferent to this problem of $100 million start to worry when they see how openly they are being deceived. Well the main thing is not, of course, the decision to which a dozen congressmen came to. Let's take a look at who is against supporting the Somozists: We'll start with the greater half of the Congressional House of Representatives. Even more important -- far more important -- is the fact that the majority of Americans -- and quite a few opinion polls have been conducted recently -- are against the United State's undeclared war in Central America. Virtually the rest of the world is opposed: Both the socialist one and the bourgeois one. Latin America, from presidents to workers to students, is opposed. This finds expression in words of protest, demonstrations, and demarches addressed to the Washington authorities.

[Beglov] In spite of the heaps of falsehoods and absurd fabrications that have been characteristic of the last few weeks across the ocean, in this matter the moment of truth has now indeed arrived. The U.S. interventionist policy has appeared in its true light, and all of this seems to have been especially timed to coincide with the moment when the question of whether there will be a turn for the better in international relations is being resolved. It is particularly important to stress this because now the whole world is evaluating the positions of both the United States of America and the Soviet Union in the light of those accords, in light of those starting points, for resolving international problems, on which the highest representatives of the two states agreed.

[Agayants] In Geneva.

[Beglov] In Geneva.

[Agayants] Returning to what was said earlier, comrades, I want to note the following: Ministers of participant countries of the Warsaw Pact who assembled in the Polish capital stressed that in today's complex international situation, the constant strengthening of unity and cohesion between participant states of that Pact is of special significance. The states represented at the session once again confirmed the importance of their defense alliance for ensuring security and peaceful development, for strengthening European and universal peace.

They will continue to work together closely in international affairs, in working out and implementing the agreed policy of peace and security and international cooperation. Note was also made of the significance of developing mutual economic ties and deepening and perfecting cooperation within the framework of CEMA, the most speedy implementation of the comprehensive program of scientific and technological progress for the successful implementation of plans for social and economic development, for strengthening the international positions of socialist states, and for attaining the aims of their peace-loving foreign policy course. On that note, comrades, we end our program. Thank you for your attention. All the best to you.

INITIAL REACTION TO U.S.-LIBYAN FIGHTING

Libyan Vessel Hit

["An Aggressive Action by the United States Against Libya" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Washington, 25 Mar (TASS) -- An American squadron concentrated near the shores of Libya has opened fire on the Libyan coast. Aircraft of the U.S. naval air force fired "Harpoon" class missiles at a Libyan vessel. As the White House maintained, it was allegedly threatening American ships, carrying out provocative maneuvers in close proximity to the Libyan shores. A White House representative stated that the vessel is sinking and that none of the crew has been saved.

Libya Protests to UN

[Text] Tripoli March 25 TASS -- Kamal Hasan al-Mansur, secretary of Libya's People's Bureau for External Ties, sent on Monday a note to the United Nations Secretary General Perez de Cuellar stating that the unceasing American military exercises off Libyan shores as well as the constant threats of armed aggression against the Jamahiriyah are an open encroachment on the sovereignty, freedom and security of the Libyan people. Such actions by Washington create a serious danger to peace in the region and in the whole world. Kamal Hasan al-Mansur asked the United Nations secretary general to distribute the note as an official document of the United Nations General Assembly.

'Outrage' in U.S. Cited

[Text] Washington March 25 TASS -- The U.S. military's act of piracy off the Libyan coast, which has violated all norms of international law, has caused outrage in the United States itself.

Senator Jim Sasser said there was no doubt that the U.S. maneuvers off Libyan shores had been of a provocative nature.

Senator Alan Cranston said, for his part, that the developments near the Libyan coast had demonstrated how easily the United States could launch direct military activities.

The chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Dante Fascell, said that the presence of U.S. naval ships off Libya had been a source of grave concern and that by having started military activities against Libya without any consultation with Congress, the President had broken the Military Powers Act.

Well-known U.S. politician Jesse Jackson said it was crystal-clear that the United States had been out to provoke military confrontation with Libya. He said that the administration was simply obsessed with plans to bomb Libya and Nicaragua and that this was part of a very dangerous foreign policy.

'Armed Aggression' To Continue

LD250746 Moscow TASS in English 0730 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 25 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko writes:

The United States has committed an act of armed aggression against Libya. The White House spokesman Larry Speakes and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger announced on Monday that on March 24 the Saratoga, one of the three aircraft carriers off the shores of Libya, had dealt a missile strike at two missile sites on the territory of Libya and knocked them out. They contended that the strike was dealt in response to the launching of missiles from those sites at American planes that were in the air space over the Gulf of Sidra which, as is known, has been declared by Libya to be within its territorial waters. They admitted that the missiles allegedly fired by the Libyans had not damaged the American planes. They also said that American carrier-borne aircraft had fired "Harpoon" missiles at a Libyan patrol boat and sunk it.

Speaking at a news conference called urgently in the Pentagon in a bid to justify the aggression, Weinberger added that one more patrol boat had been hit and seriously damaged. Weinberger tried to justify that that act of undisguised armed aggression against Libya by saying that Libyan boats had allegedly posed a serious threat to U.S. ships that are known to be part of a naval armada consisting of three aircraft carriers and forty escort ships, and that those boats had staged "hostile acts." It was noted here at once that Weinberger's "line of argument" closely resembled that used by Washington for inventing the so-called "Tonkin incident" as a pretext for launching a dirty war against Vietnam.

The aggression against Libya caused anxiety in U.S. Congress. ABC television reported that a number of its members had expressed perplexity about the fact that the action had been taken without a congressional sanction.

Weinberger also said that the U.S. Navy would continue the "exercise" off Libya for as long as needed, a statement which left open the possibility of broader armed aggression against that country. Speakes and Weinberger actually confirmed that U.S. intention when they once again publicly declared Libya's Government, which has been elected by its people, to be an outlaw. It is also well known that Washington has long been mooting plans to attack Libya, while the C.I.A. has, on President Reagan's instructions, been contemplating plans to "eliminate" leader of the Libyan Jamahiriyah Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

The armed aggression against Libya has been launched against the backdrop of preparations for a direct U.S. aggression also against Nicaragua, with U.S. ships cruising close to the shores of that country all the time.

Attacks Called 'Terrorism'

LD251224 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1130 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Nikolay Agayants commentary]

[Text] According to a report put out by JANA, the Libyan information agency, U.S. warplanes, on 24 March, violated the Jamahiriyah's airspace over the Gulf of Sidra. After the Libyan antiaircraft defenses had opened fire on the violators, the U.S. Air Force fighter-bombers from the Coral Sea, Saratoga, and America aircraft carriers shelled a suburb of the town of Sidra on Libya's Mediterranean coast with air-to-surface missiles.

A Libyan civilian vessel was also subjected to a bombing raid. Here is a commentary by Nikolay Agayants:

Thus, everything that Washington has so carefully been concealing and camouflaging from the eyes of the world public over the past few months, everything that has been covered up by the Reagan administration's hypocritical statements about the peaceful nature of the U.S. Navy's Mediterranean operations, has now burst into the daylight.

From provocations, blackmail, the threats against Tripoli, from the ceaseless muscle-flexing show off a sovereign state's coast, the Pentagon has graduated to an open use of force against the Libyan Jamahiriyah's Government, which is not to Uncle Sam's liking.

Those representatives of the Washington administration who did not wish to give their names and who, only a few days ago, had forecast that the events would develop in this way, turned out to be right today. Le me recall that one of them told a CBS correspondent the current round of military games, in which more than 30 warships of the U.S. 6th Fleet are taking part, would, he said, go beyond the framework of normal military exercises and that the Pentagon brasshats would attempt to provoke Libya, to obtain a pretext to inflict a counterstrike against that country's military facililities In the past we only talked about it, but now we are ready for resolute action, said the frank and anonymous U.S. official in the CBS interview.

Even though the U.S. President himself and circles close to him denied in every way that they had intentions of this kind toward Libya; even though the White House alleged that the U.S. Navy warships, as has recently been the case in the Black Sea, simply availed themselves of the international right of peaceful passage, the secret has come out into the open.

Currently, assuming the air of injured innocence, Washington is attempting to place the entire responsibility for what has taken place upon Tripoli. However, it is easy to see through these attempts.

In its desire to inflict an exemplary punishment upon a recalcitrant Libya, for the edificatinn of other unruly countries. The United States has, yet again resorted to the practice of international terrorism that has now been elevated by Washington to the rank of state policy and constitutes an integral part of the notorious doctrine of neoglobalism.

The dangerous and adventurist nature of the U.S.' anti-Libyan policy is giving rise to serious alarm and concern among all people of goodwill. An indignant world public angrily condemns the Pentagon's aggressive operations in the Mediterranean.

["U.S. Barbarous Act Condemned" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- The chairman of the board of the USSR-Libya Friendship Society has censured the U.S. act of aggression against Libyan as international banditry.

Speaking in a TASS interview, Pavel Demchenko pointed to the preposterous nature of Washington's claim that Libyan boats "posed a threat" to U.S. warships. "The United States has long been looking for a pretext to strike at Libya," he explained.

"The U.S. military's criminal actions against Libya, which are part of the U.S. policy of state-backed terrorism, are putting the situation in the region on the verge of a military conflict with unpredictable implications," Demchenko said.

The Soviet people condemn the U.S. criminal actions against Libya, he said, adding: "We confirm our solidarity with the Libyan people upholding the sovereignty and national independence of their country," he emphasized.

U.S. Pressure Linked to Chad

PM241244 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[Report by own correspondent V. Nezhamov: "United States-Libya Using Strong-Arm Pressure"]

[Text] Algiers -- The U.S. 6th Fleet, whose presence and actions have have brought medieval piracy back to the Mediterranean, has carried out a new series of maneuvers off the Libyan coast.

Aircraft based on the aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea flew all over the Gulf of Sidra, entering the zone controlled by the capital's airport. The provocative aims of the operation -- the third this year -- are obvious.

It is an interesting fact that the White House is striving to make more active use than before of the Chad factor in its aggressive plans in respect of Tripoli. It was no accident at all that the third series of maneuvers coincided with an attempt by the forces of the H. Habre regime, acting under the French "umbrella," to battle its way into northern Chad and rout the forces of G. Oueddei's National Unity Transition Government. The attempt failed. But the head of the present regime in Ndjamena, installed, according to THE WASHINGTON POST, by the CIA, has evidently not abandoned the idea of settling the question by forces of arms, thereby blocking OAU efforts to find a solution at the negotiating table.

The danger of the present U.S. plans in a pincer grip, exhaust it using strong-arm pressure, and cause economic difficulties, but also to provide a theoretical and legal foundation for all the actions to destabilize a sovereign state in the shape of R. Reagan's "doctrine of neoglobalism."

The U.S. President's "theoretical principles" are being put into practice not only by the espionage department, but by other services as well. The secret "208 committee," set up for this purpose, THE WASHINGTON POST notes, has as members people from the White House, the State Department, the Pentagon, and the CIA. The "committee's" job is to coordinate the buildup of secret and semimilitary operations against progressive regimes in Asian, African, and Latin American countries.

REAGAN'S TV INTERVIEW SHOWS 'MALICE, HATRED'

LD241837 Moscow TASS in English 1724 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 24 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports:

President Ronald Reagan of the United States has again resorted to the hackneyed device of laying the blame at somebody else's door. In an ABC interview he referred to the Soviet Union as the greatest threat to peace. Reagan also stated that he did not regret his pronouncement about the Soviet Union's being an "evil empire." Such an attitude, full of malice and hatred with regard to the Soviet Union, was described by the President as a realistic one.

At the same time Reagan extolled his administration's efforts ostensibly aimed at easing tension in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. The real direction of the administration's efforts is irrefutably evidenced if only by such facts as the nuclear test carried out in Nevada on Saturday despite the Soviet moratorium on all nuclear explosions, as well as the draft U.S. military budget for the 1987 fiscal year to the tune of almost 330,000 million dollars, a truly astronomical one, and the speeding up of the "star wars" programme the goal of which, as is admitted by authoritative U.S. specialists, and by the administration itself, too, is to ensure U.S. military superiority over the Soviet Union. The present administration does everything in practically all directions to enhance its confrontational policy with regard to the USSR. This is also evidenced, not in the last place, by the U.S. delegation's obstructionist stand at the Soviet-U.S. talks in Geneva on nuclear and space arms.

NAVAL COMMANDER COMMENTS ON BLACK SEA INCIDENT

PM241231 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 3

[Interview with Admiral of the Fleet V.N. Chernavin, commander in chief of the Soviet Navy and USSR deputy minister of defense, by correspondent V. Lukashin: "The Navy Displayed Self-Control"]

[Text] Lukashin: The press has already reported the gross violation of a state border by U.S. warships on 13 March. Could you give a more detailed account, Comrade Commander in Chief, of what actually happened off the south coast of Crimea?

Chernavin: Gladly. The following events occurred. Two U.S. ships -- the cruiser Yorktown, with missiles on board, and the destroyer Caron sailed through the Bosporus into the Black Sea on the afternoon of 10 March. The Soviet frigate Ladnyy was in the area at the time.

Its commander, Captain 2d Class P. Zhuravlev, immediately reported to Red Banner Black Sea Fleet Command that U.S. ships had entered the Black Sea, and he received the order: Continue observation.

I must point out that U.S. naval warships have entered the Black Sea on several occasions in the past and carried out reconnaissance. But on this occasion the Americans behaved with particular effrontery: at 1111 on 13 March the cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron violated the USSR state border and entered the area south of the Crimean peninsula.

The commander of the Soviet ship immediately warned the commanders of the U.S. ships that they were violating USSR territorial waters and demanded that they leave immediately. The answer from the U.S. ships was: Warning received. But despite this, the Americans held their course. Then USSR KGB border ships and naval aircraft appeared on the scene. In view of the blatantly provocative nature of the U.S. ships' actions, command gave the order to increase the combat readiness of naval strike forces. Ships and aircraft were immediately prepared for action.

I believe that the commanders of the U.S. ships carried out an objective assessment of the situation and realized that their continuing presence in our waters might lead to serious consequences. At 1332 the Americans left USSR territorial waters having been there for over 2 hours in all.

What can one say about the incident? The incident in the Black Sea entitles one to say with confidence that the U.S. warships' actions were premediated and were patently provocative. THE NEW YORK TIMES wrote about it, incidentally. It plainly stated that the order to carry out the provocative act had come from the joint Chiefs of Staff on behalf of U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger. The U.S. ships' violation of the USSR state border off the south coast of Crimea was carried out within the framework of an extensive U.S. espionage operation on orders from the Pentagon.

I must mention that all seafarers know that peaceful passage by foreign warships through USSR territorial waters is permitted only in specially authorized coastal areas, announced by the Soviet Government. By the way, there are no such areas in the Black Sea off the coast of the Soviet Union.

A few words about the actions of the Red Banner Black Sea Fleet. As commander in chief of the Soviet Navy, I can say that the Soviet naval seamen again demonstrated a high degree of combat readiness. They displayed coolness and self-control. The fleet's strike forces were ready to put an immediate stop to the U.S. warships' provocative actions in Soviet waters. But we were clearly aware of the full gravity of the possible consequences and again we displayed patience and self-control.

U.S. CALL FOR SOVIET UN CUTBACK VIEWED

PM241511 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Report by own correspondent G. Vasilyev: "Tyranny Must Not Be Permitted"]

[Text] New York, 23 Mar -- The crude tyranny of the U.S. Government against UN states inconvenient to it and against an international organization hated by U.S. right-wing circles is causing mounting alarm and indignation in the UN ranks. At its latest session the Committee for Liaison With the Host Country continued its discussion of the question of the United States' new hostile action against the permanent missions of the USSR, Belorussia, and the Ukraine.

Yu.V. Dubinin, the USSR's permanent UN representative, who addressed the session, ledged a resolute protest against the U.S. Government's unlawful demand for a reduction in the numerical strength of the Soviet missions' personnel. He noted that the question under discussion is of great importance because it affects the very foundation of the United Nations, its prestige, its rights, and the observance of legality in that organization.

It is a case of the United Nations now being confronted with a case of gross and impudent tyranny by the United States -- the United Nations' host country -- the Soviet UN representative said. The U.S. Administration has in the past repeatedly demonstrated its disregard for its commitments to the United Nations. It is now encroaching on the sovereign rights of UN states.

The Soviet delegation, Yu.V. Dubinin continued, would like to stress most resolutely that it is a case here not only of Soviet-U.S. relations but also of the tyrannical stance that the U.S. Administration adopts by striking a blow against the rights of all UN members, a blow against the rights and prerogatives of the United Nations as a whole. This action by the United States is not an ordinary petty act of provocation, of the kind to which the U.S. authorities have frequently resorted, but a large-scale act of political subversion against the United Nations.

The Soviet delegation would like to emphasize again that the permanent missions of the UN states are accredited not under the U.S. Government but under the United Nations, as a result of which U.S. claims to arrogate the right to establish the numbers of these missions' personnel are utterly illegal.

During conversations in the corridors of the skyscraper on the bank of the East River these days you can sense the profound anxiety generated by the latest cowboy attacks by the Washington apologists of a "from a position of strength" policy against the United Nations. The majority of delegates understand that if the missions of the USSR and a number of other countries are the target of the U.S. authorities' tyranny today, then tomorrow the illegal discriminatory measures could descend on the mission of any other country. There should be no place in the most representative international organization, the United Nations, for a policy of tyranny, threats, and blackmail historically unacceptable in our nuclear missile age!

CHANCES FOR RIVIVAL OF DETENTE, SUMMIT ASSESSED

LD231725 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1458 GMT 23 Mar 86

[From the "International Panorama" program presented by Nikolay Shishlin]

[Text] One fundamental question runs constantly through the whole diverse series of international events: Will it be possible to revive the process of detente? Will the period ahead be a period which could be described as the second stage of detente? Well, in answer to that question, I would like to say that of course, detente should encompass not only the political sphere, but also the sphere connected with such a sensitive field as that of armaments' political detente outside of military detente will once again turn out to be unviable. Although, of course, everything starts with a serious political dialogue. The Soviet Union has not only proposed such a dialogue, but has also put forward specific proposals aimed at ridding mankind of nuclear and chemical weapons, at leaving space peaceful, at bringing about serious cuts in conventional weapons, and at establishing what is called an all-encompassing system of international security.

The Soviet Union definitely declares its interest in continuing contacts with the United States, including at summit level. Here, however, one must shed a little light on the subject. To judge by all events, certain circles in the United States assume that the Soviet Union has a greater interest than the United States in the next summit meeting. This is, of course, a profound delusion. The United States must understand that they have no less interest, at least, than the Soviet Union in holding such a meeting.

Further, one gets the impression that the United States is set upon falling into the traditional error, taking up all sorts of athletic poses which make no impression on Moscow whatsoever; apart from a negative impression of course. In general, this is no way of resolving international problems -- going at the problem like a bull at a gate instead of thinking about it and seeking a compromise.

In any case, the Soviet Union does not do this, and has no intention of doing so.

Furthermore, what is needed is not a cosmetic meeting, with cosmetic aims, but a businesslike meeting, a serious meeting, which would ensure that progress could be made in at least some key problems on which the destiny of strengthening international security depends.

Therefore, speaking of tomorrow, I would put it this way: a possibility for a turn for the better does exist. Furthermore, there is a need for a turn for the better, a commanding need. But as regards the conditions for a turn for the better, they must of course be created. And the creation of these conditions depends on the Soviet Union and on other socialist countries. It depends upon the active position of the developing states. It depends upon the position of the developed capitalist countries, whether they be NATO members or outside NATO. And, of course, it depends upon the United States. Thus, conditions for a turn for the better must be created. In this difficult and complex work of creating conditions for a turn for the better, what is needed is firmness and flexibility in equal measure, adherence to principles and readiness for sensible compromise. That is, what marks the peaceful program put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress; precisely those qualities, that is, marking the conclusions of the recent session of the committee of foreign ministers of the Warsaw Pact member-states.

REAGAN DOES 'NOT RULE OUR' U.S. TROOPS IN NICARAGUA

LD240801 Moscow TASS in English 0710 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 24 TASS -- U.S. President Reagan reiterated the intention of his administration to seek the overthrow of the lawful Government of Nicaragua. "The cancer that has to be excised is Nicaragua," he said in an interview to the American magazine TIME, making it clear that the USA would continue to escalate military aid to the anti-Nicaraguan terrorist bands. Reagan actually made an ultimatum to the Nicaraguan Government. "The Sandinistas have to look at one of two choices: the possibility of a military defeat and being totally overthrown, or a choice of having a political settlement in which... they would have to give up this monopoly of power they have."

The U.S. President did not rule out either the possibility that American troops would be sent in to suppress the Nicaraguan revolution. There might come a day when American troops will be sent in, he threatened.

REAGAN REAFFIRMS COMMITMENT TO AID AFGHAN REBELS

LD221125 Moscow TASS in English 1040 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 22 TASS - by TASS correspondent Aleksandr Shalnev.

The White House rejects the idea of finding a political settlement for the situation around Afghanistan. This has been confirmed by President Reagan who issued a proclamation designating March 21, 1986 as "Afghanistan Day" in the United States.

The document makes it clear that the United States intends not only to preserve, but also to expand support for the anti-Afghan bandits who are hypocritically described as "freedom-fighters" in Washington. "We reaffirm our commitment to support this just struggle." Reagan proclaimed.

This will mean, in fact, an escalation of the undeclared war conducted against Democratic Afghanistan by the United States and several other countries with the hands of Afghan counterrevolutionaries, the war described by THE WASHINGTON POST as the biggest covert operation of the CIA since the time of Vietnam.

According to press reports, the United States has already spent nearly one billion dollars on the war in Afghanistan which has become a key "function" in the implementation of Ronald Reagan's notorious doctrine of "neoglobalism."

The presidential proclamation shows that by increasing assistance to the terrorists, guilty of killing innocent Afghans, including old men, women and children, the administration is stepping up a disinformation campaign with a view to creating a psychological background for new White House and CIA requests for funds to buy weapons and equipment for Afghan counterrevolution. It is within the framework of the campaign that a "delegation" of Afghan counterrevolutionaries recently visited Washington for a widely publicised meeting with Reagan.

NORAD SUPPLEMENTS U.S. PREPARATIONS FOR SDI

LD251113 Moscow TASS in English 1025 GMT 25 Mar 86

["NORAD -- Washington's 'Trojan Horse'" -- TASS item identifier]

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- TASS commentator Aleksey Kvartsev writes:

The United States and Canada have renewed their agreement on the North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) once again. But its renewal this time took place amid sharp political discussions initiated by the Canadian opposition to the Conservative Mulroney government.

The peace movement and many experts and politicians in Canada are openly worried about NORAD being gradually switched over from the task of providing deterrence to that of preparating for war. The U.S.-Canadian accords to modernize NORAD, which were reached a year ago, can only be seen in present-day conditions as closely related to the "Strategic Defense Initiative" (SDI).

Even on Parliament Hill in Ottawa members of the opposition parties are warning that NORAD is a "Trojan Horse" of the "star wars" program.

A masterplan for the North American air defense, which was drawn up by the Pentagon way back in 1982, provided for modernizing NORAD and the revamping work has now been started by both sides. In the future, in case the U.S. goes ahead with its deployment of a new ABM system with space-based elements, NORAD and, consequently, Canada will be inevitably required to put in an even more vigorous effort.

Canadian observers point out the possibility of U.S. air defense fighters accommodated at Canadian air fields in the extreme north being fitted out with anti-satellite weapons. High-ranking spokesmen for Canada's National Defense Ministry are not making a secret of the fact that the United States will find it most desirable in the immediate future if systems meant to intercept ballistic missiles in the midcourse phase of their flight are sited in Canadian territory.

Is Ottawa's renunciation of official involvement with the SDI, which was voiced last fall, a guarantee that Canada will not find itself eventually drawn into preparations for "star wars" through NORAD?

The stubbornness shown by the Mulroney government in its objections to the restoration to the NORAD agreement of the provision that Canadian participation in it does not presume any commitment on Canada's part to contribute to the development of active ABM defenses (a provision withdrawn from the agreement when it was extended in 1981) has not as yet made broad public circles in Canada convinced of this.

There is a close intrinsic relationship between NORAD, with Canada taking an active part in its fundamental modernization, and U.S. preparations for war in outer space. They are mutually supplementing aspects of the U.S. single strategic plan devised by the Pentagon. The U.S. politico-military leadership apparently is very keen to share responsibility for the consequences of its implementation, which will be extremely dangerous for mankind, with Canada.

ARTICLE VIEWS U.S. AGENDA IN PERSIAN GULF

[Konstantin Geyvandov "Political Observer's Opinion": "Counter to Common Sense"]

[Text] As was to be expected, the February turn in the Iran-Iraq war connected with the start of the new offensive by the Iranian troops led to another buildup of Washington's military preparations in the Persian Gulf region. The U.S. General T. Jenes whom THE WASHINGTON POST calls "responsible for potential military operations in this region" spent several days travelling visiting one country in the region after another. Then he had talks with Pentagon representatives. A symptomatic fact if you consider that the troops under Jenes command belong to the U.S. Central Command (CENTCOM).

The Iran-Iraq war, which is now into its sixth year, is causing untold hardship and suffering to the peoples of both countries. Nonetheless there is as yet no end in sight, unfortunately. Moreover, it is increasingly bursting out of the framework of a conflict between two neighboring states and becoming a factor of grave destabilization in the region. The war is a direct threat to international peace and security because it creates favorable soil for implementing the imperialist plans of the United States and its NATO allies in the important and resource-rich Persian Gulf region. Washington immediately took advantage of its outbreak to confirm its claims to this "zone of vitally important U.S. interests" and came out with threats to intervene, including by military means, to defend these "interests."

As the conflict acquires an increasingly bloody nature the shadow of U.S. interference is growing longer. The statements by leaders of the U.S. Central Command and the Pentagon's practical activity in the Persian Gulf region leave not the slightest doubt on this score.

The peoples of Iran and Iraq have felt imperialist and colonial rule. And will it not be a malicious irony of fate if the conflict between these two states now leads to the return of U.S., British, and French Armed Forces armed to the teeth?! Yet Washington and the other NATO capitals have already acquired a "suitable" pretext for intervention -- preserving the security of maritime communications and the "friendly" countries of the Persian Gulf.

It is understandable, however, that the real motives for the United States' actions are not to help the Persian Gulf countries but to assert and strengthen its own presence in this strategically important part of the world. The United States has been seeking this for many decades. Now it can glimpse a "felicitous" opportunity to realize this goal. The Pentagon is now keeping a naval squadron of approximately 30 ship ships, including an aircraft carrier, close to the Persian Gulf. Three or four of these ships take turns entering the Gulf.

In the military operation that the U.S. Administration is undertaking in the Persian Gulf region, far from the least place is given to the armed forces of its NATO partners -- Britain and France. Since the conclusion of the Camp David deals of sorry memory and the creation of the "multinational force" for basing in Sinai under the Pentagon's auspices, the Americans have been trying to involve in their adventures in the Arab world as many allied countries as possible in order to create a semblance of "international efforts." After Sinai this was the case in Lebanon and now it is the Persian Gulf. The press has reported that back in February 1984 consultations were held between Washington and London after which British warships were dispatched to the Persian Gulf region. A French naval squadron also took up positions there.

But this far from exhausts the perils lying in wait for the Persian Gulf states because of the systematic buildup of the military presence of the United States and its NATO allies. Washington and its Western partners are spurring on the arms race there, compelling the Persian Gulf countries to make arms purchases costing many billions and to undertake broad military buildup to the detriment of their economic, social, and cultural development plans. This circumstance is being used by the West as a convenient pretext for seeking to obtain military bases on the territory of these states.

And another thing. It is not enough that the continuing war is draining Iran and Iraq. It has caused a serious split in the Arab world, weakening its potential for resisting the main threat, which emanates from the U.S.-Israeli "strategic alliance." It is no accident that Washington and Tel Aviv are hastening to take advantage of such "favorable" opportunities to impose new separate deals on individual Arab countries, using these deals to supplant a just and all-embracing Near East settlement. The same can be said of the U.S. Administration's actions aimed at destabilizing and overthrowing the Libyan Government, which in practice are meeting with no effective rebuttal or resistance from the other Arab states.

Those are the far-reaching consequences of the continuing carnage, counter to common sense, between two neighboring countries -- Iran and Iraq. If we add to everything that has been said the fact that it is taking place in the immediate vicinity of the Soviet Union's borders, it is easy to understand why the USSR, from the very first days this armed conflict arose, has denounced it and advocated the immediate cessation of combat operations between the two countries.

We believed and continue to believe that this war has nothing in common with the interests of the Iranian or Iraqi people but brings dividends only to U.S. imperialism and its partners.

I am deeply convinced that there are no vexed questions between Iran and Iraq that could not be resolved by peaceful political means, by sitting down at the conference table. If, of course, there is no talk of things like the export of the "Islamic revolution." That is why the Soviet Union supports all the initiatives of the Nonaligned Movement, the United Nations, the Arab League, and the Islamic Conference Organization aimed at halting hostilities between Iran and Iraq and initiating peace talks. So far only the Iraqi leadership has responded positively to these initiatives.

In late February the UN Security Council came out with a new initiative. In a unanimously adopted resolution it urged Iran and Iraq to undertake an immediate cease fire and to halt all hostilities on land, at sea, and in the air and immediately withdraw all their troops to internationally recognized borders. An appeal has also been made to both countries immediately to embark on a discussion of all problems of the conflict through the mediation or with the aid of any other means for a peaceful solution of disputes.

This new initiative from the world community of nations accords with the fundamental interests of the Iranian and Iraqi peoples.

SCHOOLGIRL LEADS PEACE DELEGATION TO U.S.

LD201956 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Report by S. Starodomskaya; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Excerpt] A delegation of the Soviet Peace Defense Committee left today for the United States. The youngest and most important member of the delegation is 11-year old Moscow schoolgirl Katya Lycheva.

Before her departure she had meeting at the International Friendship Club at the Pioneer Palace. Having chosen Katya as their ambassador, the children asked her to pass onto U.S. schoolchildren drawings, letters, and whole epistles about the most important thing -- how to strengthen friendship and preserve peace.

These ideas are also close to members of the U.S. public organization "Children as Peacemakers", which has awarded the special prize of a trip to America to one of the Soviet girls. This is a prize for active participation in the antiwar movement and it is named after Samantha Smith. Katya is going to America.

CANADA'S CLARK EXPLAINS CENTRAL AMERICAN POSITION

LD221445 Moscow TASS in English 1249 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Ottawa March 22 TASS -- Military force cannot resolve the Central American problem, Canada's Foreign Minister Charles Clark has declared in parliament. The regional problems should be resolved by way of economic and social reforms, not militarily, he observed.

Such is the Canadian Government's position on Central America, and it has been made known to the U.S. Administration, the minister pointed out.

COMMENTATOR CRITICIZES U.S. ARMS SALES TO TAIWAN

OW232344 Moscow in Mandarin to China 0200 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Station commentator Shakov commentary]

[Text] RENMIN RIBAO published on its front page a statement issued by the Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman. The statement said: The Chinese Government has always firmly opposed the sale of arms and technical equipment for manufacturing sophisticated weapons, including nuclear weapons, by any country to Taiwan. In this connection, our station commentator Shakov has the following to say:

The Chinese Government's position is founded on valid reasons and basic norm of international law. Because Taiwan is an inalienable part of China, any relations with that island alone are absolutely not permissible. Arms sales to Taiwan would be the most outrageous interference in China's internal affairs, but those sales are actually taking place. The United States alone sells about $1 billion in weapons and modern military technical equipment to Taiwan annually. The NATO allies of the United States have followed in its footsteps.

It should be pointed out that the United States has repeatedly declared that it recognizes China's sovereignty over Taiwan, and has promised to sever political, economic, and military ties with the Taiwan authorities. However, it has actually failed to do so. Washington and Taipei have essentially continued to exchange diplomatic representation but with a different name. Moreover, high-ranking officials from both sides have kept calling on each other. For example, Goldwater, a close fried of the U.S. President and an influential senator, visits Taipei almost every year, and holds political talks with the leaders there. U.S.-Taiwan trade has grown continuously. Incidentally, the volume of U.S.-Taiwan trade is more than double of that of U.S.-China trade.

It is noteworthy that China's concern over sale of technical equipment for producing nuclear weapons to Taiwan, according to the Western press, is well founded. On the day the Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman issued the statement, Japan's ASAHI SHIMBUN quoted well informed sources in Washington as saying that Taiwan had already produced its first atomic bomb, made last year in cooperation with the Republic of South Africa and Israel, which provided Taiwan with necessary uranium and technology. In its report THE WASHINGTON POST said that the nuclear cooperation was carried out with the tacit approval of the U.S. Government.

All of this proves that it has become a habit of the United States to interfere in other countries' internal affairs.

FURTHER ON SOVIET-DPRK COOPERATION CONSULTATIONS

Talks Completed

PM241625 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report under the general heading: "A High Rating"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 22 Mar -- The 20th session of the Soviet-Korean intergovernmental consultative commission on economic, scientific, and technical matters was held in Pyongyang from 17 through 21 March. The session examined questions connected with the fulfillment of the sides' mutual pledges in the sphere of trade, economic, scientific, and technical cooperation. Measures were outlined to accelerate the assimilation of planned capacities at enterprises constructed in the DPRK with Soviet assistance, on improving the quality of their products, and on increasing supplies of them to the Soviet Union.

The sides discussed the prospects for the development of cooperation between the USSR and the DPRK in 1986-1990 arising out of the agreements signed in Moscow recently on trade turnover and payments and on economic and technical cooperation. Trade turnover between the two countries, counting equipment and supplies for facilities being constructed in the DPRK with technical assistance from the USSR, will more than double compared with the last 5-year period. It is planned to construct facilities of importance to the DPRK national economy, such as a nuclear power station, a thermal electric power station, a plant producing heat-resistant articles, textile combines, and others. Assistance will continue in the further expansion of the Kimcha'ek Metallurgical Combine. Cooperation in the light industry sphere will increase considerably. The commission made specific decisions aimed at implementing the sides' accords on questions of the further development of trade, economic, scientific, and technical cooperation. The session took place in a friendly, businesslike atmosphere. A protocol was signed on the results of the commission's work. The Soviet delegation was headed by Ya. P. Ryabov and the Korean delegation by Kim Pok-sin.

Kim Il-song Receives Ryabov

PM241633 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report under the general heading: "A High Rating"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 22 Mar -- Today Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers Party of Korea (WPK) Central Committee and president of the DPRK, received Ya. P. Ryabov, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, who is head of the Soviet delegation that has been attending the 20th session of the Soviet-Korean intergovernmental consultative commission on economic, scientific, and technical matters.

Kim Il-song sopke highly of the results of the 27th CPSU Congress. He said that the WPK and Korean people welcome and support the new peace initiatives formulated in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report. Satisfaction was expressed at the results of the commission session and the development of economic cooperation between the two countries and some questions were touched on relating to further expanding cooperation in order to solve urgent national economic tasks in the interests of the Soviet and Korean peoples. Kim Pok-sin, candidate member of the WPK Central Committee Politburo and vice premier of the DPRK Administrative Council; Pak Nam-ki, secretary of the WPK Central Committee; and N.M. Shubnikov, USSR ambassador to the DPRK, participated in the conversation, which took place in a warm and friendly atmosphere.

JARUZELSKI ADDRESSES FRIENDSHIP RALLY IN VILNIUS

PM131540 Vilnius SOVETSKAYA LITVA in Russian 1 Mar 86 p 2

[Unattributed report on speech by Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee and chairman of the Polish Council of State, at a Soviet-Polish friendship rally at the V.I. Lenin Calculators Plant in Vilnius on 28 February]

[Text] Esteemed comrades! Dear friends!

I cordially greet you on behalf of our party and on behalf of the Polish public.

I am very pleased with the opportunity to meet you, representatives of socialist Lithuania's working people. We were greatly impressed by innovations at the "Sigma" calculator association, its production indicators, and the great skills and sincerity of people working there.

We follow with great approval the Lithuanian SSR's successes in the development of industry, agriculture, education, science, and culture. We were greatly impressed by the development of Vilnius, the scale of its urbanization, the nature of new microrayon construction, and the concern for the preservation of historical monuments of the past. All this is the result of the Lithuanian people's selfless labor, and credit for it is due to the wise policy of the Lithuanian Communist Party -- a firm link of the CPSU.

Esteemed comrades! The traditions of Polish-Lithuanian ties reach far into the distant past. Memories of the unforgettable victory at Grunwald and of battles fought together against Tartar conquerors and crusaders are still alive. Glorious pages were written together by the best sons of our peoples -- patriots, democrats, and revolutionaries.

Conflicting interests have never divided the peoples of Poland and Lithuania. The conflicts that developed in the past were the result of policies followed by the propertied classes -- the magnates and the bourgeoisie. This has been consigned to oblivion once and for all.

The establishment of people's power in Poland and Lithuania and the switch to socialist development made it possible to discard everything that once divided us. Everything that brings us closer and unites us is constantly being and will be augmented.

Comrades! The last 40 years have been a period of the consolidation of bilateral friendly ties, which are strengthening in virtually all spheres of life. Soviet Lithuania is making a weighty contribution to the development of Polish-Soviet economic cooperation by supplying Poland with a number of industrial and agricultural commodities. They are predominated by output of the machine building, metal and timber processing, and meat and dairy industries. In its turn, Poland exports to Lithuania many products of the electronic and sewn goods industries and agricultural machines.

The mutually advantageous exchange of industrial and food goods takes place primarily within the framework of Polish-Soviet agreements. Cooperation between Lithuanian and Polish border regions has been deepening for many years now. The fact that direct contacts are developing between enterprises, institutions, education establishments, and general educational schools also deserves a high assessment. The traditional cultural ties, which cover virtually all spheres of creative activity, have entered a qualitatively new stage.

Modern works of Lithuanian literature, including works by Eduardas Mezhelaytis, Yustinas Martsinkyavichyus, Alfonsas Belyauskas, and Eugeniyus Matuzyavichyus, are available to Polish readers. Lithuanian readers are familiar with many works of Polish literature, including books by Wojciech Zukrowski, Jan Parandowski, Zenon Kosidowski, and Miron Bialoszeski.

The even closer familiarization with one another is served by the joint commemoration of imporant historical anniversaries, book exhibitions, movie shows, concerts by amateur artistic collectives, and sport, scout, and Young Pioneer camps. It has already become traditional to hold joint Polish-Lithuanian friendship festivals.

These multifaceted good-neighborly relations bring our peoples closer together and help to establish new contacts. We intend to continue marching along this path, to deepen, expand, and enrich the mutual cooperation.

Dear friends! You have many citizens of Polish nationality living in the Lithuanian SSR, particularly in Vilnius and its suburbs. They play an active part in social and economic development and in the development of Soviet Lithuania's science and culture.

We are familiar with the work of the newspaper CZERWONY SZTANDAR and of the faculty for Polish studies at the Vilnius teacher training institute. Your republic has on its territory over 100 schools providing teaching in the Polish language. Polish amateur artistic collectives exist.

There are also many millions of people of Polish nationality living in capitalist states. Yet, there are neither educational establishments training teachers for Polish schools nor any good will toward the educational and cultural requirements of citizens of Polish nationality in any country — however rich -- in the West, where people hold forth about alleged sympath for Poland and wring their hands about the fate of Soviet Poles.

Your internationalist concern for the common cultural heritage and your Leninist class attitude toward the nationalities question are a credit to the Lithuanian Communist Party and your whole people.

Esteemed comrades! We are meeting during the momorable days of the work of the 27th CPSU Congress. This is an historic event for your country, an event of vast international significance for further progress and for the preservation of peace on earth.

Working people in our country followed with keen interest the progress of discussion of the precongress documents. The atmosphere of this discussion offered tangible proof of the strength and prestige of Lenin's party and of the determination of Soviet peoples to implement the great new tasks.

In 4 months' time the PZPR will sum up the results of its activity at its 10th congress and will map out the strategy for our motherland's long-term development.

The enemies' plans have never materialized and never will materialize. Poland is and will remain a socialist state, a firm link of the Warsaw Pact and CEMA. No one will ever succeed in undermining the fraternal international ties uniting the Polish People's Republic and the USSR.

We are developing socialist democracy, consolidating the state, and restructuring the national economy consistently, according to the line of socialist rebirth elaborated by our party's ninth congress.

We are solving various problems and overcoming difficulties. They are the consequence of mistakes allowed to occur in the seventies and also of various anti-Polish actions still being taken by the United States and other capitalist countries.

The interests of our state, of the Polish working class, and of the whole Polish people are inseparably linked with socialism. This is the main lesson we have been taught by history. We will always remember it.

Dear friends! I want to thank you cordially, dear comrades, for your hospitality and for the chance to visit your remarkable enterprise. We wish you further successes in implementing the tasks to be set by the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks mapped out by the 19th Lithuanian Communist Party Congress.

Long live the unbreakable alliance and fraternal friendship between the Polish People's Republic and the USSR!

May the all-around international cooperation between the PZPR and the CPSU develop and strengthen!

Long may the friendship and cooperation between the Polish People's Republic and the Lithuanian SSR and between the fraternal Polish and Lithuanian peoples live and strengthen!

Long live peace and socialism!

PRAVDA CITES PZPR PLENUM COMMENT ON CPSU CONGRESS

PM191513 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[TASS report: "Powerful Impetus"]

[Text] Warsaw, 16 Mar -- Utterly dedicated to peace and social progress, socialism is today demonstrating with renewed force its youth and vitality, its creative strength, and its ability to attain new targets. It is confirming its conformity to the laws of social development and its moral advantage over a system devoted to the supremacy of the predatory mechanisms of big capital, PZPR Central Committee First Secretary W. Jaruzelski said at a Central Committee plenum here. Poland is currently in the invigorating mainstream of socialism, geared to the future and surmounting various obstacles and weaknesses as well. It is a question of our confirming this by the results of common work, not tolerating any form of stagnation and exploiting more fully socialism's creative potential.

The 27th CPSU Congress gave powerful impetus to these processes. The congress has been of enormous significance both for the Land of the Soviets and for all the states of real socialism as well as all mankind.

Participating in the congress work, we witnessed its profound party approach and sensed the enthusiasm with which the delegates, the millions of Communists, and the entire Soviet people backing them grasped the essence of the party forum's decisions and the confidence they place in the CPSU, its leadership, and M.S. Gorbachev.

The far-reaching proposals on disarmament and the principles of international cooperation expounded in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report project an image of a world free from wars.

The work of the 27th congress was followed with tremendous interest in Poland. The Soviet Union is our chief ally and partner. Its might, successes, and major development horizons are in keeping with our national interests. Our increasingly effective reorientation toward economic and scientific and technical cooperation with the socialist countries and implementation of agreements looking ahead to the end of the century match, as it were, the rhythm of Soviet acceleration. It is our big chance and, at the same time, a highly crucial task.

At the 27th congress we once again saw for ourselves the Soviet Communists' confidence in and their friendship and respect for our party and Polish society. This was fully confirmed during my meeting with CPSU Central Committee General Secretary M.S. Gorbachev.

During the preparations for the upcoming PZPR congress we are endeavoring to carefully study and make most responsible, dialectical use of the achievements of the 27th CPSU Congress and the other fraternal parties.

PZPR THESES FOR 10TH PARTY CONGRESS CITED

PM241529 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 23 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: PZPR Central Committee Theses"]

[Text] Warsaw, 22 Mar -- The basis of Poland's foreign policy is alliance with the USSR.

In the modern world there is not and cannot be any security without that alliance. It is stressed in the PZPR Central Committee theses for the 10th PZPR Congress, an account of which has been published by the PAP agency. Following a decision of the PZPR Central Committee Plenum, this document is being submitted for intraparty and nationwide discussion.

Hundreds of missiles with nuclear warheads are targeted on our country from the NATO states' territory, the theses say. We must be fully aware of the existence of this threat and do everything in our power to eliminate it.

The defense of Poland's vital interests demands internal stabilization and the safeguarding of the vanguard role of the working class and the leading role of the party. It is necessary to step up the process of strengthening the party's ties with the working class and intensify the uncompromising struggle against all opponents of socialism.

FURTHER REPORTS, COMMENT ON SHULTZ TOUR

Pressures Greece on Business

LD241308 Moscow in Greek to Greece 1730 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] The 10-day tour by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz to the Western Europe countries is under way. In the U.S. capital they are not attempting to conceal the fact that the main goal of his tour is the effort to exert pressure on the governments of the two countries of NATO's southern flank, Greece and Turkey, with the aim of getting them to give their consent to the U.S. war bases remaining on their territories.

It is not hard to understand that one of the main topics that the U.S. secretary of state intends to touch upon in his talks in Athens is the fate of the U.S. war bases on Greek territory. The 5-year bilateral agreement concerning the U.S. military units in Greece will shortly expire. The Greek leadership continues as before to insist on the abolution of the bases. As was stressed in PASOK's [Panhellenic Socialist Movement] election manifesto, the foreign war bases undermine national security and carry a real danger to the country were a nuclear conflict to break out. Recently, Andreas Papandreou stressed once again that the Greek-U.S. agreement signed in 1983 provides for the removal of the U.S. bases once the agreement expires. This is precisely what the United States wants to avoid, as it is interested in preserving its strategically important military units in Greece.

The United States launched its efforts to force Athens to change its view so that the U.S. bases could remain in Greece after 1988, soon after the signing of the U.S.-Greek agreement. In the course of time these efforts became increasingly persistent; in fact, in the spirit of the old traditions of U.S. foreign policy the diplomatic (?steps) were always accompanied by some covert political pressure. It is worth recalling in this connection the red tape involved in the sale to the Greek Armed Forces of U.S. F-16 bombers. In a recent interview for the [word indistinct] magazine, Assistant U.S. Secretary of State Richard Perle openly stated that the abolution of the bases could lead to fundamental changes in U.S.-Western [as heard] relations, and that it could not be excluded that other bilateral agreements with Greece might not be renewed.

As for pressure on Greece, a contribution here was also made by the numerous envoys of the U.S. secretary of state; the fact that their efforts to persuade Greece to review its stand toward the U.S. bases have not been successful has to a great extent caused the need for the personal (?presence) of Shultz himself. U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT writes in connection with the visit of Shultz to Greece that this visit is unlikely (?to succeed). For some time now in Washington no attempt has been made to disguise their impatience with the independent and self-sufficient Greek stand on a spectrum of other fundamental international problems, first and foremost on the problem of nuclear disarmament. As is known, the Greek leadership hailed the Soviet Program for the total elimination of nuclear weapons. According to Mikhail Gorbachev's assessment, the message of Andreas Papandreou and the leaders of the other five countries addressed in February to the Soviet and U.S. leaderships, coincides to a great extent in spirit with the Soviet understanding for the general system of international security.

This (?rapprochement) of Athens does not only clash with the foreign policy course of the United States, but also shows in its view [words indistinct] of NATO. Washington does not have it in mind to reach a compromise about all this, and for this reason it is forced to resort to [word indistinct] and unconcealed pressure against its allies.

Holds Talks in Turkey

[Text] Ankara March 24 TASS -- American Secretary of State George Shultz, on a visit here, today started talks with Turkish officials behind closed doors. According to the ANATOLIA news agency, attention will be focused on the question of extending their bilateral agreement on cooperation in defence and economy. No result has yet been achieved after three rounds of the negotiations started nearly five months ago.

The local press indicates that the Turkish-American meeting is marked by acute contradictions. They are due, specifically, to the fact that cooperation between the two countries has been obviously inequitable in recent years. The United States, in exchange for credits, wants to secure even easier terms for its military facilities, attach the country firmer to the NATO bloc, and dictate to it discriminary conditions of trade and economic cooperation. As expected, the talks in Ankara will touch on the question of modernizing American military bases on Turkish territory. The American side intends to use them for its interventionist "Rapid Deployment Forces."

Kasparov Commentary

LD251034 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1030 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Pavel Kasparov commentary from the "International Diary" program presented by Vladimir Fadeyev]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Shultz is continuing his tour of Western Europe countries. According to news agencies, he has arrived in Istanbul in conditions of strictest security. Istanbul is the second stop of the tour by the head of U.S. diplomacy. Earlier, this high-ranking guest visited Paris. There was no official report on his talks at the Elysee Palace and Hotel Matignon, the residence of the President and the Prime Minister. Apart from the measures of strictest security, Shultz' present tour is also notable for measures of strictest secrecy. And this is probably no accident, for there is every reason to suppose that the meetings which took place in the French capital between the U.S. secretary of state and President Mitterrand, and Chirac, the country's new prime minister, had a special significance for the U.S. diplomat.

For a long time now Washington has not hidden its wish to see in France a more obedient partner, particulary on the question of its attitude to Reagan's so-called Strategic Defense Initiative. Up to now, as you know, the leaders of the French Republic have openly come out against the star wars plans, calling on other Western Europe members of NATO to also follow their example. However, now, after the formation in France of a cabinet made up of a right-wing parliamentary majority, whose program documents record a completely different approach to the U.S. SDI, it was impossible, to judge from everything, for Washington not to be tempted to force events. This is why, even with the lack of official information about the results on talks in Paris, most French observers agree on the view that the U.S. emissary applied quite a bit of effort to tilt the scales on this issue in Washington's favor.

In Turkey and Greece, that is, the southern flank of NATO where he will subsequently go, the head of the U.S. State Department also intends to work actively to secure a disposition advantageous to Washington. There will be talks there about U.S. military bases in Turkey, which according to AP are considered vitally important for ensuring U.S. interests in the Mediterranean region. Apart from that, Washington administration spokesmen also don't conceal the fact that the United States is extremely interested in four U.S. bases in Greece, which have now acquired particular significance for the Pentagon in connection with the build-up of provocative military activity around Libya.

As is becoming clear, it is these bases which ensure support for the actions of U.S. aviation and naval forces in the region.

This is why, news services report, Shultz intends to promise both countries significant increases in U.S. military assistance in exchange for the normal functioning of U.S. bases on their territory. In his talks with the president and government of Italy, where the U.S. secretary of state plans to arrive and to conclude his tour he also intends to secure that country's active participation in the U.S. plans for the militarization of space. As is known, Rome should soon definitely speak out on the question of participation in the star wars program.

Thus we are once again talking about forced pressure, about the same unconcealed pressure on partners, which, as observers stress, is becoming the basis of the whole of the egotistical foreign policy of the United States, and Shultz's tour of Western Europe countries serves as convincing new confirmation of this.

FRANCE'S RAIMOND MEETS GORBACHEV, SHEVARDNADZE

Further on Gorbachev Talks

PM250948 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 1

[Text] On 24 March, Mikhail Sergeyvich Gorbachev, CPSU Central Committee general secretary received Jean-Bernard Raimond, foreign affairs minister in the new French Government, who is leaving the post of France's ambassador to Moscow.

Having congratulated Jean-Bernard Raimond warmly on his high appointment, Mikhail Gorbachev expressed confidence that the traditional links between the USSR and France will continue to develop in all spheres. This meets the interests of both countires, and now takes on even greater significance both for the all-European process and because of the urgency and acuteness of problems generated by the arms race. For his part Jean-Bernard Raimond spoke in favor of developing cooperation between France and the USSR, which is a constant in French foreign policy. The conversation passed in a constructive, well-meaning atmosphere.

Shevardnadze Hosts Luncheon

[Text] Moscow March 24 TASS -- Today Eduard Shevardnadze, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, minister of foreign affairs of the USSR, had a conversation with Jean-Bernard Raimond who has been appointed the minister of foreign affairs of France. Having reaffirmed the invariability of the Soviet Union's line towards all-round development of relations with France as one of the important directions of the practical realisation of the foreign-policy strategy set out by the 27th Congress of the CPSU, Eduard Shevardnadze emphasized that the importance of a constructive Soviet-French political dialogue in the interests of strengthening detente, diminishing the war danger, and bringing about a peaceful settlement of conflict situations grows still more in the present-day international situation. There was a useful exchange of views on a number of matters of the international situation and of bilateral relations between the USSR and France.

Eduard Shevardnadze gave a luncheon in honour of Jean-Bernard Raimond. The luncheon was attended by Boris Aristov, minister of foreign trade of the USSR, Stepan Chervonenko, head of a department of the CPSU Central Committee, and by other officials. The luncheon passed in a friendly atmosphere.

[Moscow TASS in English at 1838 GMT reports that Jean-Bernard Raimond "left Moscow today"].

REPORTS ON REPERCUSSIONS OF FRENCH ELECTION

Government Intentions Viewed

LD202225 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 20 Mar 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast; announcer-read TASS report]

[Text] Jacques Chirac, chairman of one of the major right-wing parties in the country -- the Rally for the Republic -- has been appointed the new prime minister of France. He has presented President Mitterrand with a list of the ministers of the new cabinet. Also today the president accepted the resignation of the cabinet led by Laurent Fabius.

The composition of France's new government has been announced. Edouard Balladur, one of the closest advisers to Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, becomes the minister of economy, finance and denationalization; Jean-Barnard Raimond, present French ambassador to the Soviet Union becomes the minister of foreign affairs; and Andre Giraud becomes the minister of defense.

New French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac has declared that his cabinet will strive for the adoption of two fundamental acts in the immediate future. The first would entitle the government to make important decisions in the socioeconomic sphere by decree, that is without parliamentary vote. In precisely that way, the new government wants to carry out the denationalization of a number of state-controled companies and enterprises. Through the other act, it intends to realize an antidemocratic reform of the electoral system by abolishing proportional representation and restoring the majority system.

PRAVDA Analyzes Scene

PM201646 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 20 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[V. Gusenkov article: "France: New Disposition of Forces"]

[Text] The results of the 16 March parliamentary elections have brought about a new and highly unusual disposition of political forces in France.

The leading bourgeois groupings -- the Rally for the Republic [RPR] headed by Mayor of Paris J. Chirac and the Union for French Democracy [UDF] founded by former President V. Giscard d'Estaing -- gained 291 of the 577 seats in the National Assembly. This gives them 2 seats more than necessary for an absolute majority. Thus the reins of power are transferred into the hands of the RPR and the UDF. A cabinet is due to be formed and a government program elaborated in the near future. But the election victory by the RPR and the UDF was much more modest than their leaders expected. It is no accident that the headquarters of these parties are refraining from making any triumphant declarations.

The French Socialist Party [PS], which governed the country for the last 5 years, is moving into opposition. More than one-third of voters cast their votes for the Socialists and their allies, the Left Radicals. A solid result. It testifies, in particular, that in the eyes of many French people, the PS -- despite all its vacillations -- was a kind of barrier against powerful pressure from the right.

The elections confirmed that the PS remains the most influential political force in France. During the election campaign the Socialists made quite skillful use of their position as ruling party and their broad access to mass news media.

The proportional representation system, introduced on the PS' initiative last year, played a far from insignificant role in its favor. Finally, the Socialists were also favored to a certain extent by the economic situation and in particular by the falling inflation and the strengthening of the franc's positions as a result of falls in the dollar exchange rate and oil prices. At the same time, the "economic stringency" policy implemented by the PS led to serious social losses for working people. In the years when the Socialists were in power the number of unemployed rose from 1.7 million to almost 2.5 million and now totals approximately 10 percent of the active population. As a result of industry's "modernization" on capitalist principles, about 600,000 jobs were lost in 5 years. Naturally, this course caused disappointment and indignation among working people and alienated a considerable proportion of voters from the Socialists and other left-wing parties.

The overall outcome of the elections is that the center of gravity of political life in the country has shifted to the right. This is confirmed by the sensational election success of the ultraright-wing racist "National Front" groups which gained 35 seats. This will be the first time in the last 3 decades that members of the ultraright will take seats at Bourbon Palace, where the French parliamentarians hold their sessions. Their emergence in the political arena, directly linked with the crisis and the aggravation of social contradictions, is a highly alarming sign for all champions of democracy in France.

The French Communist Party [PCF] experienced the bitter taste of failure in the elections. It gained about 10 percent of votes and 35 seats in the National Assembly. The Communists had to wage their struggle under harsh conditions and to oppose a broad front, ranging from the bourgeois parties to the PS. A bitter campaign against the PCF was launched by the mass news media. The right-wing circles are now maliciously rejoicing at the Communist Party's failure. What is amazing is that PS leaders have joined in this choir. Is it not obvious that any weakening of the PCF undermines the positions of the entire left-wing democratic movement in the face of the monopolies?

A PCF Politburo statement notes that, following the right-wing forces' victory, it is necessary to draw all conclusions from the sad and painful experience the people's movement has just lived through. It is to be assumed that the Communist Party will investigate in detail the causes of this failure. A Central Committee plenum has been scheduled for the near future. The PCF leadership is orienting Communists toward party cohesion and galvanization of the struggle for the working people's interests. Communists are aware that the PCF's weight and influence in the country do not depend only on the election results. Its strength lies in strengthening its ties with the working class and the world of labor. The Communists' enemies are forced to take this strength into account both now and in the future.

The unusual nature of the situation which has developed following the elections stems from the fact that this is the first time in the existence of the Fifth Republic that the president cannot rely on the support of the majority in parliament. A kind of dual power is emerging. How will relations develop between President F. Mitterrand and the parliamentary majority? Will it be possible for the president to "cohabit" with the new government? These are the questions currently being asked in French political circles.

The president enjoys quite broad powers under the Constitution. He has repeatedly declared his determination to remain in office until the end of his term, in other words through 1988. It is assumed in Paris that the results of the parliamentary elections will encourage the president to make even broader use of his powers as head of state. As for the new parliamentary majority, all the indications are that there is no complete unanimity within its ranks on the question of "cohabitation." French political observers see this as a potential source of conflict and even of instability in the domestic political situation.

The main issue of course, is the policy which the French Government will follow. The election platform of the bourgeois groups envisaged a stringent economic and social line. The objectives included a sharp reduction of state regulations of the economy, the granting of even broader opportunities to big capital, and the curtailing of trade union rights and working people's socioeconomic gains.

The RPR and UDF leaders proclaim their commitment to France's interests and emphasize their desire to follow an independent line in international affairs. There is talk about a desire to maintain dialogue and develop relations with the Soviet Union. It is true that some people are urging a "new" look at France's foreign policy and particularly on the question of the attitude toward the U.S. "Strategic Defense Initiative." It is well known that President F. Mitterrand has repeatedly declared that the militarization of space would undermine strategic stability in the world and would be detrimental to France's security. One cannot but agree with this.

As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, it is invariably in favor of good relations and cooperation with France in the interests of strengthening peace and security in Europe and throughout the world. Any steps in this direction will meet with a positive response and support from the Soviet side.

ITALIAN CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES PRESIDENT VISITS

Arrives in Moscow

LD242348 Moscow TASS in English 1214 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 24 TASS -- Nilde Jotti, president of the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament, arrived in Moscow Sunday on an official visit at the invitation of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. Today, the guest visited the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. She was welcomed by the Chairman of the Soviet of Nationalities of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet Avgust Voss. The sides stated during the talk that strengthening Soviet-Italian inter-parliamentary ties contributed towards developing Soviet-Italian relations, promoting peace and international cooperation.

Meets With Gromyko

[Text] Moscow March 24 TASS -- Andrey Gromyko, member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, president of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet, today received in the Kremlin Nilde Jotti, president of Italy's Chamber of Deputies. Nilde Jotti was an associate of Palmiro Togliatti and his wife. Member of the leadership of the Italian Communist Party, Nilde Jotti, in 1979, was elected president of the Chamber of Deputies, the first Italian woman to be elected to this post. Now she enjoys great influence in the political circles and popularity among Italy's population.

Some problems of the world situation, as well as prospects of the development of bilateral relations between the Soviet Union and Italy, also along the parliamentary lines, were discussed during the conversation which has passed in a friendly atmosphere. Andrey Gromyko dwelt on the programme of creating a comprehenesive system of international security advanced by the 27th CPSU Congress, on the Soviet Union's struggle for the complete elimination of nuclear weapons by the end of the current century, for the prevention of an arms race in outer space and its termination on earth. He emphasized the importance of the proposals contained in the statement of January 15 of this year by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

A considerable part of the new Soviet initiatives is addressed directly to Europe. They are aimed at the development of a European process to establish broad peaceful cooperation in Europe.

The Land of Soviets strongly declares for ridding Europe of nuclear weapons, is prepared to eliminate shortly all its medium-range missiles in Europe, both ballistic and cruise ones, if the same is done in Europe by the United States. This will be an initial step toward ridding Europe of nuclear weapons.

Nilde Jotti's attention was drawn to the address of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet to the United States Congress on the issue of terminating nuclear tests. Simultaneous non-resumption of such tests both by the USSR and the USA would promote the improvement of the world's political climate. Deplorably, there are various reservations that make it impossible even to get down to a negotiating table. The obvious unwillingness to discuss topical matters is thus shown. But the attempts to achieve the military superiority at which the U.S. "star wars" programme is aimed are dangerous and prospectless. The Soviet Union will not tolerate the disruption of the strategic nuclear-missile parity.

Concern has been expressed over the involvement of some West European states, Italy among them, in the implementation of the U.S. "star wars" plans. The need was also emphasized to keep from any steps that lead to shipping up the arms race. Nilde Jotti noted the intense interest evoked in Italy by the Soviet initiatives aimed at lessening war danger. She positively assessed them, on her part, and declared in favour of limitation and reduction, which would meet the interests of all countries and peoples. Both sides expressed the conviction of the need for increasing the efforts of political, public and business circles of the world toward the improvement of the international situation, confidence-building. The participants in the conversation also confirmed the readiness of both sides to continue the Soviet-Italian dialogue and widen fruitful cooperation between them.

Confers With Gorbachev

USSR PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION MEETS MUBARAK

LD241158 Moscow TASS in English 1120 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo March 24 TASS -- President Husni Mubarak of Egypt received a visiting Soviet parliamentary delegation led by Pavel Gilashvili, vice-president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. The head of the Soviet delegation handed over to the Egyptian president a message from the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. expressing the desire of the Soviet Union to promote and develop relations with the Arab Republic of Egypt on the basis of the principles of respect and non-intervention in the internal affairs of each other.

During the conversation that passed in a friendly atmosphere, Husni Mubarak asked the delegation to inform the Soviet leadership, Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Andrey Gromyko, president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., personally that the Arab Republic of Egypt sincerely wanted the development of good relations with the U.S.S.R.

Although there were difficult times in Soviet-Egyptian relations in the past, the president said, the people of Egypt fondly remember our friendship. The U.S.S.R. rendered valuable assistance to us, and we shall never forget that. I reaffirm this on behalf of the Egyptian people. The Aswan water power project will always be a symbol of that friendship. The High Aswan Dam precluded floods and saved Egypt from famine caused by the drought in Africa in the past six years.

The president then informed the delegation about Egypt's economic and social development plans for the coming years. Taking part in the conversation were members of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet delegation, deputies Sergey Losev, Anatoliy Majorets, Nikolay Popov, Janikul Yusupov, and Aleksandr Belonogov, ambassador of the U.S.S.R. to Egypt. Present from the Egyptian side were Rif'at al-Mahjub, speaker of the People's Assembly of Egypt, Muhammad Ahmad 'Abdallah, chairman of the foreign relations commission of the Egyptian parliament, and Usamah al-Baz, head of the Political Office of the President.

Talk With Prime Minister, Others

[Text] Cairo March 24 TASS -- A delegation of the USSR Supreme Soviet headed by Vice President of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet Pavel Gilashvili, on an official visit here, met today with Prime Minister of Arab Republic of Egypt 'Ali Lutfi, with deputies of the prime minister, with Agriculture Minister of the Arab Republic of Egypt Yusuf Wali who is general secretary of the ruling National Democratic Party of the country and with Foreign Minister 'Ismat 'Abd al-Majid.

Yusuf Wali noted that the Egyptian people appreciated the good and was striving for the restoration of traditional friendship that had earlier linked the two countries. He declared for the resumption of contacts and exchange of visits at different levels and in various spheres. The minister expressed the hope for the widening of commercial and technological ties between the USSR and Egypt. He noted the interest in cooperation with the Soviet Union in developing new lands in Egypt.

Prime Minister of the Arab Republic of Egypt 'Ali Lutfi declared that Egypt adheres to to the principles of non-alignment, peaceful coexistence and non-interference in the affairs of other countries. Foreign Minister 'Abd al-Majid confirmed Egypt's striving to consolidate relations with the USSR on a basis of mutual respect and mutual interests.

PRAVDA Publishes Speeches by Congress Delegates

CSSR's Gustav Husak

PM281603 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Feb 86
Second Edition p 6

["Speech by Gustav Husak, General Secretary of the CPCZ Central Committee and CSSR President" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at the 26 February afternoon session of the 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Esteemed Comrade Gorbachev, esteemed comrades, dear Soviet friends. I am sincerely glad that I can hand over comradely greetings of the CPCZ [Czechoslovak Communist Party], of all working people of our country to you, delegates to the 27th CPSU Congress, Soviet Communists, fraternal Soviet peoples with whom we are linked with ties of profound friendship and indestructible solidarity. (applause)

The entire preparation of your congress, its creative atmosphere, and its important program documents setting out bold new tasks in home and foreign policy also meets with exceptional interest and reaction in our country. We have listened with deep interest to the report of the CPSU Central Committee delivered by its general secretary, Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev. We see in it a document of great theoretical and political importance. It generalizes the rich experience of the CPSU and profoundly substantiates the course toward accelerating the socioeconomic development and achieving a radical breakthrough in the most varied spheres of Soviet society. It opens new prospects in the fight for peace and progress in the world.

It significantly enriches the theory and practice of socialist construction with its principled Marxist-Leninist analysis and creative approach to the demands of the new stage of development. It is evidence of the fact that Soviet Communists are properly implementing the work which began with the Great October Socialist Revolution, that they creatively develop the bequest of Great Lenin and honorably fulfill their vanguard role in the international revolutionary movement. (applause)

We sincerely congratulate you on the historical achievements which the nations of the USSR scored under the leadership of the CPSU in the struggle for the flourishing of their homeland and for a better life of the working man. (applause)

We are convinced that implementation of the great goals which you are setting out will lead to a further growth in the international authority of the USSR and to a further increase in the influence of the ideas of Marxism-Leninism and reinforcement of the positions of socialism in the world. (applause)

Dear comrades. Your congress is taking place at a time when mankind finds itself at the crossroads of fate. It has enormous importance for its future that the Leninist peace policy of the USSR provides realistic ways out for securing international security, for total and general disarmament.

The nations have been given new hope by the program for the elimination of nuclear weapons, which would make it possible to enter the third millennium without fear of a nuclear catastrophe. The Soviet Union's proposals and its decisive foreign policy steps show what needs to be done to tackle the cardinal problems of today's world. They are imbued with a deeply humanistic spirit and with realization of the great responsibility for preserving life on our planet. For all progressive, peace-loving, and realistically thinking people they are a great boon in the struggle to establish lasting peace. These people rightly expect the United States to reexamine its arms race and space militarization programs and, in conjunction with its allies, to adopt a constructive approach to the burning issues of the present day.

The Czechoslovak people, who have lived through many difficult ordeals throughout their history, fully understand the value of peace. That is why they fully endorse the Soviet peace initiatives, which they see as the main way of ensuring a peaceful future. (applause) We will continue to take an active part in the common struggle to avert the threat of nuclear war and to restore the internaitonal situation on to the path of detente. In the spirit of the principles of peaceful coexistence between states with different social systems, we will promote equal and mutually advantageous cooperation with all states.

Comrades, preparations are under way in the CSSR for the 17th CPCZ Congress. At that congress we will address important issues of the further development of our advanced socialist society and of speeding up the rate of its socioeconomic development. We are following your proceedings with immense interest; we are drawing inspiration and experience from your congress for our own future work. At the approach of its 17th congress, the CPCZ is firm and united; it is closely linked with the people; it has a good record and good prospects. Despite various stumbling-blocks and difficulties we have managed — thanks to the principled policy of the party and the devoted work of the people — to score important successes in the development of the economy and in improving the life of the people. We have managed to bring about a stable upward trend in our socialist society, and to create favorable conditions for its further progress.

A feature of the preparations for the 17th CPCZ Congress is the gathering momentum in an atmosphere of growing activeness of the party and the people, of an exacting and critical approach to our achievements and our future tasks, and of energetic efforts to bring our activity in line with the demands of the new stage. Further development of Socialist Czechoslovakia is consistently linked with increased cooperation with the Soviet Union and the other fraternal countries, based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism. Our experience shows that the more difficult the tasks we have to tackle, the more necessary it is to further enrich the form and content of this cooperation. We fully support the speeding up of the process of international socialist integration, and the implementation of the comprehensive program of scientific and technical progress of the CEMA member-states up to the year 2000.

Comrades, we consider Czechoslovak-Soviet friendship and alliance as a great gain of our people and one of the most important results of the struggle which has been waged by our party since its birth 65 years ago. We see this as an irreplaceable factor in the security and peaceful development of our country, and an important prerequisite for the successful development of our socialist society. (applause)

The CPCZ and our working people will continue to exert every effort to ensure that fraternal relations between our communist parties and between the peoples of our countries is consolidated even further. I wish Communists and all the Soviet people great successes in implementing the conclusions of the 27th congress, in their efforts for the prosperity of their Soviet homeland, and in the common struggle for peace, socialism, and social progress. (applause)

May Czechoslovak-Soviet friendship grow stronger! May all-round cooperation between the communist parties and peoples of our fraternal countries grow deeper! Thank you for your attention. (prolonged applause, all rise)

Haitian CP's Theodore

PM061033 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Mar 86 Second Edition p 10

["Speech by Comrade Rene Theodore, Secretary General of the United Haitian Communist Party Central Committee" (PRAVDA headline); date and place not given]

[Text] Dear comrades!

The 27th CPSU Congress is an event of world significance attracting the attention of all progressive mankind. The Soviet society's plans and achievements and its consistent policy of peace and international solidarity have always elicited the peoples' intent interest, ever since the victory of the Great October Socialist Revolution.

The role of the Soviet Union and the socialist community as a factor curbing the destructive madness inherent in imperialism is particularly great today, when the Reagan administration is making doomed, but nonetheless dangerous attempts to achieve absolute military superiority by implementing the "star wars" program, when it is extending interference in the peoples' internal affairs right down to direct intervention, and when, through its fault, international tension has reached a high level of intensity. In this situation mankind's hopes of survival are linked with the USSR's peace-loving policy, which is helping all the world's honest people become still more profoundly aware of socialism's beneficial impact on the peoples' destinies.

But many millions of people in the countries where imperialism rules are still imprisoned by the fabrications of the mass media controlled by reactionary forces. They still do not realize the acuteness of modern problems or the danger hanging over their lives. One of the reasons for this ignorance is the extreme backwardness and poverty created by modern capitalist exploitation.

The documents submitted to the 27th CPSU Congress carry within themselves a charge of the revolution's great humanism, which is manifested at all stages of the revolution and in all undertakings. Soviet society ensures the steady growth of the people's well-being. At the same time, as pointed out in Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's report, in the CPSU's program documents, and in CEMA decisions, the principles and directions of the USSR's economic, scientific, technical, and cultural cooperation in the international arena are laying the foundations of new, just international relations which open up the path to progress and genuine national independence before the peoples of developing countries.

These factors of modern world development are important for Haiti also. Our people, who throughout their history have remained the victim of colonialism, imperialism, slavery, and refined methods of financial pressure and robbery, need just international relations based on solidarity and mutual advantage, and a new international economic order, about which so much is now being said. However, only the socialist countries are seeking to establish such relations with "Third World" states. Where imperialism has succeeded in imposing its one-man partnership on the peoples — as was the case, in particular, in Haiti — the working people are subjected to cruel exploitation and live in poverty, under the yoke of antipopular dictatorships. This is why we believe that any progressive project meeting the people's requirements must without fail follow the new principles of international relations, which can put an end to imperialist dependence.

The people's masses of Haiti have won a very important victory in the struggle against dictatorship by overthrowing the Duvalier dynasty which had oppressed them for 29 years with the support of U.S. imperialism. The Haitian people's democratic aspirations are directed toward the struggle to establish new forms of state structure, to ensure that the people control political decisions at all levels, and to advance new socioeconomic demands ensuring Haiti's progressive development. The present situation promotes the rapid growth of the people's political maturity. But, at the same time, it has galvanized the actions of internal reaction and U.S. imperialism. Their incessant intrigues are aimed at diverting the people from their valid political demands; attempts are being made to resurrect the apparatus of repression and to reduce to naught the process of democratization in Haiti. Nevertheless, our people, strengthening their cohesion and organization, are fully resolved to rebuff any intrigues of imperialism and its minions. We know that in this struggle we can count on broad international solidarity and on the support of the peoples who have hailed our victory over the Duvalier dictatorship.

We express gratitude to the Soviet people, who at once displayed warm solidarity with the Haitian people and shared with us their joy in connection with Duvalier's overthrow. We hope for and have profound faith in the possibility of our society's democratic renewal and revolutionary development. We rate highly the fraternal relations between the CPSU and our party which have taken shape over the decades of our struggle against the terrorist dictatorship. Therefore, we believe that the Haitian people's victory is our common victory, as well as the victory of all progressive mankind.

We wish the 27th CPSU Congress fruitful work and the entire party successes in carrying out the impressive tasks outlined, ensuring the Soviet people's greater well-being, and serving the aims of strengthening peace and friendship among the peoples.

Long live the 27th CPSU Congress! (prolonged applause)

JCP Chairman Kaneko

PM071839 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 Second Edition p 9

["Speech by Comrade Mitsuhiro Kaneko (Chairman of the Japan Communist Party Central Committee Secretariat") (PRAVDA headline);delivered at the 4 March morning session of the 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Dear comrades!

On behalf of the Japan Communist Party [JCP] Central Committee I convey congratulations and express feelings of solidarity to the delegates to the 27th CPSU Congress and all members of your party and the Soviet people. (applause)

We wish the congress of your party great successes in the speediest implementation of the important international tasks of preventing nuclear war and eliminating nuclear weapons for the sake of peace throughout the world and in the acceleration of socioeconomic development and the further improvement of the Soviet people's living standard. (applause)

In the present situation, when, as a result of the nuclear arms race begun after World War II, there has been an unprecedented increase in the nuclear danger, when man's very existence has been imperiled, there is no more urgent task in world politics and in the peoples' movement for peace than the prevention of nuclear war and the abolition of nuclear weapons. On this plane very important significance attaches to the joint statement adopted as a result of the summit talks between the JCP and the CPSU in December 1984. It explicitly defined this task as "urgent and vitally important for mankind, central in the antinuclear, antimilitary movement, and in all world politics" and emphasized the need to promote it "to the fore in international politics both in the United Nations and at bilateral talks and other international forums...and to consistently seek its solution."

Our party welcomed the statement by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, who proposed that the United States and other nuclear powers totally eliminate nuclear weapons. Of course, the 15-year period for eliminating nuclear weapons could be reduced by mobilizing public opinion and most speedily achieving a political accord between states. There can also be different opinions with respect to the specific program put forward in this statement for measures preceding the elimination of nuclear weapons. But epoch-making importance attaches to the fact that in M.S. Gorbachev's statement he puts forward the elimination of nuclear weapons as a task for talks between the nuclear powers and thereby, puts it on the specific agenda of world politics. We assess this proposal as a manifestation of the spirit of the joint statement of the JCP and CPSU. On 28 January Conrade K. Miyamoto, the chairman of our party's Central Committee, sent U.S. President Reagan a letter. In the letter, noting that the President had "welcomed" M.S. Gorbachev's statement and had in the past repeatedly expressed hopes and plans to eliminate nuclear weapons, Comrade Miyamoto urged Reagan to turn from words to deeds right now when favorable opportunities have arisen for this. But in his 24 February statement, Reagan, although he mentions the elimination of nuclear weapons, in fact relegates this task to the indefinite future, putting forward various "preliminary conditions." Our party has sharply criticized this position.

In the present new situation we believe it is extremely important to achieve a specific political accord between the nuclear powers, especially the United States and the USSR, on the complete prohibition and elimination of nuclear weapons. The earlier such an accord is achieved, the shorter the time taken to eliminate nuclear weapons could be. An opportunity would then appear for a new approach toward a positive accord on important questions, including the prevention of the militarization of space. The peoples' movement for peace and the mobilization of public opinion are decisive forces promoting the elimination of nuclear weapons. Signatures in 145 countries and over 100 international organizations have already been collected to the "appeal from Hisroshima and Nagasaki" for the prevention of nuclear wear and the elimination of nuclear weapons published last year: In Japan it has been signed by over 17.04 million people.

The JCP, as the party of the only country in the world to have been subjected to atomic bomb attacks, will continue to make maximum efforts to rally people, organizations, and political parties of the whole world coming out for the prevention of nuclear war and the elimination of all types of nuclear armaments into the broadest international antinuclear united front in order to isolate the forces which cling to nuclear weapons. (applause)

Our party attaches great importance to the defense of the right of national self-determination, defining it as a central task of international solidarity and a very major prerequisite for peace throughout the world. Our party firmly adheres to the principled position whereby the violation of the right to national self-determination by any forces on any pretext is impermissible.

Comrades! The situation in Japan is such that under the conditions of the consolidation and dangerous development of the Japanese-U.S. military alliance which subordinates Japan to the United States, the government of the Liberal Democratic Party [LDP] is stepping up the offensive on the working people's lives and democratic rights, is accelerating the arms race and the country's militarization, and is becoming increasingly deeply involved in the Reagan administration's nuclear war strategy. Our party, in launching the movement for our country's genuine independence, for peace, democracy, and the improvement of the people's living standard, is urging the broad strata of Japan's population to struggle to remove the LDP government, which is favorably inclined to nuclear weapons, and to create a non-nuclear [neyadernoye] government. Today over half the Japanese population lives on territory which the local organs of power have proclaimed to be nuclear-free. Among the opposition parties, except for the JCP, there is a dominant tendency to avoid direct confrontation with the LDP's antipopular policy, to approve the Japanese-U.S. military alliance, and to seek ways to take part in the government on the basis of a coalition with the LDP. In this situation the contradiction between the LDP's policy and the people's interests is increasingly expanding. The JCP is seeking to renew state policy, creating genuine unity among the progressive forces; we are fully determined to achieve new successes and to repel any reactionary offensive by U.S. imperialism and Japanese monopoly capital. (applause)

Dear comrades! Our party warmly wishes the further development of relations with the CPSU, proceeding from the principles of autonomy, equal rights, and noninterference in each other's internal affairs, and particularly it wants to advance cooperation in the struggle to prevent nuclear war and eliminate nuclear weapons on the basis of the JCP and CPSU joint statement. (applause)

I thank you for your attention. (prolonged applause — all rise)

Syrian Ba'th Party's Al-Ahmar

PM061309 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 5 Mar 86 Second Edition p 8

["Speech by Comrade 'Abdallah al-Ahmar, Deputy General Secretary of the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party of Syria" (PRAVDA headline); delivered at 4 March morning session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Dear Comrade Gorbachev! Esteemed comrade delegates to the congress! We thank you for the invitation from your friendly party to take part in the work of the 27th CPSU Congress and for the opportunity to speak from this lofty platform and convey to you and through you to all Soviet Communists and the fraternal Soviet people, on the instructions of Comrade Hafiz al-Asad, general secretary of the Ba'th Party, warm greetings from the Syrian Arab people and our party, and to sincerely wish your congress success in resolving the questions on the agenda. (applause).

Our party values highly the support given to us by the CPSU in the cause of implementing socioeconomic transformations along the path to socialism. We value highly the CPSU's support for the Arabs' just struggle for the liberation of the occupied Arab territories and the implementation of the inalienable national rights of the Arab people of Palestine, in particular their rights to return home, to self-determination, and to the creation of their own state.

Dear comrades! The peoples of the world are following with tremendous attention the course of your congress, whose decisions will act as a powerful stimulus to further progress along the path of developed socialism. They will give all the peoples firm support in their struggle to resolve the tasks of national liberation, social progress, and socialist building. This is confirmed by the documents submitted to the congress, which speak of the need to strengthen the cohesion of the socialist countries and countries of national liberation and the need for unity of the international liberation and workers movement.

The congress decisions will give new impetus to the struggle of the forces of liberation, progress, and socialism to strengthen universal peace and security and to step up the rebuttal of U.S. imperialism's adventurist policy aimed at destabilizing international security, escalating the arms race on earth, and taking it into space. This is the aim of the peace proposals put forward by the Soviet Union recently, including Comrade Gorbachev's latest initiative which calls for the gradual reduction of nuclear arms and their subsequent complete destruction.

Dear comrades and friends! The relations of friendship and cooperation which link our countries and parties are developing along an ascending line. The Treaty on Friendship and Cooperation between the Syrian Arab Republic and the Soviet Union was a qualitatively new stage, which accords with the aspirations and desires of both peoples and parties as they seek to strengthen the friendship and deepen the cooperation between the two countries in all spheres.

Dear comrades and friends! Under the leadership of the Ba'th Party and its General Secretary Comrade Hafiz al-Asad, president of the republic, our people have achieved important successes along the path of building a socialist society on the basis of the decisions of our party's congresses. We have achieved this despite all the difficulties which were and are in our path. The foundations of Arab Syria's national progressive course have strengthened still further. We direct our efforts toward achieving the broadest solidarity among Arab countries in the struggle against the aggression of Israel and those who support it; we fight for just and lasting peace in our region; and we advocate Arab unity, which will strengthen the Arabs' might and consolidate their independence.

Syria reaffirms its solidarity with the peoples' struggle against imperialism and exploitation. It supports the struggle of the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America against imperialism and racism, proceeding on the basis of a deep faith in the historic and just nature of this cause for all the world's peoples.

Comrades! Syria's role and prestige have increased still further and taken on still greater significance thanks to its principled policy directed against imperialism and Zionism and thanks to the cohesion of the working people's masses and its people within the framework of the National Progressive Front and the people's democratic system. All this increased the durability of Syria's positions and strengthened its defense might and steadfastness in the face of the plans of U.S.-Israeli aggression, plans aimed at making the Arabs capitulate by means of imposing separate plans and decisions on them, which they have tried to implement with the help of the Camp David deal, the 17 May 1983 agreement in Lebanon, and the Amman agreement. Relying on the "strategic alliance" with the United States, Israel continues to occupy the territory of Southern Lebanon and pursue a course of organized state terrorism in relation to the Palestinians and Lebanese. The Israeli policy of state terrorism was manifested, in particular, in the act of air piracy perpetrated by the Israeli Air Force against a Libyan civil aircraft. This act was no chance episode on the part of Israel, which pursues a policy of racism, terror, expansion, and aggression. At the same time, the United States pursues an aggressive policy of threats and provocations against Syria and Libya.

Aggressive actions by the United States and Israel will not make Syria and the Arab nation give up the resolute struggle against these criminal plots. We will continue to support the people of Lebanon in their struggle to liberate their territory from the Israeli occupiers and achieve national consensus on the basis of the implementation of the Damascus agreement, which is the sole basis for a truly national solution to that fraternal country's problems. We will continue to support the struggle of the Arab people of Palestine for the implementation of their legitimate rights and the rebuttal of the course of capitulation. We will continue the struggle to strengthen Arab steadfastness, strengthening relations of cooperation with all the progressive Arab states, forces, and organizations.

Comrades! The attainment of a just and lasting peace in our region is the main aim of the struggle we are now waging. The only condition for such a peace is the attainment of strategic equilibrium between our country and Israel. The convening of an international conference under UN auspices with the participation of all interested parties, including the PLO, and with the active participation of the two great powers — that is the most acceptable path to peace.

Esteemed comrades! Permit me once again to greet you and your great Leninist party, the creator of the first socialist state of our era, and your great people. I greet the people who overcome difficulties for the sake of strengthening security and peace throughout the world, for the sake of peaceful coexistence between peoples and states and the just cause of progress and development. (applause).

Long live the friendship between the Arab Socialist Ba'th Party and the CPSU! (applause].

Long live the friendship between the Syrian Arab Republic and the Soviet Union! (applause].

May the struggle for peace and socialism throughout the world strengthen! (prolonged applause — all stand)

Syrian CP's Khalid Bakdash

PM071429 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 Second Edition p 6

["Speech by Comrade Khalid Bakdash, General Secretary of the Syrian Communist Party Central Committee" (PRAVDA headline) delivered at 4 March afternoon session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Dear comrades!

On behalf of the Syrian Communist Party Central Committee; on behalf of thousands of Communists, their friends and sympathizers; on behalf of Syria's workers, working people, peasants, and revolutionary intelligentsia; on behalf of all our beautiful motherland's honest and worthy people, we convey to your party's 27th congress and, through it, to all Soviet Communists and the entire great Soviet people most sincere greetings and cordial fraternal and comradely combat wishes for further successes in all spheres of life for the good of all mankind. (applause)

Every congress of the CPSU — the great Lenin's party — opens up new prospects not only for the Soviet people,ut also for all progressive mankind.

Your 27th congress is a historic congress, a congress of peace in the true sense of the word, a congress of struggle for a planet without wars and without weapons, for the right to life for all the world's peoples, a congress in the name of human rights in the broadest context, a congress in the name of the right of all the world's peoples to independence, freedom, and security! (applause) The CPSU Central Committee Political Report delivered by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorabchev made a highly principled analysis of all these questions on the basis of Marxist-Leninist science and opened up extensive prospects for solving all the political and social problems facing mankind.

The program proclaimed by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev on 15 January 1986 to prevent the militarization of space and reduce nuclear arms in three stages, with their total elimination by the year 2000, has profoundly excited people on all continents, for it is an entirely realistic and humane program. It has thrown the ranks of imperialists and warmongers into disarray and aroused a feeling of satisfaction among the broad people's masses throughout the world.

The new edition of your party's program is, above all, a program for strengthening the economic potential and the defense capability of the Soviet Union, the world's first socialist state, whose might is the greatest guarantee of peace and the independence of the planet's peoples. At the same time, it is the greatest document in mankind's history, asserting human rights — above all, the right to life, the right to work, to leisure, and education, to participation in the running of state affairs, to enjoyment of the benefits of true democracy, and so forth. They are not just proclaimed, but are also backed up by corresponding guarantees and specific measures ensuring that all Soviet citizens enjoy such rights in practice.

The new edition of the program is also an important theoretical document serving to further develop Marxism-Leninism, enriching the world revolutionary movement with new conclusions with regard to the conditions of the contemporary international situation and revealing the advantages of socialism still more clearly. We see how the positions of the Soviet Union and the entire socialist community are strengthening in the peaceful competition between the two world social systems and how the foundations are being laid for a new rise in the living and spiritual standards of the masses of the Soviet people and of all their fraternal nations and ethnic groups united around their glorious party — the vanguard of all progressive mankind. (applause)

Comrades! All Syria — its people and Army, its National Progressive Front, in which the Communist Party participates together with the Ba'th Party and other progressive parties — the Syrian Government, which includes two communist ministers, and the Syrian Parliament, where there are eight Communists, support the Soviet peace initiatives, above all on preventing the arms race from being transferred to space, ending it on earth, and eliminating nuclear weapons and other types of weapons of mass destruction — initiatives aimed at preventing mankind's destruction in a devastating nuclear war. (applause)

The Arab national liberation movement is the target of a broad offensive by U.S. imperialism and its strategic ally -- Zionist Israel. Here are just a few facts: the concentration of U.S. naval ships off Libya's coast; the seizure of a Libyan civilian aircraft with the help of Israeli fighters, and later, Washington's veto in the Security Council which prevented that shameful crime from being condemned; constant threats against Syria; and the continuing aggression against cities and villages in Southern Lebanon. All this is used by U.S. imperialism in conjunction with the Zionist regime in an attempt to establish its absolute military, economic, and political hegemony in our region.

However, the U.S.-Israeli policy is suffering failure after failure, as confirmed by the enforced departure of the NATO troops from Lebanon, the cancelation of the agreement of 17 May 1983, the fall of the corrupt Numaryi regime in Sudan, and the wrecking of the Amman agreement aimed at concluding a separate deal with Israel and depriving the Arab Palestinian people of the right to self-determination and to establish their own independent national state. The Syrian Communist Party together with all our country's progressive forces fully supports the Soviet Union's proposal to convene an international conference with the participation of all interested sides, including the PLO — the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian Arab people — in order to attain a peaceful settlement of the Middle East crisis and the establishment of lasting peace in the region.

The people's masses and the Arab progressive national forces are continuing to resist the U.S.-Israeli plans. Syria plays a significant role here, being in the vanguard of the Arab national liberation movement. Our country's paramount slogan proclaims: "The people of Syria will never kneel!"

Our party takes the firm stand of supporting Syria's anti-imperialist national course, which is founded on the strengthening of relations of friendship and cooperation with the great, friendly Soviet Union — our great friend! These relations have become a firmly established tradition in the history of modern Syria. (applause)

While adhering unswervingly to this patriotic stand, at the same time our party is not ceasing the struggle in the social sphere — in defense of the state sector of the national economy, for the preservation and development of the socioeconomic transformations implemented in Syria, and for the demands being advanced by the people. Workers, peasants, and all employed in physical and mental labor demand that the output of national industry be protected from competition from international monopolies and oppose the parasitic and bureaucratic bourgeoisie, which is robbing both the people and the state and bears the chief responsibility for the unrestrained rise in the cost of living, which is hitting the living standards of the masses of the working people.

We are confident, comrades, that our party will be equal tothe patriotic, social, and internationalist tasks facing it, for in all its activity it unswervingly follows the principles of Marxism-Leninism, proletarian internationalism, and eternal friendship with the CPSU — the great Lenin's party! (applause)

Long live the CPSU, the great Lenin's party! (applause)

Long live the great Soviet people -- the creator of the first socialist state in the history of mankind! (applause)

Long live the struggle of the peoples of Nicaragua, Afghanistan, and the Arab East against the aggression of imperialism and for peace throughout the world! (applause)

Long live eternal Soviet-Syrian and Soviet-Arab friendship! (applause)

Long live proletarian internationalism! (prolonged applause, all rise)

WFTU's Chairman Gaspar

PM061635 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86
Second Edition p 6

["Speech by Comrade Sandor Gaspar, WFTU Chairman" (PRAVDA headline) delivered a 4 March afternoon session of 27th CPSU Congress]

[Text] Esteemed comrade delegates!

It is a joy and honor for us to participate in the work of the 27th CPSU Congress, and to represent here the WFTU.

Your invitation reflects the fact that Soviet Communists and Lenin's party pay great attention to the trade union movement. The CPSU congresses have always attracted great attention and have generated interest on the part of the world trade union movement. This is natural and understandable. The Great October Socialist Revolution and its gains became a new stimulus in the revolutionary trade union movement's struggle against exploitation and for social progress. The CPSU congress also imparts strength and confidence to the movement of the working people's masses and to the trade unions today when the deepening of the capitalist world's economic crisis is continuing and when its consequences are causing the conditions of life and labor to deteriorate.

As was also noted in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report, capitalists throughout the world have launched an offensive against the achievements of the working people and against trade union rights which were won in difficult and lengthy battles. However, capital's field of activity is shrinking more and more. Today it no longer has the opportunities to emerge from the crisis that it had at its disposal in the early thirties. The existence of the Soviet Union and of the socialist countries, the decay of the colonial system, the growing determination and militancy of the mass movements, and the activity of the trade unions are those very important factors which are, to a considerable degree, limiting capital's room to maneuver.

The working class and the trade unions reject the theories of bourgeois economists and the practice of the capitalist countries' governments aimed at transferring to the shoulders of the working people the entire burden of surmounting the crisis, having let economic processes drift.

The trade unions reject the capitalists' antihuman assertions that the arms race is exerting a favorable influence on employment. The trade unions are combating this theory. People engaged in mental and physical labor and the trade unions, irrespective of which current they belong to, are well aware that when the guns thunder, not only do the muses fall silent, but all human activity lose its meaning. The trade unions therefore welcome and support the Soviet proposals aimed at ensuring peace and security and which set as an objective the definitive exclusion of the danger of nuclear war from the life of mankind.

The untenability of the proclaimed theories about a so-called "economic miracle" in the capitalist world has become patently obvious; and we have witnessed the collapse of the assertions that the time of class battles has vanished into the past because, allegedly, the nature of capital has changed and become more democratic and the trade unions, it is claimed, can solve all issues in the framework of relations of partnership. On the contrary! Day after day life shows that the nature of capital has not changed, the time of class battles has not receded into the past, and the contradiction between capital and labor remains irreconcilable.

The task of the 11th World Congress of Trade Unions which is being convened in September this year consists of planning the activity of the trade unions — proceeding from the specific contemporary situation — elaborating their orientation and proposals in such a way that the trade unions may be able to effectively oppose capital's attacks against the working people's rights and interests. Uniting 206 million working people, the trade unions that make up the WFTU are a mighty force in the ever-growing camp of strugglers against exploitation and for social progress. The WFTU is not the only international trade union center, but it is the only organization which includes within its ranks trade unions of the socialist, developing, and developed capitalist countries. We are a class organization having a clear orientation acceptable to everyone. Our loyalty to the ideas of international solidarity of the working people has won the respect and recognition of those trade unions and their members which do not belong to our federation.

One of the distinctive features of the contemporary international trade union movement — its multifaceted nature — is a historic fact. In the future the WFTU intends to proceed along the path of cohesion and is ready to extend a hand to all who are prepared for cooperation.

Another important distinctive feature of the international trade union movement is the quest for new paths: The new situation confronts the trade unions functioning under various conditions, with new tasks; it is changing the forms of their activity; and it requires the application of new methods and means in trade union work.

Trade union organizations operating under conditions where the working class is in power are also finding themselves in a new situation. Social progress, the expansion of democratism, and the further development of the management of economic life are expanding the field of activity of the trade unions and increasing their responsibility. All this is stimulating the trade unions to bold innovation which has been vividly reflected in the work of the 27th CPSU Congress.

Under conditions of socialism, the trade unions have their own purpose, a special role and vocation. With a sense of full responsibility, they are participating in the elaboration of policy and its practical implementation. It must not be forgotten that for the trade unions, as has been noted that the 27th congress, the interests of the working people must always be at the forefront. This is the basic meaning of their activity. And that will also be the case in the future.

Dear comrades! Permit me, in conclusion, to express from this rostrum our appreciation and gratitude to the Soviet trade unions for their contribution to the activity of the WFTU. (applause) We are confident that the Soviet trade unions will continue in the future to be a model of selflessness and a model of solidarity. (prolonged applause, all rise)

PCE's Sanchez Montero

PM071017 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 6 Mar 86 Second Edition p 8

["Speech by Comrade Simon Sanchez Montero, Member of the Executive Committee and Secretariat of the Spanish Communist Party Central Committee" (PRAVDA headline); date and place not given]

[Text] Comrades! On behalf of all party members, the Spanish Communist Party [PCE] Congress wishes for complete successes in discussing and settling the important questions facing it.

The 27th CPSU Congress is taking place at a time when the world is at a parting of two fundamentally different ways. One of them could lead to mankind's destruction as a result of nuclear, bacteriological, and chemical war. This is the path of confrontation between the two great powers, the path of the incessant arms race now beginning a new spiral in connection with Reagan's "star wars" project.

However, there is another path. It could lead to the establishment and strengthening of peace and security on the planet, to the genuine independence and sovereignty of all previously enslaved peoples, to the surmounting of their backwardness and poverty, and to the attainment of a high level of economic, political, social, and cultural development and material well-being. To carry out these aims, it is necessary to place at the service of man and his development the funds being devoured by the arms race, all the achievements of science, and the new production forces being created by the present scientific and technical revolution. The path leads to a developed socialist society, the only society in which production forces can achieve full flowering with an absence of social conflicts — which proves socialism's superiority over capitalism.

This choice of historic significance determines the fact that the struggle for peace and security throughout the world is the most important and urgent task of the present time. Therefore, we welcome the measures being taken by the Soviet Government and the proposals advanced by it, particularly the plan to eliminate all types of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the century, while removing the possibility of reinstating them, and also to reduce conventional types of arms and establish control over them.

We are not in the least surprised that the Reagan administration's reaction to this plan has been expressed in a statement that will continue to implement its own "star wars" project, for Reagan represents the interests of the U.S. military-industrial complex, which came into being on the basis f the arms race and cannot exist without it. But we are convinced that pressure from the peoples, including the American people, who are already experiencing the grave consequences of this race, will in the end lead to complete nuclear disarmament.

These days a political battle is developing for the Spanish which, with no exaggeration, is of historic significance for the Spanish people; its purpose is to ensure that in the referendum scheduled for 12 March — which is to settle the question of whether Spain remains in NATO — a final decision is made to withdraw from that military bloc. The PCE is very energetically and enthusiastically seeking to help our people to acheve that goal.

Withdrawal from NATO would mean a decisive step for Spain in the matter of restoring its full national independence and sovereignty, which are now being infringed upon by the United States, and would make it possible to pursue an independent and sovereign foreign policy of peace and neutrality, a policy of friendship with Arab peoples, primarily with Mediterranean countries, and with all "Third World" peoples, and a policy of increasingly close relations and friendship with the fraternal peoples of Latin America, and to give them assistance in the matter of liberation from U.S. imperialist domination — which at present is impossible in connection with the subordination of Spain's foreign policy to the Reagan administration.

The Spanish people want to carry on close cooperation — both within the framework of EEC organs and by means of joint struggle with all forces of the European working class and democracy — in creating a unified, truly democratic, neutral, and peaceful Europe free from American hegemony; a Europe which could play an important role in the struggle for peace, in liquidating military blocs, and in assisting the "Thirld World" peoples; a Europe traveling the path of socialism and maintaining relations of friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union, the other socialist countries, and also the United States.

The PCE has gone through a very acute crisis. It has experienced a double split and lost a significant proportion of its members. However, as at other episodes in its history, it is emerging from a difficult trial, trying to get back more and more of its former members and to bring new forces into its ranks. The party's doors are open to all comrades who have left it, in order to achieve the unification of Communists on the basis of the PCE, which has always been the foundation of such unity. These comrades can have and defend their own viewpoints within the party's framework on the sole condition that the decisions of leading party organs are respected and fulfilled.

The PCE takes an active part in public mass movements and maintains increasingly close ties with working people, the intelligentsia, cultural workers, women, young people, and the people as a whole. It advocates uniting the various left-wing forces around a common program for the transformation of society with a view to building socialism in Spain by means of developing democracy, and it also displays active solidarity with the peoples waging the struggle against imperialism and for national and social liberation.

We are aware of the mistakes we have made, which were recognized by our party's 11th congress, and we seek to rectify them in the course of our daily work. But for all our spirit of modesty and self-criticism, we confirm once again that a communist party cannot abandon independence and that parties must rectify their mistakes themselves. We resolutely reject the practice of interference, which has disastrous consequences, as experience has repeatedly demonstrated, and must not be employed in the future.

We express our confidence that, as stated in Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's recent speeches, the problems, difficulties, and differences that exist in our movement on individual questions are surmountable and cannot hinder cooperation in the cause of achieving the common goals of peace, democracy, and socialism.

Comrades, the PCE is ready to develop good, fruitful relations of friendship and cooperation with the CPSU in the spirit of mutual respect, we wish your party great successes in implementing thrilling and innovative tasks — which will enable the Soviet Union's peoples to rise to a higher level of activeness, creativity, progress, and well-being and ensure that the world can, after all, live without wars.

Long live the CPSU, the glorious party of Lenin!

Long live socialism and communism! (prolonged applause)

IZVESTIYA Carries Grenada Delegate's Speech

PM101003 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 7 Mar 86 Morning Edition pp 10-11

["Speech by Comrade George Louison, Deputy Chairman of the Maurice Bishop Patriotic Movement (Grenada)" (IZVESTIYA headline) delivered at the 27th CPSU Congress — date and place not given]

[Text] Dear comrades!

Four years ago we were received in your beautiful hero-city as members of a government delegation headed by Maurice Bishop, Grenada's outstanding patriot and national hero, who was paying an official visit to the Soviet Union at the time.

Now, here we are again, in Lenin's great country, on the occasion of the historic 27th CPSU Congress, which has ushered in a qualitatively new stage in the life of your party and country.

Attending congress sessions as guests of your fraternal party, we have arrived at the conviction that the creative spirit, innovation, dynamism, and in-depth Marxist-Leninist analysis contained in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the congress, as well as the sincerity, the serious approach to problems, optimism, and constructive criticism and self-criticism, combined together, will raise the life of Soviet Communists and of the entire multinational Soviet people to a new qualitative level.

The report delivered by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev is not just a brilliant document embodying the collective wisdom and will of the Central Committee: It is a new ideological weapon in the struggle and work of communists, revolutionaries, and fighters for national liberation throughout the world.

We regard the proposal to convene a world congress on problems of economic security as a bold new initiative which orients all peoples toward solving the urgent problem of debts and establishing a just new international economic order.

The persistent and selfless efforts of the entire Soviet peoples, the CPSU, and Comrade M.S. Gorbachev aimed at achieving world peace, detente, and international cooperation have won the sympathies and love of fighters for peace in all parts of the world.

Comrade M.S. Gorbachev's statement of 15 January this year, containing a program for mankind's complete deliverance from nuclear and chemical weapons by the year 2000, has been called a "weapon of peace" in our Caribbean countries.

We believe that, if imperialism wants to compete with socialism, if such competition is to take place, then it is imperialism that must "catch up" with the Soviet Union by responding to its peace initiatives with peaceful proposals and must compete in the struggle for peace.

We assure you, dear comrades, that all patriots in Grenada and the Caribbean countries are sincerely and wholehartedly with you in the struggle for peace, disarmament, and international security.

We have come from a small country with an area of just 344 square km and a population of 100,000. In October 1983 this small and defenseless island felt in full measure what the U.S. military machine is like. U.S. imperialism sent 14,000 soldiers, armed to the teeth, and rained down on our motherland fire from tanks, helicopters, fighters, bombers, and other instruments of death.

For many years the United States had been nurturing villainous plans for a criminal invasion of Grenada. Unfortunately, the actions of traitors, leftists, and splittists led to the killing of the staunch revolutionary Maurice Bishop and many party leaders. U.S. imperialism was not slow to take advantage of the crisis situation and invaded and occupied the country.

U.S. imperialism is now seeking to pursue a policy of neocolonialism in Grenada by imposing economic and political dependence on it and destroying the revolutionary-democratic transformations implemented in the country by the people's government headed by M. Bishop.

Only a few days ago Ronald Reagan visited Grenada in person in an attempt to speed up the implementation of his "neoglobalism" plans for the Caribbean. Today Grenada is portrayed as a model of Reagan's successfully implemented militarist designs.

However, comrades, our party and working people are once again rising to the struggle. Faithful to M. Bishop's memory, we have solemnly sworn to give Grenada back its sovereignty and independence.

Accept our wishes for successes in implementing the complex tasks set in the new edition of the CPSU Program and in the Basic Guidelines for the USSR's economic and social development.

We are profoundly certain that the glorious Leninist party — the party expressing the people's will and existing for the people, the party which created the first socialist state and turned the USSR into a country of developed socialism — will resolutely overcome all difficulties in the way of communist building and raise the Soviet people to a higher level of prosperity

Allow me to convey to you most ardent combat greetings from Grenadian revolutionaries and patriots and most sincere expressions of gratitude for your support and solidarity both in the past and in the present.

We will continue to struggle against U.S. imperialism, which has broken into our home.

We will continue to struggle for the establishment of a new international economic order which will free our countries' economies from imperialist fetters.

Peace, freedom, and socialism — this is our true goal and our guiding star!

M.S. Gorbachev, your outstanding leader, said at the end of his report: "In this way, and in this way alone will we be able to fulfill the great Lenin's behest — to rise higher and move forward with energy and unity of will. History has not allowed us a different destiny. But what a splendid destiny it is, comrades!"

We are confident that you will achieve your lofty aims, dear comrades, and that you will secure a peaceful future; in this struggle we, like all the world's oppressed peoples, are traveling the same path as you.

Long live the CPSU!

Long live the Maurice Bishop Patriotic Movement!

Long live Soviet-Grenadian friendship!

Long live peace and socialism! (prolonged applause)

Ternopol Judge Sentenced for Bribery

AU171539 Kiev PRAVDA UKRAINY in Russian 14 Mar 86 p 4

[Report by M. Fedik, PRAVDA UKRAINY correspondent in Ternopol: "From the Court Hall: A Degradation"]

[Text] The defendant was meticulously trying to find contradictions in the evidence given by the witnesses, to fish out facts moe or less favorable for him.

It was painful to listen to all that and to see that man with his hair neatly done sitting behind a railing separating him from the audience in the court hall, including his own son....

It was a judge who sat in...the dock; no mistake, a man who, until recently, administered the law himself. But he was found guilty of a crime. Who was he, and how could it have happened?

S. Onishchuk grew up in a working peasant family. While in the Army, he was a subunit's Komsomol leader. After his military service he was a worker; through a correspondence course he graduated from a law department to become a judge and, later on, chairman of the Ternopol city court.

His labor biography was ordinary. But it ended in the dock. He himself headed for it, because he once slipped from the path of legality down to the path of temptation and personal advantage. And when legal foundations in human relations are replaced by such shaky grounds, a crash is inevitable, and sooner or later punishment for the crime is unavoidable.

The trial was not easy, both for thsoe administering the law (how deep has a colleague sunk) and for the audience in the hall (after all, it was a judge in the dock). But I am certain that the main feeling of both the judges and the audience was one of satisfaction. Because all are equal before the law in our society. S. F. Onishchuk's failure in his career as a judge has unmasked the morals of spiteful critics.

It was a complete failure, because Onishchuk's official behavior was treason, apostasy, a betrayal to a sacred cause.

...How far can one go to defend one's child from justice. Take A.N. Khimko's case. When her son was brought to trial for profiteering, she rushed to her relatives: "He has to be saved. I will spare nothing." So R10,000 were laid down before S.F. Onishchuk who...did not refuse. And was caught. The judge himself had to face the law. As a result he received his deserved punishment: 13 years of inprisonment under stringent conditions and the confiscation of his personal property. Various terms of punishment were also given to those who gave bribes and who acted as "intermediaries" between the bribe-givers and the bribe-taker.

The trial has confirmed: Justice triumphs without fail.

Goals of Soviet Cultural Foundation Outlined

LD241418 Moscow TASS in English 1054 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 24 TASS — The Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee at its latest regular meeting has supported the initiative by a number of public organizations and people in science and the arts for instituting a Soviet Culture Foundation.

Its goals will incude facilitating a more active involvement of different sections of the population in cultural development and the use of their material possibilities and creative efforts for the further advancement of socialist artistic culture.

"The idea of public funds serving specific purposes is by itself not new," Irina Antonova, director of the Pushkin Fine Arts Museum, told a TASS correspondent. "Suffice it to recall the wide-ranging, politically significant activities of the Soviet Peace Fund. The unions of people in the arts also have foundations of their own, including the literary, musical and artistic ones."

The Soviet Culture Foundation will have broader functions. It is being set up as a public organization. Its charter has already been drafted. The issues related to the foundation's establishment will be put to a countrywide discussion. An organizing committee will also be formed.

The foundation will seek to give material and moral support to fruitful public initiatives for further promoting professional and amateur creative pursuits and other kinds of cultural activities and also to help young talents in the arts.

It will, for example, give all kind of backing for efforts to set up new and provide more and better facilities to existing cultural centers in small towns and in newly-developed areas.

The foundation's board will be active in helping to preserve the national cultural heritage. It will give assistance with the restoration of artistic masterpieces and architectural landmarks.

PRAVDA Readers Claim Anti-Alcohol Move Easing

PM240954 [Editorial Report] Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 20 March in its First Edition publishes on page 6 a 1,300-word "feuilleton" by N. Vorobyev under the headline "A Toast for the 'Thaw.'"

Vorobyev begins by describing a letter written by Muscovite F. Silinskiy to the CPSU gorkom in the city of Goryachiy Klyuch in the Kuban, complaining about incidents of alcohol consumption at the sanatorium where he was staying. According to the author, the letter was passed on to the city soviet, and from there to the city trade administration. The letter sent to Silinskiy in reply was, according to Vorobyev, "signed by V. Chumak, acting chief of the trade administration" and was "naively simple and straightforward." Chumak apparently claimed that the number of alcohol retail outlets had been reduced from 52 to 9, income had fallen by R847,000 in 6 months, and "any further cutback in trade enterprises for sale of wine and vodka products is deemed inexpedient."

The author then speaks of a letter "from seven mothers from the city of Boguchar in Voronezh Oblast" and quotes a statement by L.I. Glukhovskiy, senior engineer in Kishinev's "Mikroprovod" plant, both indicating that the antialcohol campaign seems to be slackening. The lines forming for the purchase of alcoholic drinks, Vorobyev writes, "stretch for three blocks. A gold mine!"

He says that the editorial office no longer receives complaints about drunkards lounging in doorways because "they are handed over to the militia. No matter what, those who enjoy their alcohol do fear the fines."

Vorobyev concludes: "Maybe this is why the urgency of the struggle against alcoholism has been eased off in many places. The main thing, it is claimed, has been done. The network of wine and vodka stores has been cut back, those who enjoy alcohol have been given an impressive warning, and some have been forced to undergo a medical cure. What is left is not so substantial, anyway.

"And the drunkards have perceived this as an indulgence of their behavior. They have started again to organize noisy drinking parties and are proposing toasts to the thaw in the antialcohol campaign."

Alcohol Consumption Declining in Kursk Oblast

LD211643 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1130 GMT 21 Mar 86

[From the "Novosti" newscast]

[Excerpt] Quite a lot of pleasing changes are now taking place in rural areas. Sobriety is becoming the norm of life. Here is what our correspondent relates in this connection from Kursk Oblast:

Of course, not all makers of home-produced spirits have been discovered in Kursk Oblast, and there are still quite a lot of accidents caused by drunk drivers. Statistics confirm that the number of these cases is, however, declining. Drinking of spirits is decreasing and has fallen by almost by 20 percent. Losses of working time in industry have decreased sharply. In Kursk these are one-third lower than the average for the RSFSR. It is well known that it is most difficult to eradicate this evil in rural areas.

Alcohol-Related Accidents Decline Slightly in 1985

LD211806 [Editorial Report] Moscow Television Service at 1600 GMT on 21 March in its "Man and the Law" program presents a 30-minute report devoted entirely to the subject of drunk driving, consisting mainly of excerpts from the trials of two men charged with that crime. One of the men knocked down and killed a pedestrian after having drunk a bottle of vodka at work, and was subsequently sentenced to 10 years imprisonment. A correspondent then visits the motor vehicle depot where the man was employed to investigate accusations of widespread drunkenness there. He receives contradictory answers on the question of drinking during working hours, but all employees interviewed agree that until recently the anti-drink campaign there had been practically nonexistent.

Concluding the program, Professor A.M. Yakovlev, doctor of jurisprudence, states that managers often conceal the truth about the success of anti-alcohol measures in their enterprises, thus making it more difficult to achieve success in this area. He then gives the following figures for alcohol-related road accidents as a proportion of the total:

Latvia, 30 percent; Buryat ASSR, 41 percent; Volgograd Oblast, 39 percent; Kurgan Oblast, 41 percent; Novgorod Oblast, 39 percent; USSR as a whole in 1984, 28.6 percent; USSR as a whole in 1985, 24.6 percent.

Yakovlev notes that the decline over the period 1984-85 is small; but he says that this is merely the beginning of a dramatic improvement.

Yeltsin, Moscow Voters Discuss Shortcomings, Plans

PM200957 Moscow MOSKOVSKAYA PRAVDA in Russian 14 Mar 86 p 1

[Unattributed report: "Meetings With Voters"]

[Text] All Moscow's party organizations and labor collectives are now discussing the 27th CPSU Congress documents. The capital's working people are outlining specific ways of implementing the complex and crucial tasks set by the party. An important role in their solution belongs to the soviets of people's deputies.

Topical problems of the soviets' activity and the need constantly to improve the style and methods of their work were discussed at voters' meetings with the Moscow city soviet candidate deputy for the 774th electoral okrug, B.N. Yeltsin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Moscow CPSU Gorkom, held at the club of the Moscow "Znamya Revolyutsii" machine building plant and in the premises of the Sverdlovskiy Rayon interschool production training combine.

On the eve of the meetings and the day they were held the candidate deputy visited a number of enterprises and organizations on the territory of the electoral okrug and familiarized himself with the work of health, housing and municipal, trade, and public catering institutions. Here and in the shops of the "Znamya Revolyutsii" plant and in Sverdlovskiy Rayon's DEZ-7 [expansion unknown] microrayon, the Muscovites had a frank and interested conversation on problems of improving production and ameliorating people's working, daily living, and leisure conditions. For instance, there was a discussion of questions of organizing educational work at people's places of residence with children and adolescents. To this day the microrayon has failed to create the necessary conditions for this. The voters spoke of housing problems. There are still many communal apartments in the okrug, and capital repair is needed for old houses with replanning, as are the comprehensive provision of services and the ensuring of cleanliness in courtyards and on streets through the efforts not only of the workers of specialized services but also of the residents themselves. Critical remarks were also levelled against the work of trade, consumer and medical services, and transport. The efforts of the soviets of people's deputies should be aimed at eliminating these shortcomings.

Having described the activity of the city party organization and Communists in mobilizing Muscovites to the fulfillment of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of implementing the CPSU course toward the dynamic development of Soviet society, B.N. Yeltsin assured the voters he would justify the lofty trust placed in him.

Solovyev Addresses Leningrad Party Aktiv

LD221851 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1600 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] At a meeting of Leningrad's party organization aktiv today, all Communists and working people of the city and oblast were presented with the tasks of decisively eliminating the factors holding up the development of Leningrad's economy and imparting the necessary dynamism to the economy. The results of the 27th CPSU Congress were discussed, as were the Leningrad party organization's tasks ensuing from the Political Report of the CPSU Central Committee and the congress' decisions. Comrade Solovyev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of the Leningrad party obkom, delivered a report. Concentrating their attention on unresolved questions, the speakers stressed the necessity of radically transforming work style and methods, starting from the most important thing: the attitude toward the plan and the laws of the economic life. It was demanded that the focus be decisively moved from the quantitative to qualitative indices, that there be an expansion of production funds and their renewal be accelerated, that there be maximum resource savings and priority development of the production and social infrastructure. It was also stressed that the tasks set cannot be solved without breaking with stereotyped thinking or without strengthening discipline and cadres' responsibility for perfecting ideological and education work.

Georgian Party Leaders Discuss CPSU Congress

LD221732 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1200 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] A plenum of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Georgia, which took place today in Tbilisi, mapped out a clear program for the fundamental reorganization of organizational and political work and called for accelerating the republic's social and economic development. Participants discussed the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the tasks of the republic's party organization in fulfilling its decisions. The report of Comrade Patiashvili, first secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Georgia, and various speeches stressed that the scale of the tasks put forward by the congress dictate an urgent necessity to encourage initiative and to take bold and innovative approaches in resolving key national economic tasks. Having critically considered a wide range of problems connected with the intensification of production, the participants in the plenum mapped out ways to perfect the planning and administration of cadre policy and to fully use reserves. Proposals were submitted for raising the level of party leadership over the economy, for implementing an active social policy, and for improving ideological work.

Demographic Encyclopedic Dictionary — Moscow, 21 Feb (TASS) — The Moscow publishing house Sovetskaya Entsiklopediya has brought out a Demographical Encylopedic Dictionary [demograficheskiy entsiklopedicheskiy slovar] with information on the numbers of town dwellers and village dwellers, and the longevity of people in the USSR, as well as on how the average size of the family has changed in recent decades and figures on numbers of marriages. The dictionary contains over 1,600 articles and materials of scientific data and information on the population of all the world's countries and censuses and the history of demography. The reference work was produced by scientists and specialists of 35 towns in the USSR including all union republics and autonomous republics. Over 270 authors worked on it including foreign experts in many related fields. Its chief editor, Professor Dmitriy Valentey, doctor of economic sciences, points out that it took 9 years to compile. It also contains articles on theory and methodology and methods and techniques in analyzing demographical processes as well as on sociology, ecology, and the geography of population. Reportage on Academy of Sciences Annual Meeting

Officials on 5-Year Tasks

[TASS report: "Key Role of Science; USSR Academy of Sciences Annual General Meeting"]

[Text] The rapid rates of renewal of the country's national economy demand that science turn resolutely to the requirements of practice, that the arsenal of scientific ideas and developments be constantly supplemented, and that the mechanism for their introduction be improved. Topical problems of science and questions of the effective use of its potential were heard from the congress platform in the speeches of many delegates. This talk of importance to the country was continued in the Moscow State University conference hall where the session of the USSR Academy of Sciences Annual general meeting opened 19 March.

Soviet scientists, Academician A.P. Aleksandrov, president of the USSR Academy of Sciences, said in his introductory speech, followed the work of the 27th CPSU Congress attentively and welcomed the ideas and proposals it put forward as a realistic and authoritative reply to the specific requirements of life and to the challenge of our complex and crucial era.

In the forthcoming 5-year period, the president stressed, Soviet science must increase its contribution to the acceleration of scientific-technical progress, mobilize all the academy's efforts for the purpose, make its relations with sectorial science and industry firmer, and work more actively to create intersectorial scientific-technical complexes.

Academician P.N. Fedoseyev, vice president of the USSR Academy of Sciences, delivered a report entitled "The 27th CPSU Congress on the Tasks of Soviet Science." The congress' historic importance, he said, consists of the fact that it made a major contribution to the theory and practice of scientific communism and the scientific consideration of the processes of world development and the tasks of improving socialist society on the basis of the acceleration of socioeconomic development and scientific-technical progress.

A decisive role in improving socialist society, the speaker stressed, is assigned to economic growth with a consideration for the intensification of the scientific-technical revolution. In this connection the congress stressed the ever-increasing role of science in developing production forces and improving social relations, creating fundamentally new types of equipment and technology, and raising labor productivity. It is characteristic that in the current 5-year plan it is planned to obtain at least two-thirds of the increase in social labor productivity by using the achievements of science and technology. These great tasks, the speaker continued, impose great commitments on Soviet scientists. Great historical experience in developing science in socialist society shows our enormous potential in resolving very large-scale scientific-technical problems. The successes of Soviet scientists and engineers in the broad use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, in the development of outer space, and in a number of other scientific fields have been graphic examples of the opportunities opened up by pooling the advantages of socialism with the achievements of the scientific-technical revolution.

But it must be admitted, P.N. Fedoseyev said, that the impact of scientific-technical progress on the national economy as a whole and on its intensification is as yet inadequate. The 12th 5-Year Plan will be marked by a sharp breakthrough on all salients of the country's economic and social development, and it should also become a turning point in organizing scientific research and building up and making effective use of our scientific potential. The fundamental task of accelerating scientific-technical progress is to strength science's link with production and to create organizational forms for their integration which will make it possible to ensure the precise and rapid passage of scientific ideas from inception to broad practical implementation. It is essential to expand the network of science and production associations and to create intersectorial scientific-technical complexes and scientific and engineering centers for the development and widespread introduction of fundamentally new types of equipment and technology.

The main thing today is to put into operation the factors for intensifying scientific activity itself and to achieve the speediest technological application of new knowledge, to accelerate the process of advance along the chain from fundamental research to applied research and from applied research to experimental design developments and the introduction of new equipment into production.

Considering these tasks, the Academy of Sciences is expanding the network of scientific institutions for the technical sciences. The USSR Academy of Sciences recently formed a department of computerized information processing, hardware, and automation and a whole series of new scientific institutes and branches are being created. Great attention is being paid to the theoretical foundations of machine building and a special department is being created for these problems on the basis of existing scientific institutions and those which are being newly created. Decisions have already been taken on the organization of branches of the Institute of Mechanical Engineering in Gorkiy, Sverdlovsk, Leningrad, and Saratov. This, of course, should in no way constrict the fundamental avenues which are taking shape. What is needed is the sensible combination and interaction of various fields of knowledge in resolving topical problems of science and practice.

Today the party's theoretical thinking is focused on a complex group of problems stemming from the present-day crucial nature of the development of our society and the world as a whole. The multifaceted tasks of accelerating our development and its interconnected aspects — political, economic, scientific-technical, social, cultural and spiritual, and psychological — are in need of further in-depth, all-embracing analysis, P.N. Fedoseyev stressed. The party expects scientists to produce serious philosophical generalizations, substantiated economic and social forecasts, and profound historical research. Of course, social scientists created many valuable books and scientific works in the past 5-year plan. Many subdivisions are still engaged in highly abstract questions and are offering us rather general, superficial opinions and conclusions. The party is now raising in a principled manner the question of social sciences' broad emergence to tackle specific practical needs and requires that social scientists react sensitively to the changes taking place in life, make a profound study of new phenomena, and draw conclusions capable of orienting practice correctly.

The broad study of the problems of man and the human factor in the life of society are a common avenue for all our science, the speaker continued. Without the comprehensive development and sensible application of man's creative powers, with an improvement in the standard of people's qualifications, awareness, and labor and social activeness, the acceleration of socioeconomic development and scientific-technical progress are inconceivable. The Academy of Sciences Presidium has decided to create a coordination council which will unite representatives of different fields of knowledge for the in-depth elaboration of the entire package of questions of the study of man. It is a case of scientists creating a solid theoretical foundation for resolving this important task of communist building and developing a scientific base for forming aware citizens of Soviet society, worthy members of the labor collective, active builders of communism, patriots, and internationalists.

Soviet scientists have launched vigorous scientific and public activity to defend peace both in our country and in the world arena. This activity can and must become far more enterprising and assertive. In recent years scientists have done a lot to reveal the danger which scientists' discoveries could acquire in the hands of militarist forces. It is our duty to show what modern science can give mankind. After all, the fruits of science are not only the possible tornado of devastation and the gloom of death, but also the luminescence of enlightenment, the motive force of social progress, the basis for the flowering of man's creative abilities and talents.

Speaking from the lofty platform, many congress delegates, mentioned the great hopes they pin on science, the speaker said in conclusion. They expect from our scientists discoveries of world importance and practical aid in the mechanization of labor, right up to the improvement of the miner's pneumatic drill. And that is why the main conclusion for us all from the congress decisions is to display more initiative and creative activeness and exactingness toward ourselves and responsibility for the standard of science.

CPSU Central Committee Secretaries M.V. Zimyanin and V.A. Medvedev took part in the work of the general meeting.

The USSR Academy of Sciences annual meeting session is continuing its work.

Robotics, Lasers Discussed

LD201121 Moscow TASS in English 1038 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, MARCH 20 TASS — More than 120 scientific developments have been introduced into the Soviet industry by scientists of the USSR Academy of Sciences over the past five years. That figure has been disclosed by the Chief Scientific Secretary of the Academy Georgiy Skryabin at the academy's general meeting which is in its second day in Moscow. The meeting is summing up the results of scientists' activities over the past five years and discusses prospects of research.

Georgiy Skryabin noted successes of science, primarily in such areas as applied mathematics, computer engineering, nuclear and elementary-particle physics, quantum electronics and robotics.

Robotics systems with elements of artificial intellect, highly efficient lasers, polymer materials with increased strength, high-yield cereals, etc., were mentioned among the works waiting for their practical application.

Though fundamental research remains the main aim of the academy, said Georgiy Skryabin, its possibilities will be increasingly wider used for promoting introduction of scientific accomplishments into practices of the national economy. The academician criticised inactivity of some scientific institutions through the fault of which a number of developments the country needs have not yet been put into practice.

The speaker spoke in detail about scientists' tasks in the context of the requirement, put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress that all branches of the Soviet economy should be fundamentally reconstructed on the basis of the latest accomplishments of science and technology. Its implementation will help double the USSR's production potential in the next 15 years and to almost double the national income.

The meeting of the USSR Academy of Sciences will end on March 21.

Ovchinnikov Comments

LD212319 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 21 Mar 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast; A. Fedorovich report]

[Text] The annual general meeting of the USSR Academy of Sciences ended in Moscow today.

It has already become the tradition to present awards of the USSR Academy of Sciences to scientists in spring. These are gold medals and prizes named after outstanding scientists. Let me remind you that the highest award of the academy is the Lomonosov Gold Medal. In the field of natural sciences these awards for 1986 have been given to the Soviet scientist, Academician Sadovskiy, and to the Mexican scientist, Professor (Aro) Sadovskiy for outstanding achievements in the field of geophysics and geology; and to Professor (Aro) for outstanding achievements in astrophysics. The winners of the award were warmly congratulated by Academician Aleksandrov, president of the USSR Academy of Sciences. As is the custom, the scientists delivered scientific reports.

Now about the results of the session. These are commented upon at our request by Academician Yuriy Anatolyevich Ovchinnikov, vice president of the USSR Academy of Sciences:

[Ovchinnikov] The 27th congress of our party set the very serious task of accelerating scientific and technical progress. It is a question of achieving a leading world position in the most important directions of natural sciences like physics, mathematics, chemistry, biology, and in the whole range of social sciences, and of acting in such a way as to make Soviet science set the tone in these very important directions of knowledge. This is not a simple task. And in particular, the creation of inter-industry scientific and technical complexes in a number of the most important directions — physics, technology, biology, in the field of machine building, power generation and chemistry — opens up ways that are fundamentally new for solving this task. The first results of the work of these complexes convinces us of the correctness of this conclusion.

But of course I would like to say in conclusion that among the directions which are being discussed there are many questions linked with the development of the direction that is closest to me — that is to say, present-day biology. I would say in connection with this that we have raised the level of public health care; the person must always be at the center of attention, and this also concerns questions connected with the development of the whole agro-industrial complex, because here biological science is under an obligation to make a very substantial contribution and is capable of so doing. In one word — concern, serious concern for the development of our science together with a search for the most effective ways of its development.

[Fedorovich] And optimism?

[Ovchinnikov] Optimism? I would say a conviction that our science will turn out to have been mobilized correctly at this most important stage in the development of our country, and that it will solve those great tasks which the 27th CPSU Congress set us.

Session Ends 21 Mar

LD212204 Moscow TASS in English 2136 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 21 TASS — A decisive turn to work in a new way is needed. Such is the main conclusion drawn by the participants in the general meeting of the USSR Academy of Sciences that ended today. The traditional annual meeting was devoted this time not only to summing up the results of the academy's work. Plans were advanced for restructuring its entire activity in accordance with the resolutions of the 27th CPSU Congress and wishes expressed to scientists at the congress.

Leading scientists of the USSR took part in the debates. Emphasizing the important role of science in the plans of social and economic development of the country, President of the Academy Anatoliy Aleksandrov pointed out that no less than two thirds of the increase of labour productivity is planned to be obtained through the use of scientific and technical achievements in the coming five year period.

It was noted at the meeting that some 1,200 scientific projects were introduced in the national economy in the previous five-year period (1981-1985). But the impact of scientific and technical progress on the intensification of the national economy of the USSR is not yet enough, Academician Aleksandrov noted. Many important discoveries have not yet been introduced in industry. Therefore, one of the most important tasks facing the academy is to consolidate the ties of science with production. Specialists pin much hope on scientific-production complexes combining research and design institutions and production enterprises.

Metal-Working Machine Tool — Ten railway flatcars were needed to dispatch a unique metal-working machine tool manufactured in Ulyanovsk. It is intended for the comprehensive working of large parts — weighing up to 200 metric tons — for heavy machinery turbines. A high degree of automation and numerical program control totally exclude manual labor. This is the prototype of a new generation of high productivity technology whose output has been started by the Ulyanovsk machne-tool builders. FURTHER REACTION TO U.S. NUCLEAR TEST BLAST

Geneva Delegates Condemnation

LD260002 Moscow TASS in English 1539 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Geneva March 25 TASS -- TASS correspondent Yevgeniy Korzhev reports:

The nuclear test held by the United States at the range in Nevada on March 22, has been condemned by many delegations taking part in the work of the Geneva conference on disarmament.

"By its actions the USA shows utter disregard of the interests and opinion of the rest of the world and of a considerable part of the public opinion in the USA," Viktor Israelyan, head of the USSR delegation, said at today's plenary meeting.

"The explosion is the response of the White House to the demands of the international public, numerous decision of the United Nations General Assembly and aspirations of millions of people of good will all over the world."

"The explosion is the response of the White House to a convincing call of the leaders of the six countries who, at a critical moment, urged the leaders of the USSR and the USA to keep from any nuclear tests in the period till the next Soviet-U.S. summit meeting. And finally, this is how Washington responded to the demand of the majority of ordinary Americans, representatives of different political and anti-war organisations of the USA, decisions of the U.S. Congress. This militaristic action by Washington", the Soviet representative stressed, "highlighted the falsity of the assertions about so-called democratic nature of the power existing in the USA, which proved capable of openly ignoring not only the wish of the American public but even the recommendations of the country's supreme legislative body."

The stand of the Soviet Union which for over eight months now has been observing a unilateral moratorium on all nuclear explosions and views their banning as a step of extreme importance in the context of the programme of nuclear disarmament advanced in Mikhail Gorbachev's statement of January 15 this year, is essentially a constructive answer to all proposals aimed at an early working out of an effective international agreement on the problem.

Representative of the People's Republic of Bulgaria Konstantin Tellalov said that the explosion at the range in Nevada was a political action running counter to the efforts to overcome the impasse at the Geneva talks on a comprehensive test ban, for which the delegations of socialist, non-aligned and neutral countries are striving.

"Sweden has always declared for the advance at the talks on this problems and for reaching arrangements", Sweden's representative Rolf Ekeus told the TASS correspondent. "My country strongly favours the idea of a moratorium of testing, regarding it as a very important step on this road. The staging of another U.S. nuclear explosion, as Sweden's Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson emphasised, is extremely disappointing".

The head of Argentina's delegation Mario Campora emphasised on his part that representatives of the six countries, the authors of the address to the leaders of the USSR and the USA, are now holding contacts to arrive at a joint assessment of the situation that has developed.

Security Committee Statement

LD252214 Moscow TASS in English 2107 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- The Soviet Committee for European Security and Cooperation has issued the following statement:

Despite the hopes of European peoples and entire humanity, in defiance of the Geneva spirit, the U.S. Administration still took a reckless step. The testing of nuclear arms at the range in Nevada is a new disgraceful action of U.S. militarists.

The Soviet public cannot overlook this act of defiance. The decision to set off the explosion was made at a time when the USSR has been observing for almost eight months a unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions and proclaimed its readiness to keep from nuclear blasts even after March 31 of this year, till the first U.S. nuclear weapon test.

The explosion of March 22 in the USA was staged just a few days after the Soviet Union's address to America calling on it that everything should be done to end nuclear tests in accordance with the will of the peoples, their striving to ensure durable peace on earth.

The new U.S. test in the USA is also an ostentatious refusal of the proposal of the leaders of six states, including two European states, to keep from any nuclear tests in the period till the next summit meeting. The U.S. militarists thus flouted the will of peoples of seven countries which are inhabited by over a billion of people, the will of all who treasure peace.

One cannot fail to see that the implementation of the dangerous plans to spiral the arms race on earth and to spread it to outer space is sped up in Washington under the pretext of the concern over the U.S. security.

Together with all peace forces, with the anti-nuclear movement mounting in the world, the Soviet public demands resolutely that the U.S. Government stop pushing humanity to the abyss of nuclear holocaust.

We urge all realistic people, no matter where they live, in Europe or in America, to stop Washington's hand, to press for comprehensive test ban on the basis of an effective international agreement.

U.S. 'Indignation' Reported

LD251134 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1200 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Report by station correspondent in the United States, Vladimir Gerasichev]

[Text] The conducting of a new nuclear explosion by the United States has given rise to a wave of indignation in the country about this militarist action of the administration. Supporters of the movement to end the arms race came to the steps of he the Capitol protesting against the continuation of nuclear tests. "The Russians Have Stopped Nuclear Weapons Tests, Why Don't We Do the Same?" -- I am reading what is written on a banner carried by one of those taking part in the demonstration.

On the eve of the explosion 63 congressmen sent a letter to President Reagan demanding that he give up the planned tests. However, despite the opinion of the public and the congressmen, despite the voice of reason and the damand of the time, despite the hopes and expectations of millions of its citizens and peoples of other countries, the White House issued the order for the nuclear device to be detonated in the state of Nevada.

The power of the underground nuclear explosion was 10 times greater than the power of the bomb dropped by the Americans on Hiroshima.

THE NEW YORK TIMES draws its readers' attention to the fact that the Soviet Union has observed a moratorium on nuclear explosions since August of last year. What we are doing does not bring us any nearer to peace, stated Mark Hatfield, a Republican senator from the State of Oregon. Congressman Thomas Downey expressed himself along the lines that the explosion carried out by the United States gives the Soviet Union complete grounds for giving up observance of the moratorium. Democrat Congressman Thomas Downey is one of 84 co-authors of a new bill presented to the House of Representatives. The bill aims at inducing President Reagan's administration to hold talks on the conclusion of a treaty on the complete banning of such tests by means of temporarily halting the financing of underground nuclear explosions.

SEMEYKO DISCUSSES EUROPEAN SECURITY PROBLEMS

PM201414 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 19 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Lev Semeyko article under the rubic "Europe -- Our Common Home": "Unraveling the Nuclear Knot"]

[Text] The CPSU and the Soviet state regard Europe as one of the main dimensions of international politics. "Europe's historical chances and future lie in peaceful cooperation among the continent's states," the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress stresses. "And it is important, while preserving the capital already accumulated, to move on: from the initial phase to a more stable phase of detente, to mature detente, and then to the creation of reliable security on the basis of the Helsinki process and a radical reduction in nuclear and conventional arms." In striving for the achievement of this lofty and noble objective and advancing a new program for nuclear disarmament the Soviet Union is proposing the implementation of a number of corresponding measures precisely in Europe. This is no coincidence.

All classes of nuclear arms -- tactical, medium-range, and strategic -- are represented on the Old Continent. This is the continent on which the nuclear arsenals of four of the five nuclear powers are concentrated. These arsenals of enormous aggregate might are capable of practically destroying European civilization.

Europe is a continent where security problems have posed particularly acutely for many reasons, and primarily because of the acuteness of the nuclear confrontation. This is why the USSR is proposing the beginning of the consistent freeing of Europe from nuclear weapons at the very first stage of the comprehensive disarmament program. The point of departure could be the elimination of the medium-range Soviet and American nuclear missiles deployed in the European zone. "If, without procrastinating or complicating the matter with other problems, it proved successful to eliminate the Soviet and American medium-range missiles on our continent, we would unravel maybe one of the complex knots of current world politics and clear the way to a considerable extent to the radical reduction and subsequent complete elimination of nuclear weapons," was how M.S. Gorbachev described the importance of the European aspect of nuclear disarmament.

The USSR is proposing consistent steps during whose implementation at each stage of nuclear disarmament maximum consideration would be given to all sides' security interests. At the very first stage, the USSR and the United States as the most powerful nuclear powers could set an example by completely eliminating the European ballistic and medium-range cruise missile potential. In what way is this proposal new?

First, it is not an isolated proposal but part of a general and precisely coordinated program for nuclear disarmament and must be implemented at the same time as a halving of the USSR and U.S. nuclear arsenals which can reach each other's territory. Second, such a major reduction in the nuclear threat enables our country to take a more flexible approach to the question of taking account of the Anglo-French nuclear forces, whose significance remains in full.

The proposal advanced by the USSR is that the United States should assume a commitment not to supply its strategic and medium-range missiles to other countries (let us remember, for example, the plans to supply Trident-2 missiles to Britain). In turn, Britain and France should pledge not to build up their nuclear arms (let us again remember that, according to existing estimates, the number of these powers' nuclear warheads is to increase by more than 1,000 by the beginning of the nineties). Otherwise universal security would be undermined as a result of NATO attempts to safeguard only its "own" security -- and moreover, by methods of building up arms.

Washington must realize that without security for the USSR there cannot be security for the United States, and without security for the Warsaw Pact countries there cannot be security for the NATO countries. In view of this the USSR has a right to expect realism and sense in British and French policy. The solution of problems of universal security require a common approach.

The measures proposed for the second stage, which is to begin no later than 1990 and last 5-7 years, are also in keeping with the interests of the equal security of the sides and consistent nuclear disarmament. After the USSR and the United States have completed the 50-percent reduction of their corresponding arms, all the nuclear powers will eliminate their tactical nuclear weapons with a range (radius of action) of 1,000 km. At least two factors are important here. First, the Soviet Union takes account of the position held by Britain and France whereby they would be prepared to join the nuclear disarmament process after a considerable reduction in the level of the Soviet and American nuclear potentials. As we can see, the USSR is in no way insisting on an immediate reduction in the Anglo-French nuclear forces. Second, if at the second stage Britain and France eliminate only their tactical nuclear means, the USSR and the United States would not only take analogous steps but would also implement further measures to eliminate medium-range nuclear arms. However the American allies would retain such arms. In other words, their security is in no way undermined in comparison with the present situation.

Finally, at the third stage (no later than 1995) it is proposed that the elimination of all remaining nuclear arms be completed so that not a single nuclear charge would remain on earth by the beginning of the 21st century.

In other words, the USSR's approach to the nature of nuclear disarmament measures is bold yet exceptionally delicate. It convincingly demonstrates a readiness to take into consideration the interests of not only its own security but also that of its partners in the disarmament process.

In order to accelerate to the maximum the reaching of agreements on medium-range missiles, the USSR has agreed at the Geneva talks to separate the question of these means from questions of space and strategic nuclear weapons. This is yet another favorable precondition for making a start this very year on freeing Europe from nuclear weapons and completely eliminating them in the world.

Unfortunately there is still no desire to acknowledge this in Washington. In response to the Soviet proposals, the United States has advanced a somewhat updated version of its previous "zero option" of 1981. The American "zero" is one-sidedly beneficial to the United States and NATO.

It is in keeping with the selfish interests of the United States and its allies in the Far East since it envisages the elimination of Soviet medium-range missiles in Asia too, whereas the nuclear threat to the Soviet Union there would not be reduced in any way. The current variant of the "zero" option is only new insofar as the United States envisages a 3-year timetable for its implementation. The question of eliminating nuclear weapons in Europe is essentially being blocked by invoking the British and French position and demanding the weakening of our defenses in the east of the country while the American military forces in that region would be retained.

The British Conservative government is in solidarity with the unconstructive American position. London is talking about the "unacceptability" of the Soviet proposals since allegedly the question of the limitation of the British nuclear forces can become a subject of discussion only after the completion of the Soviet-American Geneva talks on nuclear and space arms.

The overt and covert opposition of the U.S. leaders and some of their allies to the Soviet proposals cannot fail to put one on guard. Confirmation was provided by the U.S. President's radio address to Americans at the end of February. Calls for "a strong America" and new arms buildups again issued from the White House chief's lips. But what is needed today is not more leaps in the arms race but new political thinking and practical steps in the matter of complete and universal nuclear disarmament.

U.S. SEEN PREPARING TO RENOUNCE ABM TREATY

LD260721 Moscow TASS in English 0715 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 26 TASS -- In speeding up work under the "star wars" programme, the United States is preparing for a unilateral renunciation of the treaty on the limitation of ABM systems. This is seen from pronouncements by Richard Perle, U.S. assistant security of defence, at hearings held by one of the Senate subcommittees for the affairs of the Armed Forces. The high-ranking representative of the Pentagon said that already at the stage of experimental design and research work being carried out within the framework of the Strategic Defence Initiative, the United States will possibly have to adopt a "broad" interpretation of the ABM Treaty. According to the American hawks, such interpretation allegedly allows to conduct the testing of components of the anti-ballistic missile defence system, which is prohibited under that most important agreement. Richard Perle stressed that in his opinion the United States will have to deploy a large-scale ABM system with space-based elements irrespective of the fact whether the Russians agree or refuse to hold talks on a revision of the ABM Treaty.

PRAVDA VIEWS EAST BLOC MBFR DRAFT, WESTERN STANCE

[Own correspondent B. Dubrovin dispatch: "To Take Advantage of the Real Chance"]

[Text] Vienna, March [dateline as published] -- The latest round of the Vienna talks on the mutual reduction of armed forces and arms in central Europe is almost over. It began on 30 January 1986 under particular conditions. New Soviet proposals had been published shortly beforehand. It was declared at the highest level on behalf of the USSR that, in parallel with the withdrawal of mass destruction weapons from states' arsenals, it is necessary to embark on an agreed reduction of conventional arms and armed forces, and that accord at the Vienna talks could signal progress in this direction.

It was from these clear-cut and honest positions that on 20 February the socialist countries submitted at Vienna's Hofburg Palace a detailed draft "Agreement on the Initial Reduction of Ground Forces and Arms by the Soviet Union and the United States With Subsequent Nonincrease in the Level of Armed Forces and Arms by the Sides and Related Measures in Central Europe."

The new document goes a long way to develop, specify, and supplement the socialist countries' proposals of 14 February 1985. Taking into account all the acceptable elements of the Western stance, it offers compromise solutions on a number of important aspects where agreement between the sides is lacking.

Bearing in mind that the Western powers have hitherto been unprepared for major reductions of ground forces, the socialist countries propose that the USSR and the United States reduce their forces by 11,500 and 6,500 men respectively within 1 year, this reduction being applied to service units including their regulation complement of [shtatnyy] arms and combat equipment.

A pledge on the nonincrease of the level of armed forces and arms in Central Europe by all 11 parties to the agreement must come into force following the completion of the planned reductions of Soviet and U.S. forces.

Important new steps have also been taken by the socialist countries on the question of sensible verification [kontrol] of the fulfillment of the agreement. It is envisaged to exchange in good time lists of service units to be reduced with withdrawn, together with reciprocal notification of the start and completion of reductions. In addition, the USSR has also proposed that permanent checkpoints to monitor entry into the zone of reductions be established for the entire duration of the agreement. On-site inspection [proverka na mestakh] as a result of a justified request is not ruled out, either. The creation of an appropriate consultation machinery is also envisaged.

In the opinion of the socialist countries' representatives, this is the first time in many years that a real chance has emerged to overcome the deadlock in Vienna. The draft which has been submitted lays practical foundations for this.

As for the West's representatives, unfortunately matters have hitherto not progressed beyond words. Moreover, observers are put on their guard by the obstructionist tactics employed in the past by the North Atlanticists and particularly by their speculation on verification [kontrol] problems. There are many indications that they would like to replace the task of reducing the level of military confrontation in Centarl Europe with verification [kontrol] measures which are not commensurable either with the nature and content of a possible agreement or with the real needs for verification [proverka] of its fulfillment. One can legitimately ask: Is that not being done deliberately so as to complicate the reaching of agreement in Vienna?

The Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies are fully determined to achieve success at the Vienna talks. Provided the other side really desires the same thing, 1986 could be a watershed year for the Vienna talks.

U.S. DISARMAMENT DELEGATE'S ADDRESS CITED

LD201841 Moscow TASS in English 1754 GMT 20 Mar 86

[Text] Geneva March 20 TASS -- TASS correspondent Yevgeniy Korzhev reports:

One can hardly say if today's statement by the U.S. chief delegate to the disarmament conference smacked more of disrespect for his negotiating partners or of unwillingness to face real facts.

Ambassador Donald Lowitz concentrated on the threat of the militarization of outer space, the threat which is posed, if we are to believe him, not by the American plans to develop space strike weapons but -- by the Soviet Union, which has allegedly been going ahead with military space programs for a long time. So the United States presumably has to fulfil its SDI program to catch up with the dangerous rival. As for the disarmament conference, according to the American delegation, it should first define the concept of the "militarization of space" and "its peaceful uses." In other words, the American delegate suggests that a futile exercise in semantics should substitute concrete debates and the drafting of practical measures to prevent, in accordance with the demands of the world community, another dangerous round of the arms race and to keep weapons from space for the good of the whole of mankind.

Chief Soviet delegate Viktor Israelyan, giving a brief reply to the address by Lowitz, stressed the absolute untensability of his attacks on the Soviet Union. At the same time this address, he said, is clearly showing anew that the United States merely does not want a ban on space strike weapons or talks on this matter while trying to introduce such weapons in space as soon as possible to achieve military superiority.

Czechoslovak delegate Milos Vejvoda denounced the U.S. negative stand on another problem, the termination of nuclear testing. A ban on all tests is needed already now, he said. A U.S. moratorium on nuclear explosions, like that imposed by the Soviet Union, would constitute a step in this direction. Mikhail Gorbachev's recent reply to an address of the leaders of six countries is fresh evidence of the constructive approach of the Soviet side and its readiness to break the vicious circle of the arms race, Vejvoda said.

DELHI SIX RESPONSE READ AT DISARMAMENT TALKS

LD181839 Moscow TASS in English 1735 GMT 18 Mar 86

[Text] Geneva March 18 TASS — The response of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to the joint message of the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden and Greece was read out by Viktor Israelyan, head of the Soviet delegation at the plenary meeting of the disarmament conference today. At the request of the Soviet delegation, the response will be issued as an official document of the conference.

The statement of the Soviet leader to the effect that the USSR will not conduct nuclear explosion even after March 31, until the U.S. conducts the first nuclear explosion, has aroused much interest among the participants in the conference, who are examining the problem of putting an end to nuclear testing as one of the top priority items on the agenda. As Jose Carlos Maritegui, Peru's representative, said, it is inadmissible to put off any longer the resolution of such an urgent issue under the pretext that the verification questions have allegedly not been sufficiently elaborated.

Mikhail Gorbachev's response to the message from the leaders of the six states is permeated with a sense of high responsibility as regards the issues of peace and disarmament, stressed Luvsandorijiin Bayart (the Mongolian People's Republic). The Soviet Union, he said, is again demonstrating it sincere will and striving to do its utmost to put an end to nuclear testing. As in the previous cases, the Soviet Union has positively responded to the appeal by the group of non-aligned and neutral countries to the USSR and the USA to refrain, as one of confidence building measures, from conducting any nuclear explosions, newsmen were told by A.S. Gonsalves, head of the Indian delegation.

FURTHER ON CEMA MACHINE BUILDING FORUM

Proceedings Reviewed

PM241641 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report: "CEMA Committee Session"]

[Text] Budapest, 21 Mar -- A routine session of the CEMA committee for cooperation in the machine building sphere has been held here. Taking part in its work were represenatives of Bulgaria, Hungary, the SRV, the GDR, Cuba, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the USSR, the CSSR, and also the SFRY.

The session was chaired by I.S. Silayev, deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers and the USSR's representative on the committee.

There was an examination of questions of implementing the Comprehensive Program for the CEMA countries' scientific and technical progress through the year 2000, including questions of accelerating scientific and technical progress in machine building sectors, considerably improving machine and equipment quality, and ensuring the maximum development of production sharing and cooperation with regard to subassemblies and parts.

The committee approved the work plan of the coordinating council for flexible production systems and industrial robots for 1986-1987 and also a program of scientific research and experimental design work and the creation of prototypes and batches of robot equipment. A general agreement was signed on cooperation in the construction of a road machine production plant on the USSR's territory and an agreement was signed on setting up the "interrobot" international science-and-production association.

The representatives of the countries on the committee were received by G. Lazar, member of the MSZMP Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the Hungarian Council of Ministers.

I.S. Silayev and other members of the Soviet delegation were received by F. Havasi, member of the Politburo and secretary of the MSZMP Central Committee.

Silayev Remarks Cited

LD212102 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1530 GMT 21 Mar 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] In Budapest the meeting of the CEMA committee on cooperation in the field of machine-building has ended. Yevgeniy Shirokov reports.

In order to better present the nature of the problems under discussion at this meeting, I visited one of the workshops of the Budapest transport-machine-building works, which supplies products to many of the socialist countries. Here a robot which has taken the place of 30-odd workers, previously engaged in heavy work, is operating. Precision of execution has also improved. This would be all very well, except that it was necessary to pay a Western firm a substantial amount in hard currency. In addition, difficulties could arise over spare parts in the future.

To strengthen their own base for the creation of robot technology and to insure that it is of world-class quality, the CEMA member countries with an interest in this field came to an agreement in Moscow in December last year to set up an international scientific-production association named "Inter-Robot."

Now, at the meeting in Budapest, this and other questions on the agenda of the session, have received tangible acknowledgements:

[Begin I.S Silayev recording] We considered and endorsed a program of work on comprehensive robotization. We agreed that we must not only conduct work on the production of finished goods but also strengthen to a considerable extent work on specialization and on production of individual components, parts, and units. For the first time at our sessions, questions about technical level, quality, and reliability were voiced with urgency. In our view it is important that all unanimously agreed that it is vital to more broadly develop direct links between institutes, design and other creative organizations, and between specific industrial enterprises. [end recording]

CEMA COOPERATION COMMITTEE OPENS MOSCOW TALKS

LD261019 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0805 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 26 Mar (TASS) -- The 34th session of the CEMA committee for scientific-technical cooperation opened here today. Taking part are heads of committees, ministries, and departments for science and technology of CEMA member-countries and also a representative from Yugoslavia. The session will examine questions of the realisation of the comprehensive program of scientific-technical progress of CEMA members countries up to the year 2000. It will discuss plans to promote the accelerated development of the science and technology of Vietnam, Cuba, and Mongolia, and also questions connected with the development and perfection of cooperation in the field of scientific-technical information and primarily information supply within the comprehensive program of scientific-technical cooperation.

Other questions of the development of the scientific-technical cooperation of CEMA countries will also be examined.

UN ECONOMIC AIDE DISCUSSES TIES WITH CEMA

LD252356 Moscow TASS in English 1746 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- The present state and prospects of developing relations between the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) of the United Nations were discussed during a meeting here today between Vyacheslav Sychev, CMEA secretary, and Klaus Sahlgren, U.N. undersecretary-general and ECE executive secretary.

The two sides considered, specifically, questions connected with the CMEA's participation in the 41st ECE session. Sahlgren also had meetings today at the State Committee of the USSR for Science and Technology and the Department for International Economic Organizations at the Foreign Ministry of the USSR. During the conversations, the ECE executive secretary and the heads of the Soviet departments discussed questions connected with preparations for the work of the forthcoming ECE session and its working committees.

COMMENTATORS VIEW 'INTERNATIONAL SITUATION'

LD221313 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1030 GMT 21 Mar 86

["International Situation -- Questions and Answers" program presented by All-Union Radio foreign policy commentator Pavel Kasparov, with international affairs journalist Vitaliy Semenovich Gusenkov; deputy director of the Africa institute Aleksey Mikhaylovich Vasilyev, and Stockholm correspondent Vlaentin Gubernatorov]

[Excerpts] [Kasparov] I would like to ask a question about France. In particular, listeners Nikolay Gerasimovich Tironychev from the town of Sovayarvi in the Karelian ASSR, Viktor Antonovich Varlashino from Kherson, and Sergey Zhirikov, a 10th class pupil from one of the secondary schools in the town of Ustinov, ask us to talk about this country's politics. Many of you have also asked us to explain the results of the parliamentary elections in France that took place last Sunday, and to share our opinions in connection with the political changes which have taken place there. I have invited Vitaliy Gusenkov, an international affairs journalist who has taken part in our program on more than one occasion to answer your questions. Over to you Vitaliy Semenovich.

[Gusenkov] Thank you. I shall say at once that the main bourgeois groups -- the Rally for the Republic [RPR] headed by Jacques Chirac, the mayor of Paris, and Union for French Democracy [UDF], the founder of which is the former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing -- were victorious in last Sunday's French parliamentary elections.

Now a few words about the French Communist Party [PCF]. The PCF was unsuccessful in the elections, it only received around 10 percent of the votes. It received 35 deputies' seats in parliament. The PCF's influence among the voters has fallen. It must be said that the party was waging a struggle in extremely grave conditions: It was obliged to act under massive fire, both from the bourgeois circles and from the Socialists, and a fierce anticommunist campaign was unleashed against it. But the Communists intend to thoroughly analyze the reasons for their failures. A Central Committee Plenum is to take place in the near future which will evidently investigate these problems. The party's opponents are already predicting its decline. These are, of course, hasty conclusions. The PCF has links with firm roots in the working class and the working people. It has a good organization. Thousands of communist cells operate at enterprises and in institutions. It is of course a serious force and its opponents must take it into account. In a statement which was adopted in connection with the election results, the PCF Political Bureau directs the Communists toward strengthening their unity and toward the activation of the struggle for the interests of people of labour.

France's future foreign policy can only be guessed at. The leaders of the bourgeois groups speak of their adherence to the interests of France, of defence of its independence in the intenational arena, but what is their attitude, for example, to the star wars questions, to the U.S. Strategic Defence Initiative? For it is known that this is one of the key questions in foreign policy today. It is also known that President Mitterrand and the French Government have rejected the SDI. The French leaders have repeatedly stated that the deployment of strike weapons in space would lead to the undermining of strategic stability and to a further aggravation of the situation. Meanwhile, some of leaders of the RPR and the UDF are speaking in favour of SDI, saying that it is in keeping with the interests of France.

Jacques Chirac and other leaders of these groupings have also spoken in favour of the development of cooperation with the Soviet Union, and in favor of dialogue between France and the USSR. Of course, such intentions can only be welcomed. The Soviet side has always been in favor of the development of good relations and cooperation with France and, of course, any gesture in this direction will receive support and understanding in the Soviet Union. In conclusion, I should like to say that the present international situation urgently demands from all statesmen a responsible and considered approach to the problems of war and peace, a readiness to subjugate narrow party interests to the nationalinterests, to the interests of the interational community as a whole.

There are more letters requesting us to talk about the situation in the Middle East. I invite our guest, Doctor of Historical Sciences Aleksey Mikhaylovich Vasilyev, deputy director of the Africa institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences to reply. The first group of letters ask us to talk about the situation concerning Libya. Listeners Kobelev from Rostov na Donu, Mandilenko from Kharkov, and a group letter from Anashkin, Kovalev, Nikitin, Prokhorov, and Simenov of Smolensk ask us to talk about this. This situation concerning Libya has once again become more acute; the news agencies report a group of U.S.aircraft carriers are heading for its shores. Such a development cannot fail to evoke public alarm in the Arab countries.

[Vasilyev] Indeed. Libya has again -- and by no means for the first time in recent years -- become the object of pressure on the part of the United States, of imperialist threats, and of blackmail. All this is taking place under the standard of neoglobalism, under which the United States is attempting to establish the hegemony of the West, in fact its own hegemony, in many regions of the world, particularly in Northern Africa.

Maneuvers were held by the U.S. Navy somedays ago in the Mediterranean Sea near the Gulf of Sidra off the Libyan coast. These were the third maneuvers of this kind in less than 3 months. According to reports by foreign agencies, which refer to informed Pentagon sources, these preparations could lead to new and even greater maneuvers. More than 40 combat ships will take part: 30 of them -- 2 aircraft carrier groups led by the aircraft carriers Saratoga and Coral Sea -- are permanently stationed in the eastern part of the Mediterranean Sea in direct proximity to Libya's territorial waters. Ten ships led by the aircraft carrier America are hastening across the Atlantic to the Mediterranean Sea. They are not only fostering a potential theater of military action in North Africa, but also claim that they are safeguarding U.S. national security. Where? Thousands of kilometers away from U.S. national borders. In this way they are attempting to threaten independent Libya with three aircraft carriers at once. Perhaps this North African country is threatening the United States?

This is absurd, yet this is precisely what lies behind U.S. propaganda. The aggressive preparations by the most powerful capitalist power against a developing country with a population of little more than 3 million is not caused by a threat from Libya. Washington does not like this country's anti-imperialist course in the international arena; its opposition to plans for U.S.-style Near Eastern conciliation; its support for the anti-imperialist struggle of other peoples.

Moreover, let me recall that after the 1969 Revolution a number of progressive transformations were carried out in Libya: The property of foreign companies was nationalized; a monopoly was introduced on foreign trade, as well as restricted land ownership; the role of the bourgeoisie in the national economy was reduced to zero. In general, measures were implemented to raise the standard of living of the population. Precisely for these reasons, for the edification of other recalcitrant states, the United States is threatening to meet our exemplary punishment to refractory Libya. Well, as far as Libya's refractoriness is concerned, Washington cannot fail to react bitterly to what Al-Qadhdhafi, the leader of the Libyan Revolution said the other day. He stated that the United States is setting up a network of military bases throughout the world and is terrorizing peoples with nuclear missiles and naval fleets. The arsenal of U.S. imperialism includes armed aggression and the capture of other people's lands, economic sabotage, and physical elimination of politicians who are not to Washington's liking. According to him, millions of Americans, mainly representatives of the negro population and the country's native inhabitants, the Indians, are also victims of the discriminatory policy of the White House.

It is natural that in the opinion of the makers of U.S. policy, such a leader must be punished, so Libya is being threatened with an armored fist, an aircraft-carrier first, and by conducting military maneuvers off its shores. This is taking place on far-fetched pretexts: It is allegedly necessary to protect U.S. specialists employed at Libyan oil fields, although they themselves express the wish to work in Libya knowing that unemployment awaits them in the United States. Libya is being accused of complicity in terrorist acts, although these fabrications have been refuted. In short, without having thought up proper arguments, Washington is nevertheless again flexing its military muscles in the immediate vicinity of an independent sovereign state.

It would be logical for us to remember how, as a whole, the United States approaches the problems of the developing countries in its own policy. It is worth remembering a quotation from the latest message of U.S. President Reagan to Congress: We are seeking to assist the fourishing of social progress with the aid of a free, open, developing global economy which is market-orientated. We are making diplomatic efforts to help solve dangerous regional conflicts. It seems to me the U.S. President should have backed up this call with references to Libya, against which Washington is pursuing a policy of economic blockade, attempting to undermine its economy, and demonstrating its military might.

At present a new doctrine of interference in the affairs of the developing countries -- which frequently is unofficially called the Reagan doctrine -- has been drawn up in the United States. It consists of the intention of the United States to support rebels, to bring direct military pressure to bear on a number of countries whose policy is not to Washington's liking, and to assist the fall of their lawful governments. In the United States, participation in military operations of this kind is called the strategy of conflicts of low intensity. This is a way of pointing out how different they are from a large-scale war. But the possibility of small conflicts escalating into larger ones, even involving the use of nuclear weapons is envisaged. And now we see that Libya, the Libyan Jamahiriyah as this country calls itself officially, has become another target for subversive operations and military pressure within the framework of this new, unofficial Reagan doctrine.

[Kasparov] Aleksey Mikhaylovich, now I would like you to touch on another acute problem in the Middle East, the Iran-Iraq conflict. Many listeners, particularly Comrades Kovalevskiy from Simferopol; Pyanov from the town of Karachev in Byransk Oblast; and many, many others, request us to tell them about this.

[Vasilyev] The war, the bloody military operations between Iran and Iraq, is continuing for the 6th year. In a military conflict of such a scale and length, which is taking its course manifestly without success for either side, there can be temporary successes and failures both for Iraq and Iran in the course of military operations. At the present time, as a result of bloody battles, Iranian troops have occupied a small bridgehead on the west bank of the Shatt al-'Arab River and part of Iraqi territory in the north of the country. But I would like to stress that there are no victors in this war. In this war both sides, which are incurring large human casualties which already run into hundreds of thousands of people, are suffering defeat. The war is resulting in colossal material havoc amounting to tens of billions of dollars. Their plans for socioeconomic development are being frustrated.

To the satisfaction of Washington and Tel Aviv, these countries have been removed from the confrontation against imperialism and Zionism, having been swallowed up by a cruel, bloody fratricidal war. The solution to this conflict can only be political. The Soviet Union, the countries of the Warsaw Pact, the nonaligned and other states have repeatedly called for this. However, unfortunately, this conflict is still continuing and the United States is using it to maintainand build up its Armed Forces in the regions of the Persian Gulf, the Arabian Sea, and in the northern and northwestern part of the Indian Ocean.

[Kasparov] In front of me I have a letter from Comrade Smelkov from Murmansk. He is interested in the history of relations between the Soviet Union and Saudi Arabia. Recently, as is known, the Soviet public marked the 60th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between our country and Saudi Arabia. However, there is no Soviet or Saudi embassy either in Moscow or in Riyadh respectively. Can you comment on this situation, Aleksey Mikhailovich?

[Vasilyev] In diplomatic practice there can exist such a situation when two countries recognize each other and maintain diplomatic relations with each other, yet do not have corresponding embassies in their capitals. Relations between the Soviet Union and Saudi Arabia are precisely in such a condition.

As is known, within its present borders, Saudi Arabia was formed in 1925 after the conquest of the Western areas of the Arabian peninsula, and the conquest of Hijaz -- with the Muslim sacred places of Mecca and Medina located there -- by the Najd sultanate. In those years the Arabian peninsula was part of zone influenced by the British Empire, and recognition of this new state by others was important to help strenghten Saudi Arabia's authority in the international arena. In those conditions the Soviet Union was the first to recognize the new state. This happened in February 1926. At that time, the Soviet Union had a political mission in the town of Jeddah on the Red Sea coast. It was retained in the form of an embassy for over 10 years and was closed on the eve of World War II. Ever since, relations between the Soviet Union Saudi Arabia have been maintained via indirect channels.

The policy of the Soviet Union, or more precisely the Soviet Union's attitude regarding the exchange of embassies is clear and defnite. We believe that the presence of embassies would meet the interests of a political dialogue between both countries, would be a mechanism for normal diplomatic ties, and would serve the mutual understanding between both countries. In this sense it would meet the interests of both sides, as diplomatic exchange is a road with two-way traffic. And the Soviet Union is by no means more interested than Saudi Arabia in the exchange of diplomatic missions.

At the present moment there is so far no such exchange. This does not prevent our two countries from holding a number of common or close positions on a few important international questions, including the question of the struggle against Israel's expansionist aggressive course and on a number of other problems.

OVCHINNIKOV REVIEWS WEEK'S WORLD EVENTS

PM241245 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 23 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Vsevolod Ovchinnikov "International Review"]

[Text] Intentions and Actions

To turn energy of intention into energy of action. That is the idea behind the work of the Land of the Soviets after the 27th CPSU Congress. These same words could serve as a motto for its foreign policy efforts too. Setting itself the goal of eliminating nuclear weapons forever, the USSR actively seeks a total end to nuclear weapons tests. That is the aim of the appeal which the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium made to the U.S. Congress the other day. It recalls that our country, in its reply to the appeal of the leaders of Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece, expressed readiness not to carry out tests even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States. So seven countries with a population of more than 1 billion are now calling insistently on the U.S. leadership to join in this moratorium.

But the White House decided to carry out its next underground nulcear explosion in Nevada on 22 March. The Washington "hawks" are brazenly challenging world public opinion. The grave responsibility for the consequences of this shortsighted step rests with the administration. The White House's cynicism has aroused a wave of indignation even on Capital Hill. More than 50 congressmen said at a press conference yesterday that this step undermines the prospects for elaborating a treaty on a total end to nuclear tests and runs counter to the peoples' aspirations.

American imperialism would like to make mankind learn to live with the nuclear threat and the arms race. This will not happen. The Warsaw Pact states, says the communique issued by the Foreign Ministers Committee session held in the Polish capital, will do everything to ensure that 1986, which has been designated International Year of Peace is marked by real changes for the better in European and world affairs. They advocate constructive cooperation with all governments and peoples with a view to creating an all-embracing system of international security.

The members of the community do not by any means believe that they are divided from the other socialist countries by barriers of any kind. They are pleased by every step along the path of rapprochement between all the states of the world socialist system. In this connection the 27th CPSU Congress noted with satisfaction some improvement in the USSR's relations with its great neighbor -- socialist China -- and the possibility, despite differences in approaches to a number of international problems, of developing cooperation on an equal bases not affecting third countries.

One manifestation of this was the first session of the Soviet-Chinese Commission on Economic, Scienctific, and Technical Cooperation, held in Beijing. Zhao Ziyang, premier of the PRC State Council, received I.V. Arkhipov, first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, who was there to take part. The participants in the talk noted with satisfaction substantial progress in the development of trade, economic scientific, technical, and cultural cooperation between the USSR and the PRC in recent years and expressed the mutual confidence that the results of the commission's first session will give new impetus to this trend.

It was stressed on the Sovist side that the 27th CPSU Congress once again confirmed the USSR's consistent desire to improve relations with the PRC and expand multifaceted cooperation between the two countries. The Chinese head of government stated that the USSR's course of accelerating socioeconomic development is arousing great interest in the PRC.

The protocol on the results of the commission's work notes that the volume of Soviet-Chinese trade increased by more than 60 percent in 1985. In particular, the possibilities of joint efforts in the construction and modernization of industrial projects in the PRC were examined.

"Thinking about the future," the Central Committee Political Report to the 27th congress said, "we may say that the reserves of cooperation between the USSR and China are enormous. They are great because such cooperation accords with both countries' interests; because what our peoples value most is indivisible -- socialism and peace."

The Adventurism of Strength

The dispute between the White House and the Capitol concerning military aid to the Nicaraguan "contras" has entered its decisive stage. The House of Representatives rejected the President's request for $100 million to be allocated for equipping the surviving Somozist gangs. The debates on this question were preceded by unprecedented intensive indoctrination of congressmen. At the same time there was an unbridled campaign following the formulas of McCarthyist times. If you vote "against," they said, you would be damaging U.S. national security and would be an "accomplice of international communism."

That was how the White House incumbent posed the question in calling on Americans to call their congressmen to urge them to vote "for." But the avalanche of telephone calls prompted by the President's television appeal had quite a different thrust. It was largely consonant with the opinion of O'Neill, speaker of the House of Representatives. He stated that the administration's policy in Central America is pushing the United States toward war, and likened the President's request to the notorious "Tonkin Resolution" whose adoption led to large-scale U.S. military intervention in Indochina.

An apt reminder. Reports have filtered through into the American press to the effect that without waiting for consent from Congress, the CIA has already drawn up a plan for reequipping and retraining the Somozist gangs. And the "Green Berets" are to play a direct part -- the very same "Green Berets" who were once used as instructors in Vietnam. And the process whereby the United States slipped into the Vietnam quagmire began with the sending of military specialists of this kind, followed by the stepping up of measures to protect them.

The results of the vote in the House of Representatives are regarded by the American and world public as a major defeat for the administration and personally for the President, who publicized his request with more energy than any other political campaign of recent years. Will lessons be learned from what happened? As yet, not noticeably. As events show, Washington's policy is still characterized by dangerous adventurism founded on the cult of strength.

Is not this indicated, for instance, by the disgraceful encroachment on the sea borders of the USSR and Bulgaria in the Black Sea, which was ostentation and challenging in nature and pursued clearly provocative goals? Citing official Pentagon spokesmen, THE NEW YORK TIMES writes that the American cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron, equipped with sophisticated electronic apparatus, encroached on the USSR's territorial waters south of the Crimean peninsula with the aim of probing the Soviet defense system. The order to carry out this reconnaissance operation was issued by the Pentagon chief with the sanction of the White House and the State Department.

The newspaper draws a direct parallel between the incursion of two U.S. warships into Soviet territorial waters and the new American naval maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra. For the fourth time in recent months, the United States is carrying out a provocative show of strength off Libya's coast. The aircraft carriers America, Saratoga, and Coral Sea have now been drawn up to take part in this show in the Mediterranean.

According to THE NEW YORK TIMES, Pentagon spokesmen make no secret of the fact that the Black Sea operation and similar actions off the Libyan coast are designed to back up President Reagan's call for an increase in military spending in fiscal 1987. It is not for us to judge how far such provocations help to extract money for the arms race. But it is time the American public and the Congress gave thought to the fact that the adventurism of strength is pushing the United States to the brink of a military conflict with unforeseeable consequences.

Shift To The Right

The following question was the subject of numerous commentaries last week: What will be the consequences of the new distribution of political forces in France which has emerged from the parliamentary elections? As is known, the results of the vote brought success to the right and extreme right. The French Socialist Party (PS), which has ruled the country for the last 5 years, lost its majority in the National Assembly and its right to form a government. But the PS retained its position as the country's biggest political party (nearly one-third of the voters voted for it). A right-wing coalition has now entered the political foreground: the Rally for the Republic (RPR) and the Union for French Democracy (UDF). Together, they obtained a majority of seats in the National Assembly, but with only a minimal margin, though they were hoping for a more impressive victory.

The results of parliamentary elections indicate that the axis of France's political life has shifted to the right. This is also indicated by the emergence of the extreme right racist "National Front" group onto the parliamentary scene.

There were major losses for the French Communists, who were subjected to unprecedented fierce attacks from all sides. This time the French Communist Party [PCF] took 10 percent of the vote.

How can it be explained that the French Socialist, like the British Labor Party and the Social Democrats in the FRG before them, had to yield power to right-wing conservative forces? Perhaps the fundamental cause is the gulf between words and deeds. As a rule, in domestic policy Social Democrats do not make use of the levers of state power to implement the promises they made to the voters. Inconsistency in policy, concessions to businessmen who want to shift the consequences of the economic crisis onto the working people's shoulders -- and this is the result.

The PS came to power 5 years ago largely thanks to the support of the left-wing majority. It was with cooperation between the Socialists and the Communists that major companies and banks were nationalized and a number of the working people's social gains were enshrined in legislation. But soon the PS began to depart from the joint program. The Socialists had promised to create jobs for a million young French people, but with their "stringency" policy they increased the army of unemployed by almost that number.

The French election results show that the all-permeating force of the modern mass media can sometimes lead the voters astray and channel their displeasure in the wrong direction. Like the British Conservatives, the French right asserts persistently that state intervention in the economy only fetters initiative and fosters bureaucracy, and that appropriations for social needs engender parasitism. Shamelessly speculating on the growth of unemployment and crime, thugs from the "National Front" demand the explusion from France of Algerians and Moroccans and the imposition of order with an "iron hand" -- exactly like their brothers in the organization of the same name in Britain.

One aim of the mass indoctrination of voters was to mislead people sympathizing with the Communist Party. It was dinned into them that the best way of preventing a victory for the right was to vote not for the Communists, butfor the Socialists, who were supposedly capable of obtaining more parliamentary mandates. This method evidently played its part. The results of the parliamentary elections indicate that some people would like to transform the French political system along American lines and ensure that two parties or groups alternate in power -- that is, to create that appearance of change which is the essence of bourgeois pseudodemocracy. This plan presupposes the elimination of the PCF from the political arena. But the attempts to achieve this were thwarted, and in future too they are doomed to failure.

"Price War"

An extraordinary conference of OPEC is taking place in Geneva. On the agenda is a question which is by no means new for the participants: How to stabilize oil prices and what measures to take to retard their fall.

The "price war" which has now flared up on the world oil market is basically a new stage in a carefully planned offensive against OPEC. Its aim is to weaken and split the independent cartel of 13 developing states. At one time, the natural wealth of the majority of these states was subjected for many years to predatory plundering on the basis of the enslaving concession system. And even after the upsurge of the national liberation struggle forced the Western oil concerns to take a back seat, they retained their important positions in the transportation, processing, and sale of oil.

It was the notorious "seven sisters" who played a vile role behind the scenes in the 1973 and 1979 energy crisis. Having exhausted the possibilities of getting rich on rising oil prices, they set about using the opposite trend to their own advantage -- reducing prices. This change was determined by various factors. The twofold "oil shock" of the seventies prompted businessmen to introduce energy-saving techniques more actively and to substitute gas, coal, and other fuels for oil more frequently. Moreover, U.S. monopoly capital considered it preferable to partially conserve the country's own deposits by increasing oil imports from the developing countries. Even before, the American monopolists were infuriated by OPEC's influential and independent role in the oil market. Now a direct interest in reducing oil prices has been added to this.

In order to stabilize prices in conditions of low demand, since 1979, the OPEC members have reduced oil extraction by approximately one-half. However, their efforts proved fruitless, since such major oil exporters as Britain and Norway, which do not belong to OPEC, have increased the productivity of the North Sea deposits by 50-100 percent over the same period. Moreover, instead of acquiring oil from OPEC members on the basis of long-term contracts, the leading capitalist states are increasingly frequently resorting to spot deals on the surplus commodity market in Rotterdam. And that favors the growth of speculation.

Whatever the outcome of the current "price war," it is clear that it was undertaken as a form of neocolonialist plundering of the developing countries. And that is not all. The speculative machinations of the leading capitalist powers accelerate the process of exhaustion of world reserves of "black gold," which could lead to dire consequences for consumers.

FURTHER REACTION TO U.S.-LIBYAN FIGHTING

Lomeyko 'Condemns' U.S. Moves

LD252057 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1900 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] A briefing took place for Soviet and foreign journalists in Moscow today, in the press center of the USSR Foreign Ministry. Vladimir Borisovich Lomeyko, chief of the Press Department of the USSR Foreign Ministry, who spoke at the briefing, said in part:

[Begin recording] The USSR has learned with indignation of the latest provocative aggressive action against a sovereign state, Libya. The premeditated nature of this action is obvious. It can be seen from the fact that over a period of just under 3 months such a major power as the United States is carrying out its fourth demonstrative maneuver near the Libyan coast and is putting pressure on the sovereign state of Libya, threatening force and now using force.

No matter what false pretexts the U.S. Administration was advancing in its attempts to justify its provocative actions, it is quite clear that it is a question of attempts to legitimize its right to interfere in any region of the world, declaring it a sphere of its vital interests. The point is that deliberate actions are being undertaken, which aim to destabilize the situation in this region and to destabilize the whole system of international security.

These actions by the U.S. Administration cannot be assessed as other than a violation of the elementary norms of international law and as contrary to the UN Charter. This is in essence a clear manifestation of the policy of state terrorism, which is being conducted by the U.S. Administration in various hot spots on our planet and in a very dramatic manner now off the shores of Libya. It is also a matter of a manifestation of the policy of neoglobalism, a policy of blatant interference in the sovereign affairs of other peoples, an attempt to impose one's own will on other peoples by force.

This is based on nothing except disrespect for the sovereign rights of Libya whose policy, both domestic and in the international arena, is not to their liking because the state of Libya conducts its own sovereign, independent, and anti-imperialist course.

Soviet people declare their solidarity with Libya and resolutely condemn the actions of the U.S. military, which is exacerbating the situation not only in the region of the Mediterranean Sea, but which also threaten universal peace and universal international security as a whole. [end recording]

TASS Statement

LD251717 Moscow TASS in English 1707 GMT 25 Mar 86

["TASS Statement" -- TASS item identifier; quotation marks as received]

[Text] [No dateline as received] The U.S. Administration, in continuing its line towards the aggravation of the international situation, has perpetrated an aggressive action against Libya, a sovereign state. On the night of March 24/25, 1986, American combat ships and planes struck a number of Libyan targets.

The premeditated character of the incident leaves no doubts. For a long time, they in Washington have not concealed their hostile intentions with regard to Libya. American Naval and Air Force units were deployed practically permanently off the Libyan coast. In recent days, the concentration of the U.S. Armed Forces in that region has reached unprecedented dimensions. The heightening of military tension around Libya was accompanied by direct threats against it. And all that was because the progressive character of internal transformation in Libya, that country's anti-imperialist, independent course in the world arena do not suit Washington.

"Whatever the false pretexts Washington resorts to now, it will not manage to justify the piratic nature of its actions. Manifest are an overt policy of state terrorism, disregard for the U.N. Charter and for the generally recognized norms of international law, an attempt at imposing its will upon other peoples by force of arms and at destabilizing the situation in the countries which have embarked upon the road of independent development.

"The piratic action against Libya sharply aggravates the explosive as it is situation in the area, which may lead to grave consequences going beyond its boundaries.

"This also manifests the U.S. overall course towards interfering in the affairs of sovereign states, towards stirring up seats of tension in various parts of the world, and towards creating a threat to peace and to international security."

Washington clearly seeks to maintain and heighten tension in world affairs, so as to prevent the improvement of the international situation. Such actions cannot but cause universal concern and indignation. The world public must raise its voice in defence of the cause of peace, of the inalienable right of every people to decide its own destiny.

At this time of trial for Libya, the Soviet people express their solidarity with the Libyan people. The Soviet Union has been and remains on Libya's side in its just struggle for its freedom and independence. The Soviet Union thus resolutely condemns the United States aggressive actions and demands that they be stopped.

Fedorov Commentary

PM251639 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 26 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

["Topical Commentary" by A. Fedorov under the rubric "6th Fleet Against Libya": "Attack Planes Deliver Strike"]

[Text] Alarming news has come from Tripoli. According to a Libyan TV report U.S. carrier-based aircraft made an incursion into the country's airspace on 25 March over the Gulf of Sidra. After Libyan air defense facilities opened fire on the violators, U.S. 6th Fleet attack aircraft bombed the suburbs of Surt.

The United States has committed an act of premediated aggression against a sovereign Mediterranean state. It has prepared for this act over a long period. In the past 5 years the Pentagon has staged militarist games off the Libya coast 18 times. And every time it has been seeking a pretext for delivering a strike. A U.S. Air Force pilot named (Maclintock) described his part in trying to provoke Libyan into armed conflict thus: "I had to fly along the coast at 15,000 feet. Then I had to turn and fly in the direction of the carrier, then execute a turning maneuver back in the direction of the coast, and so on.... It seemed to me like I was playing the part of a sitting duck."

A powerful American naval armada is drawn up right now off the coast of the Libyan Jamahiriyah. It consists of over 40 warships, including 3 aircraft carriers with 240 planes aboard. No attempt is being made to conceal the provocative nature of the Pentagon's current maneuvers. As CBS TV informed us several days ago, quoting military department spokesman, "The U.S. Navy is going to challenge Libya in the Gulf of Sidra, essentially trying to provoke it into an attack against the United States." That provocation has now taken place.

The next attack is in the pipeline. According to foreign press reports the cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron — the very ships that violated the USSR state border in the Black Sea on 13 March -- are to enter the Gulf of Sidra and "carry out operations in direct proximity to the Libyan coast." What kind of operations? The details are not given. But let us recall that on 25 October 1983 the Caron was the first to approach the shores of Grenada and open fire on the island. Its salvoes signaled the start of American aggression against Grenada....

The American Administration is trying to justify the armed incursions against Libya by reference to the desire to end the "threat of terrorism" supposedly emanating from that country. This is a blatant lie! It is precisely Washington, and not Tripoli, that is pursuing a policy of state terrorism. The United States is discomposed by Libya's consistent anti-imperialist course and its principled positions on the Near East problem. That is why the White House is banging its fist and sending in attack planes against Libyan cities.

Shabayev on U.S. 'Brigandage'

LD251340 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1211 GMT 25 Mar 86

["The USA: A Threat to Universal Peace" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow, 25 Mar (TASS) — TASS political observer Boris Shabayev writes:

And so the United States has committed a fresh act of aggression, all the exceptionally dangerous consequences of which nobody is likely to take it up himself to foretell. A powerful naval group concentrated off the shores of Libya has made a rocket attack on the coastal town of Surt and vessels of the Libyan shore patrol have also been attacked. These are not now maneuvers, an NBC television commentator admits, but a real "one-sided war against Libya." "This has been a long time in the offing and finally it has happened," his colleague from ABC adds.

Any act of international brigandage and all the more one that is so overt and impudent, evokes a natural feeling of anger and indignation. However, one will have to refrain from emotion in order to assess the provocation in the Gulf of Sidra in the overall context of international relations.

The first thing that strikes one is the premeditated, planned nature of the American action. They are not only not trying to conceal this in Washington but they are even being defiant about it. The President, ABC again reports, has long been seeking occasions for "punishing" Libya and it is no secret that officials in Washington are pleased with what has happened. They sought the "occasion" so stubbornly that this year alone provocative military maneuvers were carried out five times off Libyan shores. The Pentagon finally sent 30 warships at one time into the Gulf of Sidra, including three strike aircraft carriers outfitted with 240 warplanes. Official members of the administration, the CBS TV company reports, were sure that this time a conflict would occur, as U.S. naval vessels were given the order "to go extremely close to the Libyan coast."

The second thing to which attention ought to be drawn to is the impudent self-assurance and unceremoniousness of the American Administration, clearly blinded by its doctrine of neoglobalism. Washington tries to "justify," without any inhibitions, the crudest violations of norms of international law, whether in the Gulf of Sidra, or off the coast of the Crimea, in Nicaraguan waters or in the Persian Gulf, by referring to some kind of U.S. "right" to treat sovereign states as if they were an American state, gone to pot.

Just ponder the essence of the statement made by G. Will, one of the pillars of Washington propaganda: "We are playing the role of an international policeman and international law cannot exist without such a policeman." And, for the benefit of those who are most slow-witted, Will explained that the "episode" like the one that has taken place in the Gulf of Sidra should prove to the whole world that the United States can, he said, set "certain limits on the conduct" of countries such as Libya, Nicaragua or others, as it sees fit. To put it more simply -- to dictate to them policies that are convenient for Washington.

Thus, it is Libya that is being shelled today -- but they have in their sights all those who do not wish to play the role of a horse under the American cowboy, or forgo their national dignity and sovereignty.

The third point is the extremely dangerous efforts of the present U.S. Administration to subordinate its foreign policy actions to tasks of internal policy. Each time it undertakes one or another military-political adventure beyond the U.S. border, the White House pursues a fully determined domestic political goal: To foment an atmosphere of militarism and chauvinism inside the country and extort more billions of dollars for the arms race. Let us turn to Will again: The action against Libya, he says candidly, should show the taxpayers that their money, by being used on arms, enables the United States "to maintain superpower status and demonstrate American might throughout the world."

Well, what about the indisputable fact that our world has in any case already become too fragile for one to permit oneself such brazen playing with fire? What about the increased responsibility of the superpowers for its destiny, which is verbally acknowledged, it would seem, in Washington, too? The answer suggests itself: Words do not match deeds in the White House. And this divergence is by no means an internal U.S. affair any more; it bodies a threat to universal peace and that means to life itself on the planet.

Bogachev Chides 'Provocations'

LD251941 Moscow TASS in English 1928 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- By TASS military writer Vladimir Bogachev.

U.S. President Richard Nixon once complained that he had to feign insanity in times of crisis to compel the world to believe in the United States' readiness to go to any extremes in using force. It seems that the present American Administration has no need for a feint in perpetrating insane actions. Its essence is graphically revealed in that, and it takes pleasure in balancing on the brink of an abyss.

Washington managed to compress the latest series of its "pleasures" into an extremely brief period of time, challenging all of mankind, as if flaunting its insantity. The premediated violation by American warships of the USSR's state border off the Crimean coasts, the nuclear weapon test conducted contrary to world public demands, and the provocative actions against Libya -- all these peace-endangering adventures took place in less than two weeks.

Not long ago, the "chicken-out" automobile game was popular in the United States. Two cars were driven at top speed on a narrow road towards each other. The driver who was the first to steer aside lost. Very often, the "winner" found himself in a hospital, or in a graveyard. It seems that Washington is now inviting the entire world to play the idiotic American game.

Outrageous provocations will not give political gains to their organizers. But one should not belittle their danger. This calls for great vigilance on the part of all peoples in the world, all sober-minded people on earth.

U.S. Seeks NATO Involvement

[Text] Rome March 25 TASS -- The United States is trying to draw West European NATO countries into the armed aggression which it has unleashed against Libya. According to the Italian news agency, a NATO base at Bagnoli near Naples. [sentence as received] The news agency points out that this happened after the air and naval forces of the USA and Libya clashed in the Gulf of Sidra.

Speaking in the Senate, Bettino Craxi, chairman of Italy's Council of Ministers, said he had met with the U.S. ambassador to Italy today and handed over to him the Italian Government's message addressed to the U.S. Administration. In the message the Italian Government points out the need "to take measures to avoid a recurrence of military clashes which may lead to still more difficult and uncontrolled situations."

Walters' Remarks Refuted

LD260649 Moscow TASS in English 0629 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 26 TASS -- Vernon Walters, U.S. ambassador at the U.N., has made a cynical and at the same time futile attempt to justify the gross act of aggression against Libya in violation of all the norms of the international law. His letter to the chairman of the U.N. Security Council is full of all kinds of evasions. He writes about firm restraint allegedly displayed by the U.S. pirates, about its "right to self-defense" and about the "response to hostile actions" of Libya against the ships of the U.S. Sixth Fleet which had no evil intentions with regard to that country, as though this extremely dangerous armed action of the U.S., the next in turn [as received], were staged not off Libya's shores, but close to the American coast. It is pointed out in the U.N. circles that the U.S. mission at the U.N. has to invent plausible excuses for U.S. actions in the atmosphere of indignation of the world community over the policy of state terrorism pursued by the U.S., to think beforehand over various pretexts for the continuation of the armed actions with which the U.S. ambassador at the U.N. openly threatens Libya.

Soviet UN Envoy Cited

LD260037 Tripoli Television Service in Arabic 2015 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] The Soviet ambassador to the United Nations has condemned the U.S. military aggression against the Jamahiriyah. He reaffirmed that this aggression is a clear violation of international law.

The Soviet ambassador, in a statement made today in New York, said that the U.S. premeditated military escalation against the Jamahiriyah is because of the Jamahiriyah's brave and principled attitudes vis-a-vis the Arab issue and questions of liberation the world over -- attitudes which are not to the liking of the imperialist U.S. Government. The Soviet ambassador referred to U.S. hypocrisy which was apparent in the Reagan administration's claim of protecting navigation in the Mediterranean and this administration's flagrant violation of Soviet and Bulgarian territorial waters in the Black Sea. The ambassador wondered: Who has asked the United States to protect navigation? Who has asked the United States to install itself as a police guard in the region? How can small Libya threaten the United States?

FURTHER REACTION TO BLACK SEA NAVAL INCIDENT

'Provocation' Assailed

PM251625 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 22 Mar 86 First Edition p 3

[A. Mozgovoy article under the rubric "Of Interest to the Reader"; "Flouting the Law"]

[Text] These days the editorial office is receiving many telephone calls: Readers are interested in the details of the incident that occurred in the Black Sea off the south coast of the Crimea. N. Sedova of Moscow asks, in particular: "On what grounds did U.S. warships violate the USSR state border?"

As already reported, last Tuesday the USSR Foreign Ministry passed to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow a protest note at the violation of our country's state border by American warships in the Black Sea off the south coast of the Crimea on 13 March this year. The note emphasizes that that action by the U.S. Navy was of a demonstrative and defiant nature and pursued clearly provocative ends.

The U.S. Navy department hastened to issue a statement in which it tried to justify the insolent sally with references to the right of ships' peaceful passage through another state's territorial waters. Yes, such a right does exist. And it is in accordance with Soviet legislation. However, peaceful passage is not permitted for the perpetration of any actions detrimental to peace or to the usages and security of the Soviet state.

The peaceful passage of ships is also rigidly governed by the 1982 International Law of the Sea Convention. This document contains a detailed list of actions that may reasonably be categorized as violating peace. These include, in particular: "gathering information to the detriment of a littoral state's defense and security; propaganda with a view to encroaching on a littoral state's defense or security." This was precisely what the American cruiser Yorktown and the destroyer Caron were doing off the Crimean coast. "Two American warships equipped with numerous electronic instruments," THE NEW YORK TIMES writes, "entered Soviet territorial waters in the Black Sea for the purpose of testing the Soviet defense system." That is, we have here an instance of gathering information to the detriment of the USSR's defense and security.

The same NEW YORK TIMES also points to the propaganda nature of the "Black Sea raid" by the Yorktown and the Caron. "During previous incidents when the United States flexed its military muscles, so officials (in the U.S. Administration -- A.M.) claim, the President's popularity increased sharply, and his policies gained new support in Congress." And the White House is now in dire need of such "support," since the Republican administration's request for further astronomic military appropriations for fiscal 1987 is being held up by the legislators.

By organizing the provocation off the Crimea's shores the Pentagon is endeavoring to inflame militarist passions in the United States and push its budget through Congress, whose implementation undoubtedly threatens international security, including the USSR's security.

It is also worth dwelling particularly on another aspect of what happened. The point is that the Yorktown and the Caron should not have entered the Black Sea at all. In accordance with the 1936 convention on the regime of the Black Sea straits, in peacetime only light surface warships of states without a Black Sea coastline enjoy the right of freedom of passage through those straits. Those warships "which do not have guns with a caliber over 203mm" are in this class. The American cruiser and destroyer are equipped with Harpoon, standard, and ASROC missiles which considerably exceed that limit. What is more, they also have nuclear ammunition.

In other words, the U.S. Navy's "flexing of muscles" off Soviet shores has nothing to do with the right of peaceful passage and is a gross violation of international conventions and a shameless provocation.

'Gravest' Consequences Hinted

LD220440 Moscow in English to North America 2300 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Commentary by news analyst Vladislav Kozyakov]

[Text] The United States Embassy in Sofia has this week been handed a note of protest about a violation of a northern sector of the Bulgarian national frontier in the Black Sea by American naval vessels on the 16th of this month. Here's comment by news analyst Vladislav Kozyakov:

This United States violation of another country's frontier is, unfortunately, not a rare occurrence, not by a long shot. This latest infringement of the Bulgarian frontier by American naval vessels is the fourth in 2 years. These actions, as the Bulgarian protest note to the United States Embassy says, are of an arrogant character and pursue patently provocative hostile ends. Just before this incident off Bulgarian shores, American warships violated the territorial waters of the Soviet Union off the southern coast of the Crimean Peninsula. They intruded into the 12-mile zone of Soviet territorial waters. Moreover, this was clearly done on orders from senior United States Administration officials as part of a spy operation to gather intelligence about Soviet defenses. These action by American warships likewise evoked a protest. Soviet note described them as provocative and said such actions were fraught with grave consequences.

Parallel with these actions the United States continues naval maneuvers off the shores of Libya involving carriers and other naval vessels. These war games are being held despite repeated protests from Libya and other countries in the region and even despite warnings from a number of political leaders in the United States itself to the effect that this show of strength near the Libyan coast could lead to an armed conflict.

If we took the last several years, all the American violations of other countries' sovereignty would be hard to even list. Recall for instance the sending of the South Korean airliner, the KAL 007, to spy on Soviet defense installations in the Kamchatka Peninsula and on Sakhalin Island, or the mining of Nicaraguan harbors, which was done on written orders by the United States President himself.

Evidently, generally accepted rules of international law and respect for the sovereignty and national frontiers of other countries are seen by the present United States Administration as cramping its style. Such a policy, if continued, could entail the gravest possible consequences for nations, not least for the American nation itself.

BOVIN DENOUNCES U.S. SUPPORT FOR CONTRAS

PM251325 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Morning Edition pp 4-5

[Article by IZVESTIYA political observer A. Bovin: "Hysterics in Washington"]

[Text] I was given an album of political cartoons in Managua. One of them -- drawn by the Mexican artist Jorge Carreno -- is on this page. The correlation of forces is to scale, so to speak. [cartoon shows an elephant holding a flag with the initials "R.R." on it, standing on a chair, and looking panic-stricken at a mouse wearing a sombrero]

It is all very well to laugh, but the impression is that Washington really is shaking with fear. At any rate, it is a long time since it has seen the kind of hysterics that have occurred in the last couple of weeks. The White House pulled out all stops in its efforts to secure congressional agreement to give the "contras" military and financial aid worth $100 million. Senators and congressmen were intimidated in the most direct sense of the word. Those who take exception to the President's Nicaraguan adventure were branded anti-American, unpatriotic, supporters of communism, and protectors of Moscow's interests.

Many were successfully intimidated and made to abandon common sense. For all that, the House of Representatives rejected the President's demand.

But the White House has not given up. The psychological attack on Congress and on the public continues. And since the difference between the U. S. and Nicaraguan weight categories, apparent not only to the cartooniest, gives the White House's behavior a note of paranoia, the administration is seeking to demonstrate that the "Nicaraguan threat" is merely the outward expression of much more dangerous "threats." Judging by the U.S. President's speeches, the chain of evidence is as follows.

If a "second Cuba" or "second Libya" appears in Central America, then "Soviet military bases" will be constructed there, right on the U.S. "doorstep."

If "Soviet military bases" appear, the "small and fragile democracies" in Central America will collapse. If the "small and fragile democracies" collapse, the threat of a Panama Canal blockade will emerge and there will be a real prospect of an attack on Mexico and a "massive migration" of refugees to the United States.

All this, R. Reagan claims, would be a "strategic catastrophe." And that's not all. If "hostile, aggressive, communist states" emerge near the U.S. boarders and if, therefore, the "Reds" hold sway in the Caribbean, the United States will be unable to defend Western Europe and Israel. And the "Russians" will take control of them.

No doubt the reader thinks that I am parodying the President. Nothing of the sort. It is a concise but accurate exposition of the gist of several speeches by the White House head. And at that level, at the level proposed by Washington, it is foolish to argue. Neither arguments nor logic will do any good. One can only express regret ... Last year the Washington Institute for Policy Studies published a report with the striking title: "A Challenge to Congress: Reagan's Record of Lies and Illegal Acts in Central America." The report lists 70 occasions when the administration has misled Congress. These figures are now obviously out of date.

The U.S. President said that the Sandinists are "giving support in the form of military training, safe refuge, communications, forged documents, safe transit, and occasionally in the form of weapons" to radicals from many Latin American countries, including Brazil. The response to this was an official representation by the Brazilian Foreign Ministry and indignant articles in Brazilian papers. In an editorial entitled "An Infantile Speech," the paper FOLHA DE SAO PAULO stressed that R. Reagan's speech was a further demonstration of the "primitive and ridiculous nature of U.S. arguments and the irrationality of U.S. strategy in the Central American crisis."

There is more. The President appeared on television showing a photograph of, he said, a "senior assistant of one of the nine commanders... loading on an aircraft an illegal cargo of drugs destined for the United States." There was a response from the U.S. narcotics adminstration repudiating what the President had said.

The situation is as follows.

When R. Reagan requested the first (officially the first, that is) $27 million for the "contras." member of the House of Representatives Norman Mineta said: "We must not try to fool people. To be frank, the administration is asking Congress to allocate U.S. aid for the overthrow of another country's government." That is precisely it. And practically everyone in Latin America knows it. The brazen U.S. policy is even provoking protests from politicians who are ideologically remote from the Sandinists.

Colombian President Belisario Betancur: "I believe that such an initiative as President Reagan's request for $100 million is a mistake. I know that we can achieve more through talks."

Peruvian President Alan Garcia will break off relations with any state that attacks Nicaragua, "as if it was aggression against Peru."

Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoyo: Our country will not allow its territory to be used "for the transfer of U.S. aid to Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries."

Maybe the White House has the support of Stroessner and Pinochet. But that is the White House's bad luck.

Perhaps it is worth mentioning another U.S. argument. The President, a "senior administration spokesman" said, sees the forthcoming Congress vote as a "turning point," an event of importance for the whole of U.S. foreign policy and for the U.S. ability to demonstrate "the strength and firmness that will make the Soviet Union carry out a fundamental reassessment of its political options for actions in the Third World." Now that is a serious argument. But I am going to have to disappoint the "senior spokesmen." The purpose and nature of the USSR's actions are not determined by "strength and firmness" at all. The USSR's foreign policy is determined by the Soviet Union's vital interests, our notions of right and justice, our desire for peaceful cooperation with all states.

As for the "strength and firmness" displayed by America in order to overthrow the legitimate government of a sovereign country they will leave Washington no better off than when it started as has happened more than once in the past.

U.S. BUSINESSMEN URGE EXPANDED TRADE WITH USSR

[TASS report: "USSR-U.S.: The Voice of Business People"]

[Text] Washington, 21 Mar -- The expansion of trade and economic ties between the USSR and the United States is possible and desirable. This idea was stressed by the representatives of American business circles speaking at the opening of a forum on American-Soviet trade relations organized by the American Committee on East-West accord.

"The Soviet-American summit meeting cleared the way to expanding bilateral ties and trade," Donald Kendall, chairman of the board of directors of Pepsico stated. "We are interested in strengthening bilateral ties."

For his part, Edwin Dodd, director of Owen-Illinois Inc., who has many years of experience of trading with the USSR, stressed that "there are many opportunities" for expanding it. At the same time he noted that certain actions by the Washington administration can have highly adverse consequences for the establishment of normal Soviet-American trade contacts.

Addressing the session, U.S. Secetary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige noted that certain prospects for expanding American-Soviet trade have opened up.

He pointed out that within "the framework of the existing rules" American companies can carry out trade in equipment for agriculture, the forestry, mining, and paper industries, environmental control devices, and other kinds of equipment. M. Baldrige noted that the volume of American exports to the USSR this year will, as expected, amount to around $2.3 billion.

NEW TIMES PUBLISHES INTERVIEW WITH BABRAK KARMAL

PM241035 Moscow NEW TIMES in English No 10, 17 Mar 86 pp 7-8

[Interview with Afghanistan President Babrak Karmal by Dmitriy Zgerskiy: "Babrak Karmal: Ardous Path, Worthy Goal" — date, place not given]

[Text] [Zgerskiy] First of all, Comrade Karmal, what are your impressions as a guest at the 27th Congress, which is such an important event for every Soviet citizen?

[Karmal] I must say that the 27th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union is a milestone not only in the life of the U.S.S.R., but of all the progressive mankind. Initial reactions have already shown the deep impression the Political Report by Mikhail Gorbachev has produced worldwide, especially amongst progressive forces. It was quintessentially Leninist and reflected the leading and guiding role the CPSU is playing in all spheres of life in Soviet society, in political, scientific, cultural and other areas. Moreover, the report is to my mind a landmark in the evolution of political thought.

It is hard to single out any individual element in the political report and other congress documents as being the most significant. But it is safe to stress one important aspect: to-day when the Damocles sword of nuclear catastrophe hangs over the planet, the 27th CPSU Congress has taken a constructive stand in defense of peace, for the security of all peoples. I believe that the position of the Soviet Union is of truly immense significance in the defence of peace at a time when the destiny of human civilization hangs in the balance.

We are proud that our delegation should have taken part in the work of the 27th Congress. I am already aware of the profound satisfaction inspired in my revolutionary country by that part of the Political Report which offers a logical and perfectly valid assessment of the situation that has now taken shape in Afghanistan and on its borders.

Yes, we have to repel aggressive incursions on the part of Afghan reactionaries backed by imperialism. However, we are today still more confident of the victory of the revolution and the fact that our party and government have taken up a correct and principled position. That is why they enjoy the support of the great Soviet Union. It can be said that our path is arduous, but our goal is worthy.

We should like to express our appreciation to Comrade Gorbachev for the support and understanding of our position expressed in the Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress.

[Zgerskiy] You have said that Afghanistan has to repel the incursions on the part of reactionaries backed by imperialism. Could you tell us about it in more detail?

[Karmal] I'll try to be specific. About 150 centres have been set up in Pakistan, Iran and China which annually train 40,000-50,000 counterrevolutionary bandits for subversive acts against the Democratic Afghanistan.

Now about Washington's role. We are speaking of an undeclared war waged by the U.S. against Afghanistan. You can judge for yourself: in recent years the American government has allocated almost $1.5 billion to the criminal war against our people.

In addition to that, Japan, the F.R.G., Saudi Arabia and a number of reactionary international organizations annually finance Afghan counterrevolution to the tune of a billion dollars. China and Pakistan have made available to counterrevolutionaries vast quantities of hardware, military equipment, and heavy weaponry, including missiles.

And so, it came about that the PDPA became a fighting party. It has managed to organize an appropriate rebuff to internal and external enemies of the revolution and arouse the people to defend their country. Almost two thirds of the Party members have been sent to join the armed forces. Fighting the dushmans shoulder-to-shoulder with the army and people's militia are local self-defence units, tribal voluntary forces, and regiments and battalions of border malishes (volunteer people's fighters helping the frontier guards).

We cannot but speak of our losses. The undeclared war imposed on us is the gravest trial for the young republic and its long-suffering people. The counterrevolutionaries have destroyed and burned 39 state-owned enterprises, 250 mosques and prayer houses, 2,707 schools and 130 medical centres. Material damage amounts to 36 billion afghani (100 afghani equals 1.47 rubles -- ed). Now one in every two budget afghani, one in two metres of fabric, one in two loaves of bread go to the soldiers of the revolution, to the defence of the country. A peaceful country which had not waged war against anyone since 1919 has increasing numbers of women wearing black mourning kerchiefs. At the suggestion of the wives and mothers of dead patriots we have established a Union of Widows, probably the only in the world.

As regards the question of bringing an end to the undeclared war, the Party and the government are taking every measure to settle the Afghanistan situation by peaceful political means. The main content of these measures is a complete end to and guaranteed non-resumption of armed and any other outside interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan. We are trying to solve these problems at the Geneva talks. However, despite repeated proposals from our side, Pakistan has rejected direct negotiations. In Geneva we took an important step and presented the Pakistani delegation, through Diego Cordovez, personal representative of the U.N. secretary-general, with a summary of the draft document on the interconnection between agreements on non-interference, guarantees and refugees and the withdrawal of the limited Soviet military contingent. But this time again, the Pakistani side, under pressure from the U.S.A., has failed to reciprocate.

[Zgerskiy] Comrade Karmal, you have stated on more than one occasion that external imperialist forces must be opposed by the unity of the Afghan people. What is being done in your republic to broaden the social base of your popular revolution!

[Karmal] Our Party is carrying out work amongst the people in three directions. First, the strengthening of its own ranks. More and more patriots, coming forward from all social strata, are linking their destinies with that of the Party. It now has about 150,000 members, eight times more than before the revolution. We are proud that every year more and more workers, peasants and artisans are joining the PDPA. They account for almost 35 per cent of Party membership. More than half of the candidate members of the party are young men and women who have passed through the school of the Democratic Youth Organization of Afghanistan. At the same time the Party is being joined by representatives of older generations, who bring with them the heroic traditions of the peoples and tribes.

As women become more active in social, political and economic life their influx into the Party increases. Over the past six years the number of women in the PDPA has doubled to reach 12,000.

I want to note that Afghanistan is a multinational country and accordingly the PDPA is a multinational party. Representatives of 20 nationalities, ethnic groups and tribes are united in the Party ranks.

The party has determined a new approach to expanding the social base which envisages:

-- establishing contacts, through constructive dialogue and cooperation, with non-revolutionary groups and elements and with part of those forces that have so far been hostile to us:

-- creating socio-political organizations and groups which, while not opposing the goals of the revolution, and observing the humanitarian laws of the Democratic Afghanistan, would help realize the aspirations and interests of various social strata and classes;

-- broadening the composition of the Revolutionary Council and the Council of Ministers, the local bodies of power, by involving patriotically-minded representatives of all strata and groups of the population, notably workers, peasants, servicemen, intellectuals, artisans, clergy, chiefs and elders, entrepreneurs and traders, scientists, cultural workers, women, and former members of counterrevolutionary bands who have gone over to the side of the revolution.

These are not mere declarations of intent. Work is being done. During the past three months the Revolutionary Council, the supreme government body, has been increased by 79 people, to more than twice its former size. The Council of Ministers has been increased by 25 people. Seventy per cent of the newly elected and appointed members of the top bodies are non-party people. There is now every ground for saying that the leading tribal and religious authorities, scientists and cultural workers are involved in running the revolutionary state with the workers and peasants.

As for the elections to local government bodies, these are the first genuinely free democratic elections in the history of Afghanistan. True, we have had to carry them out in stages because of the tense situation and the undeclared war. Elections have already been held in a third of the provinces. And imaging, despite the difficulties created by aggression and counterrevolution, 90 per cent of the electorate went to the polls. Workers and peasants constitute 49.2 per cent of the newly elected jirgahs (local councils). Amongst those elected by the people are representatives of all classes, strata and groups in the population, most of them non-Party people. For the first time women have been elected to the jirgahs.

Finally, the social base is being broadened by means of the main links in the political system, the mass public organizations.

Since the revolution, membership of the trade unions has increased from 28,000 to 280,000, of the Democratic Youth Organization from 5,000 to 155,000, and the Democratic Women's Organization from 3,000 to 50,000. The Party has realized its ideal of uniting all progressive and patriotic forces under the banner of the revolution and had initiated the creation of the National Fatherland Front of Afghanistan. Today the Front has about 800,000 members which include members of trade unions, women's and youth organizations, unions of creative intellectuals, the Consultative Economic Council of the D.R.A., the councils of unlemas and clergy, jirgahs, tribal representatives and the D.R.A. organizations for peace and solidarity, all in all, 18 organizations and associations. The Fatherland Front also includes individual members who are not affiliated to the Party or any organization.

[Zgerskiy] What have you achieved on the economic front!

[Karmal] Let me make comparisons with the prerevolutionary level. The generation of electric energy has increased 1.5 times, the production of building materials has risen fivefold and the volume of freight haulage tenfold.

Land and water reform is under way, and since its inception 335,000 peasant familes have received plots of land. Furthermore, the revolution has relieved peasants of burdensome debts to feudal landlords and money-lenders. The cooperative movement is gaining in scope.

Even so, I have to admit that the Party's influence amongst the peasants is insufficient. The number of PDPA members among the peasants is still low. At the new stage of the revolution the Party and government are carrying out patient and purposeful work amongst the peasants regarding land and water reform both as an important goal of the revoultion and as means of involving the majority of the population in democratic change, making them genuine allies of the working class. This strengthens revolutionary power, extends its social base and normalizes the situation.

The Central Committee of the Party and the Council of Ministers have developed draft Main Guidelines for the economic and social development of the country from 1986 to 1990, which envisages a 25-percent increase in the gross national product and a further rise in living standards. We are committed to strengthening the public sector which at present accounts for over 60 per cent of industrial output.

Wages and salaries have been raised twice. The people's incomes have grown 1.9 times. A total of about 400,000 square meters of housing has been built, financed by the government. The number of hospital beds has increased by 80 per cent, and the number of doctors, by 40 per cent.

Before the revolution 90 per cent of the population of Afghanistan could neither read nor write. We have built 409 schools and the number of kindergartens has increased ten times. We have established 13 Motherland boarding schools for children whose parents died fighting for the revolution.

Mention must be made of the extensive assistance the Soviet Union is rendering us. Suffice it to say that 20 economic projects have been built, or are under construction in Afghanistan with Soviet assistance. Public sector enterprises, set up with Soviet assistance, account for about 75 percent of our industrial output.

For our people, friendship with the U.S.S.R. is not only a noble historical tradition, not only a national principle, but a vital political necessity. It is a reliable guarantee of the terrirotial integrity, independance and sovereignty of Afghanistan as a free, peaceful, nonaligned state.

FURTHER ON SOLOMENTSEV CSSR VISIT, CPCZ CONGRESS

PRAVDA Preview

PM241227 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Dispatch by special correspondents B. Averchenko and S. Vtorushin: "From Congress to Congress"]

[Text] Prague, 23 Mar -- Spring has come to the streets of the Czechoslovak capital. The Prague parks and gardens have been filled with the sound of birds singing and the first blooms are appearing. But these spring motifs are not the attribute of nature alone.

Special elation can be felt now in public life and the people's mood. The 17th CPCZ Congress begins its work in Prague today. The Czechoslovak people link with the name of the Communist Party the most dynamic period of their history and the main, determining achievements in the development of science and culture and the democratization of society.

In the less than 4 decades that have elapsed since the victory of the February 1948 revolution, the country has changed out of all recognition. The volume of industrial output, for instance, has increased 13 times and agriculture output has increased 120 percent. In this time about 3.5 million apartments and thousands of schools, hospitals, libraries, and kindergartens have been constructed. The people's living standard has risen many times over. Czechoslovakia has won high international prestige. It now maintains diplomatic and trade relations with over 140 states and is the author of a whole series of initiatives aimed at strengthening peace, security, and cooperation among peoples.

Every CPCZ congress is a milestone on the path of the country's further headway and the consolidation of the party's prestige and leading role in Czechoslovak society. At the same time it is an important event in the family of fraternal peoples of the socialist community countries and entire world communist movement.

The CPCZ's present supreme forum is beginning its work after the 27th CPSU Congress with whose decisions and materials Czechoslovak Communists are attentively acquainting themselves.

"The results of the party forum in Moscow inspire us and instill confidence and optimism," Hero of Socialist Labor Antonin Mlady, a delegate to the 17th CPCZ Congress and team leader at the ("CKD-Kompressory") plant, says. "We know how it keenly raised questions of the accelerated development of the economy, the intensification of production, and the enhancement of the party's role and prestige in society. At our congress we will discuss complex tasks and problems. To win the competition with capitalism and defend the cause of peace we must tirelessly strengthen the economy and develop science and technology."

Greeting the present party forum, the CSSR Communists are summing up the results of the work done since the 16th CPCZ Congress. They note that as a whole the main tasks projected in the field of the economy and social development have been fulfilled and for some avenues they have been overfulfilled. The country has taken one more step forward on the path of the further consolidation of the material-technical base of socialism.

The Czechoslovak press is citing many instances and examples showing the results of the quest, initiative, and skilled, thoughtful economic management and also the presence of major reserves. Thus in the last 5-year plan fuel and energy expenditure in the national economy dropped by 1.7 percent a year as against the 0.9 percent envisaged by the plan. This result could only be achieved thanks to the rationalization and intensification of production. The movement for economy and thrift played an important part here.

The republic's rural workers achieved marked results. The 5-year plan for the production of agricultural output was overfulfilled by 4.2 percent. For instance, in the past 3 years the annual grain harvest has been over 11.5 million tons while average yields reached 46 quintals per hectare. The stockraisers also worked well. In the 5-year period they produced 483,000 tons of meat and more than 3.3 million tons of milk over and above the plan.

But the Communists still see many opportunities for improving production. This was mentioned by delegates at many regional, city, and provincial report and election conferences held on the eve of the 17th congress. They pointed to the need to make better use of existing resources and opportunities and to transfer the economy more rapidly to an intensive footing. The conference in Kolin region was characteristic in this respect.

"In the 5-year period we have succeeded in raising the grain crop yield from 40 to 54.4 quintals per hectare," (Yozef Rzhiga), secretary of the regional party committee, says. "Much has also been done in stockraising. A decisive part in achieving these results was played by the fact that the party organizations have embarked in earnest on the implementation of the program to intensify production, have stepped up control over the introduction of the best methods and means of work, and are themselves setting an example of highly productive work."

"He who struggles not in words but in deeds to accelerate the development of production unfailingly finds opportunities and achieves success," the conference delegates noted.

"The key to success today is scientific-technical progress at every enterprise and in every laboratory," Jiri Svoboda, director of the "Tesla-Kolin" plant, says. "We have considerably shortened the 'idea-planning-production of new item' chain and thanks to this have sharply accelerated the assimilation of new types of output."

Examining the activity of the party committees and bureaus for the period under review, in their speeches at meetings and conferences the Communists devoted great attention to the improvement and amelioration of ideological work, which should accord with present-day needs and requirements and comply with the next tasks of socialist building. The speakers pointed to the importance of being concerned for young people and their ideological tempering.

The report and election campaign in the CPCZ was marked by the growth of the political activeness and labor initiative of Communists and nonparty people. The majority of speeches at the conferences were marked by a specific and businesslike examination of urgent tasks, introduced a critical spirit to preparation for the party congress, and intensified the desire to eliminate shortcomings more rapidly.

Socialist competition has acquired new scope. The precongress initiative of Prague's "CKD-Elektrotechnika," "Technometra" and "Kotire" industrial automation plant enterprises aimed at accelerating scientific-technical progress has resounded throughout the country.

The initiators of the venture set the goal of reducing the time taken to develop and assimilate the production of new equipment, sharply improve its quality, and develop the modernization of shops and sectors. Here is what Frantisek (Batsek), chief of the Prague CPCZ City Committee industrial section, says in this connection:

"The people of Prague are struggling to turn the capital into a modern socialist city. We have considered to a considerable extent in resolving many complex problems. Primarily the transport problem. New bridges and roads have been constructed and a subway has been commissioned. A very large amount of work has been done to improve the services sphere. Now we must modernize present-day industry. Here we set the task of ensuring that modernization is implemented not only by assimilating centralized captial investments but mainly as a result of initiative from below and the revelation of local reserves."

The Prague people's initiative has been widely disseminated. Over 100 very large enterprises in various regions of the country have associated themselves to it. The city committee cited the following example.

Five robotized sectors appeared at the "CKD-Trakce" plant. The robots made it possible to save raw and semifinished materials and energy worth over 3.5 million korunas a year and also released a large number of workers.

"The movement to modernize production and improve the technical standard of articles is geared to the long term. We will work on this throughout the 5-year plan and beyond," our interlocutors said.

Czechoslovakia is a full member of the socialist community. It takes an active part in the activity of CMEA and the Warsaw Pact and is deepening its multifaceted economic and scientific-technical cooperation with the fraternal socialist countries. This is helping it to develop the economy stably, to resolve many complex problems more successfully, and to overcome the difficulties which arise. The CSSR fully supports the process of accelerating socialist economic integration and the implementation of the CMEA countries' comprehensive program of scientific-technical progress through the year 2000.

Our Czechoslovak friends rate highly their relations of fraternal collaboration with the Soviet Union and advocate their further expansion and intensification. Forms of cooperation like direct ties, production sharing, and the creation of joint enterprises are being developed increasingly broadly. The joint Czechoslovak-Soviet "robot" scientific-technical association has been in operation for a year now. Its collective has created several prototypes of modern equipment.

Production sharing is being deepened. In Kolin City we visited the "Frigera" plant. Refrigerator units for refrigerator trucks are its main export.

"We send a large proportion of these items to the USSR," Lubomir (Boloubek), secretary of the enterprise party committee, said. "I will not be exaggerating if I say that cooperation with Soviet friends has given our plant a second life. Previously we made units for our own 'Orlican' enterprise, which supplies finished refrigerator trucks to the USSR. Now a similar plant has been constructed in the Soviet Union. And we must make refrigerator units for two enterprises at once. We have had to expand production and accelerate its modernization."

Such concerns gladden the Czechoslovak machine builders. These ties are also to our advantage. Production sharing not only strengthens the two countries' cooperation, it also helps to make better use of scientific-technical and production potential and to make more rapid headway.

Under the spring sunshine, golden Prague looks particularly beautiful and elegant. Today the bunting of the state flag and the purple banners is fluttering over its streets and squares. Delegates to the Communists' supreme forum are converging on the capital from all corners of the republic. The Prague people are warmly welcoming the foreign guests who are coming to the congress representing the communist and workers parties and various revolutionary and national liberation movements. They are welcoming as their closest friends the Soviet envoys -- the CPSU delegation headed by M.S. Solomentsev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the CPSU Central Committee Party Control Committee.

The party of the Czechoslovak Communists has come to its 17th congress organizational stengthened and cohesive, in close union with the people. It has a clear policy and a firm course. It is full of energy and the determination to raise its activity to the level of the requirements of the present stage of building the new society.

Solomentsev Speaks

LD251922 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1030 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Excerpts] Comrade Solomentsev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, chairman of the CPSU Central Committee Party Control Committee, head of the CPSU delegation, spoke today at the 17th Congress of the Czechoslovak Communist Party and was warmly welcomed by those assembled. He said in part: We listened with great interest to the CPCZ Central Committee political report delivered by Comrade Gustav Husak. This profound and weighty document sums up the results of the work of your party and people in the past 5 years.

In spite of all the differences in the concrete conditions of the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia, we have common needs: the need to accelerate the pace and raise the tempo of social and economic development and fully uncover the enormous potential which socialism contains. The strategy of acceleration, which was first put forward by the CPSU Central Committee plenum last April, has become the core of the decisions of our party's 27th congress.

The significance of the congress is determined by the very contents of the crucial stage in which our country finds itself. Characteristic of this stage is the courageous, innovative, and genuinely revolutionary approach to the complex problems we are facing on the eve of the 21st century. The congress, which took place in a spirit of creative Marxism-Leninism and Bolshevik traditions, has armed the Communists and all Soviet people with a clear vision of the prospects for social development.

The program documents of the 27th congress, Comrade Solomentsev continued, express the resolve of the CPSU to contiune to steadfastly expand and deepen cooperation with the communist and workers parties of the fraternal countries, and to contribute in every way to strengthening their unity. There is no need to speak of how great the importance of such unity is in the current situation. It is gladdening that relations between the CPSU and the CPCZ are a great example of socialist internationalism.

Clear new evidence of this was provided by the recent Moscow meeting of the leaders of the two parties, Comrades Gorbachev and Husak, which took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and complet unity of views.

Quite recently we witnessed a brilliant experiment, the investigation of Halley's comet by space instruments which were designed and equipped by the efforts of the USSR, Czechoslovakia, and a number of countries. This is an example of how progressive technological thinking has found and must find a worthy humanitarian use.

At the present time, however, this involves only individual examples of this kind. Unfortunately, human intellect and vast material resource are being wasted on something else: Aggressive imperialist circles are continuing to whip up the arms race on earth and are not giving up their intention to spread it into space. It is quite natural that mankind will not be able to feel secure until this is ended.

The Soviet Union will use any opportunity to halt the tendency of the growing danger of war. In this noble endeavor we will, as we have in the past, act in close unity with socialist Czechoslovakia and the other fraternal countries, and cooperate actively with all progressive and peace-loving forces. Our good will and the solidarity and support of the countries of the socialist community will continue to be on the side of the peoples struggling for freedom and independence.

More on Address

LD261010 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1520 GMT 25 Mar 86

[From the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] The 17th CPCZ Congress is continuing its work in Prague. The congress was addressed today by the head of the CPSU delegation, Comrade Solomentsev. He described to those assembled the work of our party's 27th congress and the ardent support with which the Soviet people welcomed its decisions. Further on Comrade Solomentsev said in particular:

[Begin recording] The program documents of the party's 27th congress express the CPSU's resolve to continue in the future to unswervingly broaden and deeped cooperation with communist and workers parties in the fraternal countries, and to promote unity among them in all possible ways. There is no need to say how great is the importance of such unity in the contemporary situation, and it is heartening that relations between the CPSU and the CPCZ are a lofty example of socialist internationalism. Fresh clear evidence of that is provided by the meeting between the leaders of the two parties, Comrades Gorbachev and Husak, which was held recently in Moscow and took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and complete identity of views.

Current cooperation between our countries encompasses all spheres of social life. We are combining our efforts in the extraction of raw materials, in the building of gigantic power engineering enterprises and in the laying of trunk transport routes. Our joint labors are found in the Soyuz gas pipeline, at atomic power stations and in the Prague Metro. Czechoslovakia takes an active part in projects on the territory of the USSR, in the construction of the Yamburg gas pipeline, the Krivoy Rog ore-concentrating combine, and the Urals gas complex. Even so, nobody would go so far as to say that Soviet-Czechoslovak economic and scientific-technical links have reached their limit. Quite the opposite. It is our joint conviction that there exist great reserves for deepening cooperation, primarily in the most promising forms of this, that is specialization and coordination.

The task today facing the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia, and the whole socialist community, together with the acuteness of the competition with capitalism call for a qualitatively new level of economic integration among the fraternal countries. [applause] [end recording]

GORBACHEV RECEIVES JOTTI, VIEWS WORLD SITUATION

LD251440 Moscow TASS in English 1402 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 25 TASS -- Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, today received Leonilde Jotti, president of the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament and a member of the leadership of the Italian Communist Party, who is paying a visit to the Soviet Union at the invitation of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

Appraising the international situation, which had become even more complex over the past few weeks, Mikhail Gorbachev said that the Soviet Union had not received any satisfactory reply to its proposals aimed at ridding mankind of the nuclear threat. The West's unwillingness to end the race with any armaments and to seek accords on their reduction seriously and on the basis of equality has become clear. He stressed that a responsible approach to politics presupposed readiness actually to reckon with the realities of the new stage of modern history, with the national interests of all states, and respect for the will of one's own people and other peoples and for the world public opinion. Mutual security nowdays calls upon everyone for a new way of thinking and for an understanding of the fact that it can only be achieved by political means, through negotiations. We should learn to live together in today's complex world. Today's international politics need especially strict respect for and a serious attitude to accords and prevention of actions which are worsening the situation, dangerous as it is. Leonilde Jotti outlined the goals of her visit to the USSR, one of them being the extension of direct contacts between parliaments in order to promote peace and rapprochement between the peoples of the two countries, and spoke in favour of more efforts in various forms on the way to detente so as to put an end to the escalation of the nuclear threat and to the squadering of huge resources on military purposes.

The participants in the meeting, which passed in an atmosphere of friendship, reiterated their mutual desire for the continuation of the Soviet-Italian dialogue in order further to develop good relations and cooperation between the USSR and Italy. Italy's ambassador to the USSR, Sergio Romano, was present at the meeting.

FOREIGN MINISTER PROTESTS FRG 'DETENTION'

LD251738 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1500 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Foreign Ministry statement on "detention" of Soviet citizen in FRG -- read by announcer]

[Text] The USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the USSR Embassy in Bonn have more than once addressed the FRG authorities concerning the forced detention [nasil'stvennoye zaderzhaniye] in the FRG of the USSR citizen Shuvalov. In connection with his return to the motherland and a clarification of the circumstances surrounding the affair, the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs considers it essential to state the following:

On 30 September 1985, Shuvalov, the commercial director of the joint Soviet-West German firm (Neoteip), was admitted to St Anthony Hospital in Cologne with a leg injury. On 24 October, in connection with the conclusion of his treatment he was supposed to be checked out, but when Soviet employees [sotrudniki] came to get him, he was not to be found in the hospital. The hospital administration, as well as the FRG Ministry of Foreign Affairs, virtually refused to supply the USSR Embassy in Bonn any information whatsoever about the whereabouts of Shuvalov. Nor did any satisfactory answer come from the FRG Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the numerous requests of the embassy to meet with Shuvalov and to return him without delay to his place of residence. Instead, on 18 November, the USSR Embassy in the FRG received a letter from certain West German lawyers in Cologne in which they informed the embassy that they had been authorized to represent the interests of the Soviet Citizen Shuvalov. It was also asserted in the letter that Shuvalov was allegedly intending to seek political asylum in the FRG and did not want to have any contacts with Soviet representatives.

During the whole subsequent period the FRG Ministry of Foreign Affairs also relied on this version and gave negative answers to the insistent demands of the Soviet side for the granting of a meeting with Shuvalov. As it has now become clear, all the statements by the West German side about Shuvalov's unwillingness to meet with Soviet representatives and his intention to remain in the FRG were false. In actual fact, Shuvalov on 24 October, on the day he was checked out of the hospital, was forcibly removed from that place by agents of the FRG special services. Over the next 4 months, he was unceasingly subjected to treatment in which physical, psychological, and other means of influence were used, treatment aimed at encouraging him not to return to the Soviet Union and to force him to sign a petition for political asylum in the FRG or in the United States. This was the immediate concern of FRG Special services employees who went by the names of (Wolfgang Kremer), (Gunter Klemens), (Dornberg), or ones who simply called themselves, Michael, Klaus, Ted, Kurt, Willi, and others. An adviser at the U.S. Embassy in Bonn, (Olaf Groebel). also had a hand in the provocative venture in connection with the Soviet citizen when Shuvalov was specially removed to the U.S. Embassy.

From the moment of the forcible removal from the hospital and up to the meeting with the representatives of the USSR Embassy in Bonn, Shuvalov was kept in complete isolation. His requests to meet with employees at the USSR Embassy were ignored. Letters from relatives were not passed on. Only one thing was demanded of him: to sign a petition for political asylum; but the speical Services failed to achieve this.

Aside from this, it became clear to Shuvalov that he would never obtain a meeting with Soviet representatives if he did not at least create the impression that he was inclined toward what was being demanded of him.

To this end, he signed a letter that was dictated to him in which a story, fabricated by the special services, about his voluntary departure to the West was produced; he later promised his persecutors to repeat it at a meeting with Soviet representatives. It is well-known to the FRG authorities what really took place during the meeting between employees of the USSR Embassy in Bonn and Shuvalov.

On 5 March 1986, at the FRG Ministry of Foreign Affairs, instead of making the statement concocted for him about not returning to the homeland, Shuvalov told the truth about what had happened to him and firmly stated his willingness to return to the Soviet Union as soon as possible.

Thus a shameful provocation against a Soviet citizen failed, to the complete surprise of its organizers. It is still a surprise that even after this the FRG authorities continue to hang on to their false version of what happened to Shuvalov and foist it on the FRG organs of mass information. However, no matter what tricks the FRG special services resort to, they will not be able to cover up the kidnapping and forcible detention of a Soviet citizen or the attempts, by using psychological and physical terror, to make him betray his country.

Such actions are nothing more than a scandalous trampling of human dignity and rights, an unprecedented act of arbitrariness, a gross violation of the elementary norms of interstate relations and international law. It is perfectly obvious that such actions are also incompatible with statements by the FRG Government about its readiness to maintain and develop normal and good relations with the Soviet Union. The USSR Foreign Ministry is making a resolute protest and expects that the persons guilty of kidnapping and forcibly detaining Shuvalov will be taken to task.

SHULTZ ARRIVES IN GREECE AMID DEMONSTRATIONS

[Text] Athens March 26 TASS -- George Shultz, U.S. secretary of state, has arrived on a four-day visit in Greece. Main attention at his talks with the Greek leaders will be devoted to the question of the future of the U.S. military bases in that country. On the route from the airport to the centre of the Greek capital, demonstrations of protest repeatedly barred the way to the American visitor and his escort. Demonstrations against the visit of the U.S. secretary of state have also been held in the central park of Athens and in other cities of Greece.

[Text] New York March 26 TASS -- The Government of Malta has requested the urgent convocation of the U.N. Security Council's meeting "to consider the serious situation that has developed in the central Mediterranean". A letter sent by the permanent representative of Malta at the United Nations to the President of the U.N. Security Council emphasizes the need for "essential actions to ease tension and to restore peace and stability in the region". The current extremely explosive situation in the Mediterranean has become a direct consequence of the U.S. militarist bandit actions near the shores of Libya.

FRG CRITICIZED ON PLANNED SDI INVOLVEMENT

PM211429 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 21 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Yuliy Yakhontov "Commentator's Column": "Bonn-Washington Compact"]

[Text] Bonn -- The United States and the FRG have reached agreement on the terms for Bonn's involvement in the U.S. "star wars" plans, which are officially called the "Strategic Defense Initiative." As commentators here emphasize, this agreement was reached with striking speed at Federal Chancellor H. Kohl's meeting with U.S. Defense Secretary C. Weinberger, who came to the FRG.

According to the official version, this meeting was meant to eliminate the differences that supposedly exist over cooperation within the SDI framework. However, these "differences," which had been on the point of threatening to quite wreck an agreement between Bonn and Washington, suddenly were easily settled. Next week FRG Economics Minister M. Bangemann will set out for the U.S. capital, where two documents are to be signed -- on the terms for West German firms to participate in SDI and a general agreement on technological exchange.

The Kohl-Weinberger accord has elicited undisguised enthusiasm from FRG right-wing circles and representatives of the military-industrial complex. Both have repeatedly voiced dissatisfaction with the delay over signing an official agreement on involvement in SDI. It is very significant in this connection that both H. Kohl and C. Weinberger refused to inform journalists of the details of the talks. Such deliberate secrecy strengthened the FRG progressive public's long-standing suspicions that the version relating to "differences" was deliberately blown up by Bonn with a view to demonstrating its "independence" and "circumspection" in approaching a problem which is of concern to the majority of the country's population.

Representatives of the opposition parties and even some politicians in the ruling coalition's camp still believe that the FRG must not subscribe to SDI. It is also clear that "star wars" will not benefit the civilian sectors of industry here. In addition, as K. Voigt, a prominent Social Democratic Party of Germany figure, pointed out, the damage which could result from shifting the arms race into space will not be covered by any "industrial" gains. And former Federal Chancellor H. Schmidt declared that with the help of the "star wars" plans the United States wants to totally change its military-strategic doctrine and undermine the ABM Treaty with the USSR. He urged Western Europe governments to remind President Reagan that he is not their "political supreme commander in chief."

However, the fact remains that Bonn has once again demonstrated who really leads the Western Europe allies. It has also been confirmed once again that the FRG remains one of the most obedient champions of Washington's militarist course among the NATO partners. This policy only undermines the foundations of European security and runs counter to the fundamental interests of our continent's peoples.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS CONGRATULATES CHIRAC

SUSPECT IN PALME CASE LINKED TO U.S. GROUP

LD212338 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Correspondent Valentin Gubernatorov report from the "Vremya" newscast]

[ext] Investigations in the case of the assassination of Olof Palme continue in Sweden. The political background to this crime is now becoming increasingly clear. Both within Sweden itself and in other Western countries there have been and there are forces that hated Olof Palme fiercely for his active work in the struggle to preserve peace and to ward off the threat of war. Now Hans Holmer, the Swedish Police Commissioner, is telling journalists that the man who was arrested a few days ago on suspicion of having killed Olof Palme is being released because of insufficient evidence. Well, the police and judicial organs operate within the framework of Swedish laws. However, it has become known for example, that the person arrested belonged to the so-called European Workers Party, an international pro-fascist organization that established itself in Sweden in the mid-seventies. Members of the organization are in favor of Sweden joining NATO and of arming the Swedish Army with neutron weapons. The party headquarters is in the United States. It is headed by a U.S. millionaire, Larouche.

Of late, every substantial event in which Palme has been involved has been noted by the vigilant eye of this organization. Many of its members have undergone special training in the use of pistols in Wiesbaden, West Germany and also at a range in Georgia in the United States. The training is carried out under the pretext of ensuring the protection of the party leadership. But who can guarantee that shooting skills acquired in the FRG or the United States will not come in useful for other purposes, too?

REPORTAGE ON BENDJEDID'S MOSCOW VISIT

Profiled Prior to Arrival

PM251004 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 25 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 1

[Unattributed report: "In Connection With the Visit by Chadli Bendjedid, President of Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria and General Secretary of the National Liberation Front Party, to the Soviet Union"]

[Excerpts] Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Democratic and Popular Republic Algeria and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party [FLN], is arriving in Moscow today on an official friendly visit at the invitation of the CPSU Central Committee, the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, and the Soviet Government.

Under President C. Bendjedid's leadership, Algeria is resolving questions concerning the implementation of building a new society in accordance with the principles of the FLN Charter, and transformations are being implemented for the purpose of strengthening the country's independence and sovereignty, developing the national economy, and solving social problems. Algeria, adhering to the principles of nonalignment in its foreign policy, holds anti-imperialist and anticolonialist positions, and makes a great contribution to the struggle waged by Arab and African peoples opposing the neocolonialist policy of imperialism and its allies.

The FLN advocates the development of friendship and mutually advantageous cooperation with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. C. Bendjedid has visited our country on several occasions. Soviet people greet President Chadli Bendjedid, and through him the friendly Algerian people, and express confidence that the forthcoming visit will serve the cause of further strengthening the friendship and mutual understanding between our countries and peoples and the cause of consolidating universal peace and international security.

SUPREME SOVIET DELEGATION CONCLUDES EGYPT VISIT

Press Conference Held

LD240817 Moscow TASS in English 0813 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo March 24 TASS -- TASS correspondent Ratmir Orestov reports:

A delegation of the USSR Surpeme Soviet led by Pavel Gilashvili, vice president of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet, on a visit here gave a press conference for Egyptian journalists. Sharing impressions of the visit, the leader of the delegation noted the hospitality accorded to the Soviet delegation in Egypt. The people of Egypt, he said, remember the firm foundations of Soviet-Egyptian friendship, laid in the early period of its history. Gilashvili expressed the hope that relations between the peoples of the two countries would develop successfully. The exchange of parliamentary delegations, he said, illustrates the possibility of the development of contacts between the Soviet Union and Egypt.

Many questions were asked at the press conference about the importance of the Aswan hydropower complex to the Egyptian economy and about the future of that project. The managers of the power plant and the high dam, Soviet guests said, point out that the complex still is a symbol of Soviet-Egyptian friendship. Egyptian specialists speak highly of the quality of the design of the dam and hydropower station and the equipment supplied by the Soviet Union, which continues to work faultlessly and dependably.

Answering questions about the Soviet stand on the Middle East, the delegation members stressed that it was based on the constructive proposals for settlement in the region put forward last year. The Soviet Union firmly believes that an international conference with the participation of all the parties concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization as the only lawful representative of the Palestinian people, is a sure way to settle the Middle East problem.

At the same time the USSR strongly rejects the attempts to use the conference as a cover for separate deals contrary to the interests of all the Arab peoples. Seeking a just and lasting peace in the Middle East and other parts of the world, the members of the parliamentary delegation stressed, the Soviet Union is strictly following the course of peace, disarmament and international cooperation, put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress.

Meetings Viewed

LD260042 Moscow TASS in English 1859 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Cairo March 25 TASS -- The official visit to the Arab Repulic of Egypt (ARE) by the USSR Supreme Soviet delegation consisting of Pavel Gilashvili, vice-president of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet (the leader of the delegation), Sergey Losev, Anatoliy Mayorets, Nikolay Popov, and Janikul Yusupov, deputies of the USSR Supreme Soviet, is over.

The delegation were received by President Husni Mubarak of the A.R.E. The leader of the Soviet delegation delivered a message to him from the USSR Supreme Soviet. Sincere striving of the two sides for the development of good relations was pointed out during the meeting.

Talks were held with a deputation of the People's Assembly of the A.R.E. headed by the assembly's speaker Rifa't al-Majub. The Soviet parliamentarians also had meetings with Egyptian Prime Minister 'Ali Lutfi and with his deputies -- Yusuf Wali, minister of agriculture and food security, general secretary of the ruling National Democractic Party of the A.R.E. and Ismat 'Abd al-Majid, minister of foreign affairs, as well as with Subji 'Abda al-Hakim, chairman of the Consultative Council (Shura).

The parliamentarians of the USSR informed the Egyptian side of the results of the CPSU's historic 27th Congress which had mapped out a strategy for accelerating further development of Soviet society and for qualitative refinement of all aspects of societal life. The Egyptian side displayed interest in the USSR's constructive proposals on a stage-by-stage, consistent elimination of nuclear weapons around the world. The proposals had been set up in the January 15, 1986, statement of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, [words indistinct] further development in the decisions of the 27th Congress of the CPSU. An opinion was expressed that the implementation of the great plans for accelerating the socio-economic development of the USSR positively tells on the growth of the Soviet Union's prestige in the international arena.

During the discussion of the state of affairs in the Middle East, concern was expressed over the dangerous situation which keeps on there owing to Israel's continuing aggression against the Arabs. Reaffirmed was the Soviet Union's conviction that a comprehensive and just settlement can be achieved in the Middle East through collective actions, within the framework of an international conference on the Middle East with the participation of all the sides concerned, including the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) -- the sole legitimate representative of the Arab Palestinian people.

When discussing bilateral relations between the USSR and the A.R.E., the sides reaffirmed their striving for further development of cooperation in various fields on the basis of equality, mutual benefit and non-interference in the internal affairs of other states.

Visit Concluded

JN232018 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1612 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 23 Mar (INA) -- Sa'd Qasim Hammudi, chairman of the Arab and International Relations Committee of the Iraqi National Assembly, has described his meeting with Mr Voss, chairman of the Council of Nationalities of the USSR Supreme Soviet, as fruitful and positive and will improve parliamentary relations between the two countries.

In a statement to INA before leaving Moscow today, Hammudi said that he discussed with Voss the agenda of the 75th IPU conference which will be held in Mexico next April. He said that he briefed Voss on the results of the fourth Arab Parliamentary Union Conference which was held in Amman recently. He also informed him of the Arab draft resolution approved by all the Arab parliamentary delegations with the aim of presenting it at the Mexico conference. The resolution is connected with the Palestinian problem, the Lebanese situation, and the Iraq-Iran war. He said the Soviet side expressed its support for the joint Arab draft resolution.

Hammudi also said that agreement was reached on continuing coordination and consultations between the Arab parliamentary group and the Socialist bloc during the upcoming IPU conference to affirm the joint struggle to foil initiatives planned by enemies of the Arabs and the Soviets, such as Zionists and imperialists.

SOVIET ENOVY MEETS WITH SYRIAN OFFICIAL

JN221427 Damascus SANA in Arabic 1315 GMT 22 Mar 86

[Text] Damascus, 22 Mar (SANA) -- The Soviet ambassador in Damascus, Felix Fedotov, has stressed his country's support for the just Arab causes as well as for Syria's militant positions under President Hafiz al-Asad aimed at foiling the imperialist and Zionist designs in the Arab region. This came during a meeting between People's Assembly Speaker Muhammad al-Zu'bi and the Soviet ambassador here today. The Soviet ambassador conveyed a message to the People's Assembly speaker from the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium dealing with parliamentary affairs between Syria and the Soviet Union.

'TOP PRIORITY' PANELISTS FOCUS ON TEST BAN

LD261530 Moscow in English to North America 0001 GMT 16 Mar 86

["Top Priority" program]

[Text] On Saturday the United States exploded its first nuclear device at the Yucca Flats site in Nevada since the Soviet Union extended its unilateral test ban to last after the end of March. The blast was codenamed Glen Cove. We now bring you our weekly panel discussion, Top Priority, in which Dr Radomir Boganov and Sergey Plekhanov of the Moscow-based Institute for United States and Canada Studies discuss the positions of the Soviet Union and the United States on the crucial issue of banning nuclear testing. The host of Top Priority is Pavel Kuznetsov of our staff.

[Kuznetsov] In his recent replies to an appeal by the leaders of six nations -- Argentina, Mexico, India, Greece, Sweden, and Tanzania -- to the Soviet Union and the United States to refrain from all nuclear testing in the period leading to their next summit, General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev said that this country was extending its unilateral moratorium beyond the expiration date of 31 March until the first such blast in the United States and I suggest that we start with taking a brief look at the history of the Soviet moratorium.

[Bogdanov] Pavel, the history of the Soviet moratorium is really a very glorious history. We started to stop to test our nuclear weapons from 6 August 85. Mind you, we stated that we stopped to test on the date of nuclear bombing of Hiroshima. Then we extended our moratorium once again till 31 March and all the time we were inviting United States to join us in that, saying that if they join us, the moratorium becomes endless, for ever. So, this time answering the leaders of the countries, we again invited United States in a way to join us because there is only one condition that we stop testing, if the United States again joins us and we say that if they start, if they resume their testing, only in that case we will resume our testing.

You know, if you look at that story from different angles, you will see that it has a really tremendous importance for the Soviet-American relations. Everybody at this end and at the American end is saying that what is lacking in the Soviet-American realtion is trust: We cannot build our realtions because there is no trust. I agree with them completely: There is no trust. We have enough grounds to not trust our American partners and in our relations we have several really very hot points which may contribute greatly to the trust-building business or just wipe the slate -- to decrease this very little amount, make no trust at all, in our relations and to decrease it till it is minus zero, something like that. So, moratorium just belongs to that business of trust. If they are really willing to improve relations with us and to signal to us that the American side is genuine in building good relations with the Soviet Union, they have very good opportunity to signal, to demonstrate that to the whole world: stop testing.

Number two: They were claiming all the time, from the top, that this administration has no design to launch a nuclear war strike, that they are a very peace-loving country that just deters the Soviet Union. You know all that bunk we have been hearing for quite a long time. Why I say bunk? Because there is no proof, so far there is no proof that the American side is really willing to cooperate with the Soviet Union in the field of avoiding nuclear war, and the most, you know, substantial signal we could get from the American side on that would be just stopping testing nuclear weapons.

Why, I believe Sergey you have explained to our American listenres why it is so important in that business; but look really, as a student of American politics for the last 25 years I am getting more and more, you know, pessimist in all that. What we have been witnessing now is a kind, you know, of very cheap politics, really very cheap politics, when you have on the table the problem of survival or death and around that you have a kind of, you know, a kind of cheap lies aiming at one, you know, aiming at one point, just to try to find out ways and means to continue to build up American strength, nuclear might in such a way that it will be superior to the Soviet Union. I have no other explanation to that, what they are doing now. Maybe I'm too emotional, I'm sorry, but, you know, as a student, as I said, as a student of the American's policy really I am surprised. I don't know if you put the question to me now, at that juncture, what the future will be for the Soviet-American relations I am a complete pessimist. I really think pessimistically.

[Kuznetsov] We are really jumping a little bit ahead in drawing our conclusions on the future of Soviet-American relations, I'm sorry. Dr Plekhanov why is it so important from at least the military standpoint to stop nuclear tests. Can such a move really contribute to checking the spread of the nukes?

[Plekhanov] Well, Pavel, there are 50,000 nuclear weapons in the world today and there is a widespread consensus in the world that there are much too many. In fact, there is a growing consensus that there should be no nuclear weapons at all and it is practical to talk about reducing and eliminating them altogether. There is really that huge amount of overkill capability and the least that we can do is discontinue testing designed to produce new kinds of nuclear weapons and this is what the story is all about.

Now we have heard from the U.S. Administration that they need to continue testing in order to modernize their nuclear arsenal but why the hell modernize existing nuclear arsenals? If you explode just 1 percent of that arsenal of nuclear weapons that there is in the world today the damage done to the atmosphere, to the environment, will be quite enough in order to make th earth unihabitable. So it really makes no sense, it is really some madness on the rampage to continue modernization, to continue to build-up of nuclear weapons and this fact was recognized by the U.S. Government when it was almost ready to sign a comprehensive test ban treaty in the late seventies. The treaty as almost ready and then the U.S. side decided to discontinue negotiations with the Soviet Union on the subject, apparently because there were some ideas in the military quarters in the United States about new kinds of weapons and now we see that it is not just the offensive nuclear weapons, not just the bombs and the warheads for the missiles, but also the new kinds of strategic defense, of space weapons.

[Kuznetsov] Such nuclear weapons are the source of energy for those systems and subsystems of star wars?

[Plekhanov] Of a particular system which is called the X-ray laser. Another thing which is important is that, you know, even underground testing, even though underground testing is not as harmful as the atmospheric testing, it still is bad for the environment. You know there are scientists in various parts of the world who measure the elvels of radioactivity and I read a recent report about the historical changes in the levels of radioactivity.

In the seventies when the amount of, when the number of nuclear explosions in the world declined because there was a milder and more relaxed international atmosphere, we had detente, the levels of radiation markedly declined; in the eighties there has been again an increase in the levels of radioactivity and that is connected with the fact that there have been more tests. So, even on that ground I think it would be a good thing to stop testing.

[Kuznetsov] Now what was the response of the White House to the latest Soviet initiative, to the latest Soviet step that is extending the unilateral Soviet moratorium beyond the expiration date of 31 March? They have rejected also the efforts to make our moratorium a mutual one and ignored our almost 8-month restraint. We have partially covered the reasons why and still I want more (?stronger) answers to this.

[Bogdanov] You know, my difficulty is just the last part of your question. Why? Because there are so many why's on the American side and there are so many arguments that I am really puzzled which one is the valid one for the time being and I am really sorry for my American friends over there -- they have to listen to all these arguments almost every day and I can imagine how they are confused because really speaking, every week, every second week, we have a new argument why the American administration cannot join the Soviet Union in the moratorium.

[Kuznetsov] OK. Let's take a look at some of them, like on verification and control.

[Bogdanov] You know, Pavel, let me say the first thing, you know. If you have no desire to join the other side, with such excellent brains as this administration has, you can produce another thousand arguments just convincing the others, their own fellows, that they cannot join, you know. So, argument -- there is no problem with arguments; there is a problem with the truth. Why the truth? Because arguments on this particular business belong rather to a very imaginatory world which has nothing to do with the real one. We have witnessed a number of arguments beginning from the statement that the Soviet Union has already in such a way improved its nuclear weapons that America has to catch up with it. The second argument was that the Soviet Union was against verification and control. And the last one is very nearly the truth, which is as [name indistinct] put it: We need to modernize our nuclear arsenal but they don't say the second half of the truth -- what for? Just to gain superiority over the Soviet Union. All that you need for one thing, just to intimidate the Soviet Union, to coerce it, and just to try to play the Soviet Union the American tune. [as heard] That is all. There is no other reason. If you really tell the truth -- what for they need it? And I am afraid whatever convincing argument we can really suggest to our American listeners they will not play any role because we have a very strange world now at the American end; the world which has nothing to do with the reality, which has to do for this administration with only one thing, how to convince the American public that the Soviet Union is a very bad guy and you need all the time to spend money to build up American might just to deter this bad guy. That is all, it has nothing to do with the reality but it has to do with American domestic policy and in that imaginatory, unreal world, I am sorry you are hopeless, you are hopeless because whatever you say at the other end they will say their own thing just to try to convince their own. So what is left to us is just to use our own common-sense of the American view. Let them themselves find out where it is.

[Kuznetsov] You wanted to say something?

[Plekhanov] Yes I wanted to touch upon briefly those arguments which have been advanced. Dr Bogdanov has touched on the basic thing and that is that they do want to continue testing.

Now, I would like to talk a little bit about why the other arguments, because you know simply a desire to continue testing, it is not a very persuasive argument, it can also be beaten very easily. But how about those objections and all kinds of buts and its. Number one, verification -- now that is an old chestnut and the United States have been saying for a long time that well, you know, you in the Soviet Union, you are a closed society; we in America are an open society and so we must have adequate means of verification that you guys are complying with the treaty. We can't build treaties on trust. Neither can we and we are very much interested in the business of verification and the United States is not such an open society after all and we are not as closed a society as they are trying to portray us. How the question of monitoring the tests has been adequately resolved by the existence of a very sophisticated seismological devices. The United States has about 200 seismological stations which are constantly listening to whatever goes on in this area in the Soviet Union.

[Kuznetsov] How many do we have of those?

[Plekhanov] We have about 20 and the problem that we have is that our stations are not as near the American territory as the Americans are because we don't have countries like, you know, Turkey and Pakistan -- military allies of the United States -- or West Germany, which allow it to place those stations close to our territory. We have just 20 and they are much farther away from American than the Americans' are from ours but still those 20 are absolutely adequate to perform the job of monitoring American tests. But still if the United States thinks and insists that they need to have on-site inspection, that they need to put devices inside the Soviet territory and be able to send their observers and so on and so forth, we decided that we can make a step forward and say okay, let's have on-site inspections as well. And the moment we made that admission the question of verification was immediately swept off the table.

[Bogdanov] No, no, Sergey, you are not right. This argument can also be beaten very easily. What you say is just propaganda, nothing else.

[Kuznetsov] Well, if you don't agree to it, then it is propaganda accordingly.

[Bogdanov] Yes, that is why I say that argument can also be beaten very easily and that it is why I am sure you know...

[Kuznetsov -- interrupting] It is like saying I offer you $10 if you know this is just propaganda.

[Bogdanov] Yes, exactly.

[Plekhanov] Yes, and Sergey, I'd like to back you up on what you said with a brief quote from THE NEW YORK TIMES news service. It was written by Flora Lewis in February and I quote: Without quite admitting it, the Reagan administration has turned America's formal policy on nuclear testing on its head. This could be veiled so long as the Soviets refused verification measures to make sure any cheating could be immediately detected. But now Mikhail Gorbachev said: The Soviet Union is agreeable to the most strict control over a ban on nuclear weapons tests, including on-site inspections and on the use of all achievements in seismology but, she goes on to say, instead of renewing negotiatins with the Soviets on a comprehensive test ban, broken off by President Reagan, Washington has reversed its argument.

Yes, you know their reversing arguments in my view is like undressing in public. Don't they realize that what can be done on a public beach and not on every beach, well it's kind of like-minded for politicians.

As far as the beaches are concerned it just occurred to me that others are saying that you can take a horse to the water but you can't make it drink. I mean there is a problem there. If you really don't want to do something you always produce a new argument against it.

There is another thing which I'd like to touch upon and that is the argument that the United States needs to continue testing in order to check on the existing arsenals. Not just to modernize, not just to come up with a new weapon, but to see if the old ones are not rusty, so to say. This is called reliability testing. But this argument was raised before by some people in the Pentagon in the late seventies when the Carter administration was negotiating the comprehensive test ban and the scientists, the military scientists, who were studying the problem at the time, they came up with definite answers. Reliability testing is not necessary in order to check that the bombs are in order. You can perform the checking in the laboratories. You don't need to poison the earth by testing bombs to see that they are working properly so the existing stockpiles can be checked and stay reliable without tests. So that argument again holds no water.

U.S. 'UNILATERALLY DISCARDING' ABM TREATY

LD262001 Moscow TASS in English 1941 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 26 TASS -- By TASS military writer Vladimir Chernyshev.

On March 22, the world was indignant at glaring militaristic actions of the U.S. Administration. Despite numerous calls of the Soviet Union, other countries, broad public of the USA, a nuclear weapon test was staged in the USA. This gives more evidence that Washington's real aim is not reduction and elimination of nuclear arms, but, quite the contrary, their build-up, creation of new and ever more destructive types of nuclear arms.

The new explosion and the refusal to resume talks on a comprehensive test ban also show the unwillingness of the U.S. administration to observe the existing agreements. Quite recently, joint congressional resolution number three, endorsed by the House of Representatives of the U.S. Congress, declared that the threshold test ban treaty and the peaceful nuclear explosive treaty bind the USA to press for the cessation of all nuclear weapon testing for ever. But the present U.S. leadership views the earlier assumed obligations to its striving to achieve military strategic superiority for the United States.

Persisting with the nuclear arms race and speeding up work under the "star wars" program, Washington intends to go back on the treaties and agreements signed earlier, above all the ABM Treaty and SALT-2 Treaty. This is shown by statements made recently by U.S. officials.

Thus, U.S. Assistanct Secretary of Defense Richard Perle, addressing a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee declared outright that a large-scale ABM system with space-basing elements should be launched "whether or not the Russians will agree to negotiate the revision" of the ABM Treaty. Meanwhile, even at the present stage of the implementation of the "star wars" program, which Washington tries to present as a "research" program, he declared for a broad interpretation of the treaty so as to hold armaments tests.

As is known, according to this "broad interpretation" invented in the USA only six months ago, contrary to the interpretation of the ABM Treaty by the Soviet Union and four U.S. Administrations, it is alleged that the development and testing of systems and components of "exotic" armaments -- lasers, beam weapons, etc. are not prohibited under the treaty at all.

Addressing legislators, Perle, quite unabashed, set out a program of eroding the ABM Treaty which is one of the fundamentals of the process of arresting the arms race, the program that envisages a transition from the present violations under the signboard of "broad interpretation" and then to unilaterally discarding the treaty altogether and deploying armaments created under the "star wars" program.

The SALT-2 Treaty is also under a threat. Next May the U.S. Navy plans to launch the eighth atomic "Trident" submarine -- "Nevada." If the USA does not take compensatory measures, for instance, dismantle two old "Poseidon" submarines, the ceiling for launchers of MIRVed missiles set by the SALT-2 Treaty will be surpassed. Some people in Washington have already declared against the United States adhering to the treaty, and apologists of "star wars" are in their lead.

The Strategic Defence Initiative organization leaders stubbornly declare for keeping all the existing "Poseidon" submarines in the U.S. Navy since, according to the Pentagon, they are ideally suited to serving as launch pads for "exotic weapons" — X-ray lasers with nuclear pumping. So it is not only the ABM Treaty, but also the SALT-2 Treaty that interferes with "stellar warriors" and so they declare that their provisions should not be observed.

All this shows that some people in Washington persist in thinking in old categories. This makes one recall a recommendation to U.S. President Harry Truman in a secret report on the American-Soviet relations drawn up for him: The United States with its military potential consisting above all of highly effective armaments should not support any proposals on disarmament or arms limitation. And it is such "recommendations" that they in Washington try to follow now, losing sight of the fact that now it is 1986, not 1946.

It is time for the U.S. leadership to realize that this policy only poses new threats to peoples, the American people along with them. Mutual security nowadays requires a new way of thinking. The awareness that this security can be achieved only by political means, on the road of talks and preservation of existing arrangements.

COMMENTATOR PRAISES NUCLEAR MORATORIUM

PM261129 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 22 Mar 86 p 3

[International observer G. Dadyants article: "To Heed the Voice of Reason"]

[Text] The question of ending nuclear tests remains at the center of the attention of all the world's peoples. It is a question of a problem of paramount importance, on whose solution the fate of nuclear disarmament depends.

The Soviet approach to this problem is clear: The USSR has introduced a unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions and has been abiding by it for more than 7 months now. Although the moratorium expires 31 March, M.S. Gorbachev declared in his reply to the appeal from the leaders of six countries -- Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece -- that the Soviet Union will not conduct nuclear explosions even after 31 March -- until the first nuclear explosion in the United States.

And the United States? Over the past year it has conducted 15 nuclear explosions, including 7 even after the Soviet moratorium came into effect.

The last explosion in the Nevada desert at the end of the 1985 had a yield 10 times greater than the bomb the United States dropped on Hiroshima and was a constituent part of the research connected with creating [sozdaniye] nuclear-pumped X-ray lasers within the framework of the "Strategic Defense Initiative" proclaimed by R. Reagan. Despite the restraint shown by the Soviet Union, a new explosion is now being prepared, scheduled for April. As THE WALL STREET JOURNAL reports, a nuclear charge will be exploded under conditions close to those that exist in space, and the results will be used for the same "star wars" program.

All this can only be viewed as a real challenge to world public opinion. The U.S. Administration is clearly gambling on achieving military superiority over the Soviet Union. This runs directly counter to the aims jointly announced at the Soviet-American summit talks in Geneva.

Under the conditions which have come about the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium appealed to the U.S. Congress to do all in its power to ensure that the U.S. position accords with resolving the task of ending nuclear task in accordance with the will of the peoples and their ardent desire to ensure lasting peace on earth.

None of the arguments advance by the U.S. Administration to justify its reluctance to subscribe to the Soviet moratorium and end nuclear tests stands up to criticism. The BALTIMORE SUN bluntly relegates them to the "sphere of nuclear mythology." In particular, the argument that nuclear explosions are "impossible to monitor" [kontrolirovat] is a flimsy one. Scientific means have existed for many years which make it possible to accurately record even small underground explosions conducted thousands of miles away. In addition, the Soviet Union has publicly declared that it is prepared, in the event of a mutual moratorium being established, to reach agreement with the United States on the verification [kontrol] measures with a view to removing possible doubts about the moratorium's observance -- right down to international on-site verification [kontrol] and inspections [inspektsii].

Nor does another "argument" stand up to criticism. It has recently been advanced by the U.S. Administration, seeking to justify its negative stand on the question of banning nuclear explosions, and it alleges that the United States conducts nuclear test just to check the "reliability" of the existing nuclear arsenals. In fact, the American tests are conducted to modernize nuclear weapons and strengthen their destructive combat properties.

The USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium appeal to the U.S. Congress to end nuclear weapon tests without delay has been perceived by broad circles of the world public as new evidence of the Soviet Union's good will and of its desire to break the vicious circle of arms race and achieve the total elimination of nuclear arsenals. Numerous foreign press organs, public organizations, and also the participants in the session of the Socialist International Consultative Council on Disarmament, which has been held in Oslo these days, have come out in support of the Soviet initiative. They have urged the United States to follow the USSR's example and emphasized the pressing need to take other urgent measures to reach specific accords at the Soviet-American talks in Geneva.

The USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium appeal is one more attempt to make the U.S. ruling circles heed the voice of reason, overcome the logic of confrontation, and free mankind from the nuclear threat handing over it. At the same time, it is obvious that the USSR cannot endlessly display unilateral restraint in the face of the provocative stand taken by the U.S. Administration on the question of nuclear tests.

SECURITY COUNCIL DISCUSSES U.S.-LIBYAN CLASH

LD270850 Moscow TASS in English 0841 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 27 TASS -- TASS correspondent V. Chernyshev reports:

The U.N. Security Council, which was urgently convened at the USSR's request, started on Wednesday a discussion of the exceptionally dangerous situation in the southern Mediterranean, which had emerged as a result of the defiant aggressive actions of the USA against Libya.

There is no doubt about the deliberate character of the U.S. brigand attack on Libya, said Yu.V. Dubinin, USSR permament representative to the U.N. For a long time now, Libya has been a target of the open U.S. military, political and economic blackmail. Threats and slanders against the Libya leaders have been issued in Washington in an unending stream. American officials have gone so far as to discuss impudently in public plans for a "physical elimination" of the Libyan leadership.

The United States armed attack on Libya was an act of aggression against an independent and sovereign Arab state, which had been conceived, planned and prepared in advance. It has resulted in a sharp aggravation of tensions in that area and created a real threat to international peace and security. At hand is open policy of state terrorism, impudent disregard of the U.N. Charter and the generally recognized norms of international law, the fundamental principles of inter-state relations.

It is common knowledge what are the causes of the growing aggressiveness of the USA against Libya, the Soviet representative stressed. In Washington they do not conceal that they are unhappy about Libya's independent anti-imperialist policy in the international arena, her strong opposition to the attempts of the USA and Israel at forcing separate capitulatory deals on the Arabs. It clearly goes against the grain with them that Libya firmly opposes the claims of the U.S. Administration to play the master in the developing countries, as if they were its home. Therefore the imperialist attack is spearheaded against Libya as well as Nicaragua. This is an attack launched today against all the developing countries, the whole Non-Aligned Movement. The intention is to show for everybody to see that if crude reprimands from Washington cannot bring about a change in their independent policy, the USA always has its Navy and aircraft at the ready to "put things in order" according to Washington's neocolonialist prescriptions.

Washington's criminal act against Libya is another telltale manifestation of the policy of "neoglobalism" proclaimed by the U.S. Administration. It is the immediate duty of the Security Council, he stressed, to condemn resolutely the aggression perpetrated by the USA, to take necessary actions to stop it and carry out effective measures to protect Libya's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The Security Council can under no circumstances reconcile itself to the state of war threatening to engulf the whole of the Mediterranean, George Agius, Malta's permanent representative to the U.N., said. No threat or use of force an be allowed, the more so when it comes to actions of a U.N. member country at a distance of thousands of miles from its shores and in conditions of massing by it of a powerful air force and naval armada on the plea of holding endless exercises.

The peoples of the Mediterranean are strongly opposed to the use of their national territory as bases and springboards of aggression against the non-aligned Mediterranean states, he said.

In face of the comdemnation of the brigand actions of the United States, Vernon Walters, U.S. permanent representative to the U.N., found nothing better but to reiterate the false pretexts and accusations by which Washington is trying to justify its aggression. He again threatened the use of force against Libya.

The Security Council will carry on the debate on the situation jeopardizing peace, which emerged as a result of the U.S. armed attack on Libya.

LIBYAN ENVOY ENDORSES GORBACHEV SPEECH ON LIBYA

LD262344 Moscow TASS in English 2254 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 26 TASS -- The statement made by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, at a Kremlin dinner in honor of Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic, general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party, has laid bare the bandit and aggressive policy of U.S. imperialism and uncovered the true motives behind the policy that threatens peace in the world over, Muhammad al-Zarruq Rajab, permanent representative of Libya at the United Nations, told the TASS in an interview. Washington stages provocations all over the world -- in the Mediterranean, in the Korean Peninsula and the Indian Ocean. It threatens peoples of all developing countries which pursue independent policies. Washington's objective, as the statement of the Soviet leader convincingly demonstrated, is to impose global American hegemony on nations.

On behalf of Libya Muhammad al-Zarruq Rajab expressed gratitude and appreciation of the constructive position taken by the U.S.S.R. with regard to the aggressive U.S. action and of the solidarity expressed by Mikhail Gorbachev with the Libyan people defending their sacred right to freedom and independence.

NATO SECRETARY CARRINGTON VISITS ICELAND

LD262127 Moscow TASS in English 2027 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 26 TASS -- Secretary General of the North Atlantic bloc Lord Carrington arrived in Iceland and inspected the NATO base in Keflavic, the ASSOCIATED PRESS reports. Speaking in Reykjavik, Lord Carrington emphasized in every way Iceland's "strategic role" in NATO. "The alliance depends for its strength on the Atlantic serving as a bridge between North America and Western Europe", he asserted. "Iceland is in a sense part of that bridge".

The United States intends to increase its military presence in Iceland. The ASSOCIATED PRESS report says that while inspecting the military base, Carrington viewed construction of a new terminal at the base. According to the Pentagon's plan, two radar stations will be modernized and two new ones will be built in the southern part of Iceland. These measures are part of the U.S. Administration for the militarization of the North Atlantic, for creating new bridgeheads for future aggressive actions. Over 3,000 U.S. servicemen are stationed in Iceland now. F-4 and F-15 fighter bombers, P-3 "Orion" naval reconnaissance planes and two AWACS aircraft are based in Iceland. The Pentagon makes no secret of the fact that military preparations in the region are spearheaded against countries of the socialist community.

FURTHER REACTION TO EVENTS IN GULF OF SIDRA

Gorbachev 'Denounces' U.S. Acts

LD261649 Moscow TASS in English 1646 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- The imperial, bandit face of neoglobalist policy has become clearly visible in the past few days, Mikhail Gorbachev said in the Kremlin today. The day before yesterday, American weapons were used against independent and sovereign Libya. Now the USA is not stinting words to justify that act of aggression. Facts irrefutably show, however, that it is not an unexpected incident but a "punitive" operation conceived and planned in advance.

It is not today that Libya has become a target. The provocative and threatening manoeuvres of American shops off its coast have become permament. And what about a trade, financial and technological blockade of Libya and other discriminatory measures against it? They can only be qualified as economic terror! And look at the psychological andpropaganda warfare that has been waged against Libya over the months!

The actions of the United States constitute a challenge to the world public as a whole and an encroachment on commonly recognized civilized relations. This policy is provoking regional conflicts and jeopardizing international peace and security. It is directed against all the independent peoples and contravenes the interests of the American people as well.

We resolutely denounce the aggressive anti-Libyan actions of the USA. The Soviet Union is in solidarity with the Libyan people. Standing up for their sacred right to freedom and independence from imperialist encroachments, Mikhail Gorbachev said.

The general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee today delivered a speech at the dinner given in the Kremlin in honour of Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party.

U.S. 'Deliberately Provoked' Clash

LD262029 Moscow TASS in English 1838 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 26 TASS -- The United States' attack on sovereign Libya, during which a rocket and bombing strike was dealt on the suburbs of Surt and a number of other targets were hit, has been a thoroughly prepared provocation endorsed at the highest level in Washington. As THE WASHINGTON POST newspaper reports, a decision on much stronger measures against Libya was taken at a meeting in the White House in July last with President Reagan present. The newspaper writes that this was followed by "a series of discussions, studies, interagency meetings, and even military targeting plans on Libya." Moreover, the question of dealing pre-emptive strikes on Libya was studied.

A top-secret CIA study dated several days after the meeting in July in the White House "analyzed the pros and cons of pre-emptive military action and concluded that the administration had an opportunity to redraw the map of North Africa." It follows from the article that the Pentagon considered [words indistinct] versions of Libya's armed invasion. It was, specifically, estimated that 90,000 servicemen will be needed for the invasion.

It follows from the article in WASHINGTON POST that John Poindexter, the now assistant to the President for national security affairs, was the main coordinator of anti-Libyan plans. He made a trip to the Middle East in September last to work out plans of joined armed actions against Libya with other countries of the region.

"Aircraft carrier operations north of Libya were ordered in late January," WASHINGTON POST writes. In this connection THE NEW YORK TIMES, quoting officials of the administration, points out that Reagan decided to send Navy vessels into the Gulf of Sidra after being told that this would almost certainly lead to a military confrontation with Libya. In other words, the United States deliberately provoked Tripoli to a clash.

Georgiy Kim Comments

LD262027 Moscow TASS in English 1856 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- Speaking in TASS interviews, Soviet people said it is becoming a rule that wherever U.S. warships and warplanes appear, the smell of gunpowder and blood starts floating form the place right away. The interviewed protested the U.S. military's firing at targets in Libya and intrusions into the territorial waters of that independent country.

"One need not be a prophet to see a connection between the recent vote in U.S. Congress on aid to Nicaraguan 'contras' and the act of piracy in the Gulf of Sidra," said Georgiy Kim, director of the Institute of Oriental Studies at the Soviet Academy of Sciences. "Every time the U.S. Administration needs further funding to whip up tension or bankroll a fresh batch of mercenaries, another act of international terrorism is quick to occur. The provocative maneuvers off independent Libya have aimed to heighten tension and demonstrated Washington's disdain for the right of sovereign nations."

"American strategy-makers call such provocations 'low-intensity conflicts' But each of them means death, blood and human suffering," Kim said. "The guns aimed at Libya threaten all states unwilling to bend the knee to the overseas strategists with their imperial ambitions."

Sergey Tsitovich, a Soviet specialist helping to build a gas pipeline in Libya, said: "Using armed force, Washington endeavors to bring whole nations to their knees, proclaims governments objectionable and breaks international norms and rules."

"Washington's adventurism is a threat to the entire world," he went on to say. "The escalation of the arms race, its extension to outer space, the continued nuclear testing, the violations of the borders of independent states -- don't the U.S. strategists see where the policy of state-backed terrorism is leading?"

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- U.S. imperialism has again tried to subvert the progressive regime of Libya, disliked by its because it is pursuing an independent policy and giving support to the peoples fighting for their rights, Professor Konstantin Varlamov, a member of the Presidium of the Soviet Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee and a notable Soviet historian, said here today at a Soviet public meeting devoted to the 16th anniversary of the withdrawal of British troops from Libyan territory.

The withdrawal of British troops, Varlamov noted, marked the beginning of the liberation of the country from imperialist diktat. Two months later the Libyan people took the final step on that road by closing the U.S. Wheelus Field Air Force Base. The United States had been using that base to exert political and military pressure on Libya and neighbouring Arab countries and to protect the interests of oil monopolies.

Today, 16 years after the withdrawal of British troops from Libya, the Soviet historian continued, imperialism is still attempting to trample the rights and freedom of the people of that country. By shooting at targets in Libya, Washington reaffirmed its source of inciting tension in various parts of the world.

The Soviet people, Varlamov said, have always sided themselves with the Libyans in their just anti-imperialist struggle. Today, at a time of trial for Libya, we also are supporting the desire of the Libyan people to decide their destiny independently. We demand an end to U.S. military blackmail of Libya.

Addressing the audience, Muhammad H. Sha'ban, secretary of the People's Committee of the People's Bureau of the Socialist People's Libyan Jamahiriyah in the USSR, spoke highly of the Soviet Union's principled stand and its continuous support for the just struggle of the Libyan people.

The meeting was attended by the heads and staff of the diplomatic missions of Palestine, Syria, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, other Arab countries and also by Arab students who study in Moscow.

WEINBERGER NEWS CONFERENCE PART OF 'NEOGLOBALISM'

LD261329 Moscow TASS in English 1324 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 26 TASS -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has held a special news conference in the Pentagon, which was telecast by Worldnet International Network. The news conference was timed for the Defense Department's publication of its 5th edition of a propaganda pamphlet called "Soviet Military Power" and meant to "corroborate" the Reagan administration's allegations about a "growing war threat" from the USSR.

The trotting out of the latest fabrication-laden booklet by Washington hawks and the Pentagon chief's public appearance to advertise it have been part of a series of steps by the White House of late to justify its imperial "neoglobalism" strategy proclaiming the U.S. "right" to interfere in the domestic affairs of any state.

Employing disinformation, doctored facts and falsehoods about "Soviet global ambitions", the masterminds of this smear campaign are out to draw world pubic attention away from their own feverish military preparations. They are keen to cushion the impact of the Soviet initiatives on world public opinion and keep their NATO and other allies and partners in leash.

Commentators point to the deliberate timing of the publication of the militarist booklet of falsehoods and the official ceremony at which it was launched. Washington went ahead with them after the USSR had declared its readiness to extend its moratorium on nuclear explosions beyond March 31 until the first nuclear blast in the United States, and also after the Soviet Union had reiterated its commitment to keeping outer space free from arms and proposed a far-reaching, historic plan for abolishing all nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

Set against this background, the claims by the pamphlet and by the Pentagon chief that the Soviet Union had only one concern on its mind, and that was to achieve world domination and unleash a nuclear war, are at least ludicrous.

It is the United States rather than the USSR that has been resisting any measures to contain the arms race and improve the international political climate and accelerating its massive buildup of arms and armed forces even further every year. The Pentagon wants Congress, for example, to approve military appropriations for fiscal 1987 at an unprecedented total of more than 320 billion dollars. The U.S. Administration is pulling out all the stops to spread the arms race to outer space and speeding up the development of newest kinds of weaponry, including particle-beam, laser and other systems.

In an insolent challenge to mankind, the United States a few days ago staged another nuclear blast at a testing site in Nevada. Laying claims on world ascendancy, Washington arbitrarily proclaims almost the entire planet a sphere of its "vital interests". To "establish order" there the U.S. military is raising special forces of professional punitive troops and expanding its bases across the world. It is with U.S dollars that gangs of hired terrorists are waging undeclared wars on Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Angola and other sovereign states.

Guided by the "neoglobalism" doctrine, the Pentagon the other day overtly committed aggressive military actions against the Libyan Jamahiriyah. So it is not fortuitous that Weinberger at his news conference declared categorically once again for a continued buildup of U.S. Armed Forces and armaments. Even now more than half a million U.S. troops are stationed abroad, performing what in effect are policing functions. Such is the truth.

And no matter how much on the Potomac they talk about a mythical "Soviet threat" in defiance of logic and common sense, no matter how many blatantly slanderous pamphlets about the Soviet Union they circulate and no matter how hard they try to convince world public opinion of their "commitment to peace", the world's nations know that the war threat is emanating from the United States.

This was admitted in his time by prominent public figure George Kennan, formerly U.S. ambassador to the USSR, who said in the NEW YORKER magazine that material and psychological preparations for war had become a deeply ingrained tradition not only with the U.S. Armed Forces but also with a significant part of U.S. civilian society.

U.S. 'FABRICATED'CHARGE OF NICARAGUAN INCURSION

LD262109 Moscow TASS in English 2045 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- TASS commentator Nikolay Chigir writes: The Washington administration, described by THE NEW YORK TIMES as obsessed with hatred of Nicaragua and caring neither for common sense and humanity nor for security, keeps fomenting anti-Nicaraguan hysteria. Its aim is to bring the Sandinist government down at all costs.

The results of the house vote on the administration's request for 100 million dollars in aid to "contras" gangs, seen both in the United States itself and elsewhere as a stringing political defeat for the White House, have by no means sobered the U.S. ruling elite up. It is continuing its massive effort to persuade congressmen and U.S. public opinion, by hook or by crook, to endorse its policy of launching a large-scale aggression against Nicaragua. The campaign involves Washington's stock arsenal of falsehoods, disinformation and slander.

The U.S. Administration is now playing another marked card in its dangerous game in Central America. Acting on instructions from the White House, which is a fact confirmed by the U.S. media, its secret services have fabricated and floated an allegation that Nicaraguan troops have made a thrust into Honduran territory and are fighting there.

Immediately after that President Reagan announced the appropriation of an extra 20 million dollars from the Pentagon's budget to Honduras to "help it protect itself from Nicaragua." The Honduran authorities, which are completely dependent on Washington, did the latter's bidding and put their troops in the areas bordering Nicaragua on alert.

There, of course, was not, and could not be, any "incursion by Nicaraguan troops into Honduras" and the Sandinist government declared this most definitely.

Neither Washington nor Tegucigalpa, incidentally, could cite even a single fact to corroborate their anti-Nicaraguan charges, while facts exposing Washington's lies were reported by the U.S. mass media themselves.

At the very time Washington officialdom was raising its uproar over "the Sandinist aggression" a correspondent of the U.S. television network NBC, Mr Murphy, visited the Nicaraguan-Honduran border but did not discover anything there that would correspond to the provocative claims by the White House even in the slightest degree. Reporting from there, he said that there was nothing out of the ordinary anywhere there and that right on the border he saw troops looking across towards Honduras without any special interest. Murphy added that the men accompanying him and himself had been allowed to come to as close as 50 meters from the border and nobody had obstructed them in any way.

Foreign wire services identified Elliot Abrams, U.S. assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, as one of the masterminds behind the latest provocative anti-Nicaraguan allegation. Right after the administration's setback in the house vote on aid to "contras" he visited Honduras, El Salvador and Costa Rica on President Reagan's instructions, where he held "secret" talks with the local authorities. The press still learnt that his prime mission was to prode them into giving still more solid support for the U.S. aggressive policy against Nicaragua and taking an even more active part in the anti-Nicaraguan militarist provocations engineering by the United States.

Ignoring the world community's demands for an immediate end to the aggressive activities against Nicaragua as well as warnings by U.S. Congressmen that Washington's current policy could land the United States in a war like the one in Vietnam, the Reagan administration continues its dangerous playing with fire, a game fraught with unpredictable consequences, in Central America and other parts of the world.

DUBININ CITED ON U.S. POLICY TOWARD UN

LD212157 Moscow TASS in English 2006 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 21 TASS -- TASS correspondent Vyacheslav Chernyshev reports:

The hostile and unlawful actions taken by the USA against the United Nations and its member countries are viewed by the international community as a major political act of subversion against the very principle of international cooperation and against the foundations of the United Nations and its prestige and Charter.

The escalation of a war on the United Nations by the U.S. Administration is a flagrant breach of international law, Czechoslovakia's permanent representative to the United Nations, Jaroslav Cesar, has stated. Addressing the U.N. Committee on Relations With the Host Country, the United States, he said that the unprecedented actions of the USA could not be viewed out of the context of the overall tendency of American foreign policy. The right-wing forces which came to power in the USA made a sharp turn from detente to policy from armed stength and are rejecting goodneighbourliness and cooperation as principles of world development.

Hostile actions are being taken by the United States at a time when the peoples of the world are looking forward to a turn for the better in international relations. There is no room for such policy in the United Nations, he stressed.

The U.S. Administration has shown on more than one occasion in the past, too, its disregard for its commitments to the United Nations, the Soviet Union's permanent representative to the United Nations, Yu.V. Dubinin, said. Now it has taken another step in escalating this policy. It encroaches on the sovereign rights of the U.N. member countries and tries to arrogate to itself, in the teeth of the U.N. Charter and international accords stemming from it, the right arbitrarily to intervene in the affairs of the missions of other states at the United Nations. The arbitrary stand taken by the U.S. Administration means a blow at the rights of all the U.N. members, a blow at the rights and prerogatives of the United Nations as a whole. The U.S. action constitutes a major political act of subversion against the United Nations.

Washington has set out to institutionalize policy from strength as a norm of relationships between the USA and the most prestigeous international organization. What all this amounts to is a manifestation of the overall approach from strength, practiced by the U.S. Administration in international relations. Here, at the United Nations, we are witnessing another episode of this policy from strength, an attempt to put the USA above all the other states and to dictate conditions to them. This pressure is being exerted also in other areas and in very different forms, in particular, in attempted financial diktat contrary to the decisions of the General Assembly. This arbitrariness has assumed such a scope and such outrageous forms that the USA is being criticised more and more scathingly by a large number of U.N. member states.

The point in case is a major question of principle, the protection of the sovereign rights of the U.N. member countries and of democratic principles in international relations against the dictatorial encroachments of those who are laying claim to the right to impose their will on the rest of the world.

The worry voiced by the delegations of different U.N. member countries is therefore quite understandable. Though today it is the missions of the USSR and a number of other countries that are exposed to arbitrariness, it is clear to everyone that tomorrow this practice, unless effectively repulsed, can affect any other mission. Washington thinks, to all appearances, that the activities of the international organizations, reflecting the will of the overwhelming majority of states, are at odds with the global interests of the USA, its transnational corporations and its military-industrial complex.

The escalation by the U.S. Administration of a hostile campaign against the United Nations, the Soviet spokesman said in conclusion, is taking place at a time when the other countries are making efforts to consolidate the incipient tendency for dialogue and for a search of ways to promote mutual understanding and cooperation among states.

The chairman of the Committee on Relations With the Host Country, Constantine Moushoutas, the permanent representative of Cyprus to the United Nations, said that the committee would continue closely to follow that important matter.

TASS NOTES GROWTH IN U.S. FUNDS FOR ESPIONAGE

LD261320 Moscow TASS in English 1310 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 26 TASS -- The U.S. Administration is planning to set aside a total of 24 billion dollars for the U.S. secret services in the 1987 fiscal year, the newspaper WASHINGTON POST said today.

It is easy to guess what these funds are specifically spent on. Over the period of the stay of the Reagan administration in power, the scale of the CIA's subversive operations has increased several-fold, special emphasis being laid on acts of sabotage by that espionage department against the developing states, above all against Nicaragua, Angola, Afghanistan and Kampuchea. The CIA is to spend in the current year half a million dollars on operations against those sovereign states, the newspaper claims. In the 1987 fiscal year the CIA's total budget will be nearly 2.8 billion dollars.

More than four billion dollars are to be set aside in the next fiscal year for the National Security Agency, which specialises in electronic espionage, wire-tapping and inteception of radio communication. The main object of that unlawful activity are the socialist countries. Yet, the electronic tentacles of the National Security Agency ever more often reach out to U.S. citizens.

The biggest recipient of intelligence information in the USA is the Pentagon, which has been admitted in particular, by Caspar Weinberger, U.S. secretary of defence in his address to the closed door hearings in Congress. Military espionage satellites are launched in the USA, specially equipped U.S. Air Force planes fly secret espionage missions over the territory of sovereign states. Last year the Pentagon began implementing a programme for secret flights over Nicaragua of unmanned planes guided by radio. Espionage equipment is installed in warships and submarines. The American cruiser and destroyer, which were on a provocative msision in the Soviet territorial waters off the shores of the Crimea, were fitted out with espionage equipment to "test the Soviet defence system".

SOVIET PEACE DELEGATION ARRIVES IN CHICAGO

LD211836 Moscow TASS in English 1727 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 21 TASS -- Katya Lycheva was met at the Chicago airport by American children who gave her bunches of roses. She came to the U.S. at the invitation of the "Children as Peacemakers" organization. Her trip is devoted to the memory of Samantha Smith -- the American girl who dreamed of peace and friendship between children and peoples of the USSR and the U.S. "I hope that my journey will contribute just a little bit to the cause of peace", Katya Lycheva said in answer to greetings.

During her two-week tour of the U.S. she will meet with American children of her age in Chicago, New York, Washington, Houston and Los Angeles.

JAPANESE SCIENTISTS' OPPOSITION TO SDI VIEWED

OW260536 Moscow in Japanese to Japan 1000 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Igor Yelskiy commentary]

[Excerpts] The Science Council of Japan has voiced its opposition to the U.S. space militarization plan, better known as the star wars plan. In this connection, Moscow Radio commentator (Igor Yelskiy) made the following comment:

The refusal to participate in the realization of the SDI -- Strategic Defense Initiative -- plan, announced by this authoritative organization of Japanese scientists, was a reaction to the increasingly persistent attempt of Tokyo's official authorities to draw Japan into the realization of the star wars plan, which is dangerous to the cause of peace.

According to YOMIURI SHIMBUN, Washington is trying to lay a heavy financial burden for the realization of SDI on Japan and other allies. This was disclosed in an interview with (?Edward Teller), physicist and one of the advocates of the militarization of outer space, who is close to the White House. (?Teller's) statement corroborates the fact that the Pentagon -- the U.S. Defense Department -- intends to obtain an unlimited amount of Japanese high technology and capital. It also endorses the apprehension entertained by Japanese academic and industrial circles, which are worried that they may not be given anything in return. The most important thing is that the militarily aggressive star wars plan will not bring any benefit to the security of either the United States or its allies.

According to a recent opinion poll conducted among American physicists, a majority believes that the realization of SDI will lead to an expansion of nuclear armament.

Japanese scientists share their belief, and the statement by the Science Council of Japan declares that Japanese scientists, who represent a nation which experienced the tragedy of atomic-bomb attacks, find it impossible to help the star wars plan.

There is an alternative to the dangerous star wars plan. It is the Soviet Union's constructive and definite proposal, calling for cooperation in the peaceful development of space and the use of the gains in this sphere for the well-being of all mankind.

TASS ANALYST LINKS MEESE TRIP TO DRA WAR

LD261308 Moscow TASS in English 1259 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- Follows commentary by Boris Shabeyev, a TASS political news analyst:

The visit to be paid by Edwin Meese, U.S. attorney general, to a camp of Afghan counter-revolutionaries climaxes the foreign tour by the high-ranking Washington official, He is to meet with inveterate cutthroats, whom Washington stubbornly describes as "freedom fighters," He is to read out there a special message from President Reagan addressed to these "fighters." It is precisely for the sake of this meeting at the U.S. President's personal request, that the attorney general went on his tour.

At first sight, this fact could be evaluated as an ordinary one, since countless figures from the entourage of the American President and from among his NATO supporters have favoured the Afghan counter-revolutionary rabble with their attention.

And yet Mr Meese's current meeting with the counter-revolutionaries is noteworthy in some respects. Judging by the reports in THE WASHINGTON TIMES it is to be held in conditions of tight security -- both the position of the camp and venue of the meeting itself are top secret, and the White House envoy himself is travelling under the guard of a whole army of FBI agents. Why is that so? There was a time when Western visitors willingly posed with binoculars in their hands in front of photo and television cameras on the Khyber Pass.

The point is that the situation in that area has fundamentally changed. The Pashtun tribes resident there have lost all patience any have resolutely come out against the use of their territory as a base of aggression against their brothers in Afghanistan, began driving out arms in hand the fosterlings of the CIA and the Pakistani services from bandit nests. This answeres the question of the tight security measures around Mr Meese.

A second factor worthy of attention is that even as Western journalists, who are far from sympathising with revolutionary Afghanistan, but are professionally honest, admit, the prestige and influence of the people's power is steadily growing in that country. People deceived by malicious propaganda are waking up to the facts and actively joining in the effort to build a new life, joining the ranks of its defenders. One can read about it in greater detail, in particular a detailed report of Jonathan Steel in the British GUARDIAN of March 17.

As a result the process of strengthening and broadening of the social base of the April Revolution and erosion of the forces of counter-revolution is gaining in strength. In recent times alone nearly 30 thousand counter-revolutionaries have ceased struggle and returned home. Many of them have joined the local detachments of defenders of the revolution.

Therefore, they in the West became fussy in an attempt at galvanising Afghan counter-revolution, instigating to fresh crimes, frustrate the efforts of the DRA Government, the United Nations Organization and peaceful states for a political settlement of the situation aroung Afghanistan. Edwin Meese's trip is a new link in the chain of irrefutable proofs of Washington's direct responsibility for continuing the undeclared war against the DRA. This also the course reaffirmed by the U.S. Administration for an extremely dangerous heightening of tensions in the world, which the USA is demonstrating in Libya, Nicaragua, South Africa and Southeast Asia.

MORE REPORTS ON ITALIAN PARLIAMENTARIAN's VISIT

Voss Hosts Jotti

LD261704 Moscow TASS in English 1520 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- "Parliamentarians of the Italian Republic are always welcome guests in our country," said Avgust Voss, chairman of the Soviet of Nationalities, one of the two chambers of the USSR Supreme Soviet. He spoke today at a luncheon held in the Kremlin on behalf of the chairman of both chambers on the occasion of Leonilde Jotti's stay in the USSR. The president of the Chamber of Deputues of the Parliament of the Italian Republic is staying on an official visit in the Soviet Union at the invitation of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

"Much importance is attached in the USSR to the development of Soviet-Italian contacts on the parliamentary line," Avgust Voss went on. He stressed that the conversations of Mikhail Gorbachev, Andrey Gromyko with the Italian guest held during the visit had confirmed the striving of the Soviet side for the further development and consolidation of Soviet-Italian relations in the interests of European and international security. He said the consolidation of these contacts is of much importance for achieving a turn of events from confrontation to detente, for confidence-building, creation of a reliable security, stepping up actions against the transfer of the arms race to space and its terminiation on earth.

Leonilde Jotti pointed out that the cordial welcome accorded her in Moscow confirmed that friendship and goodneighbourliness are characteristic of relations of the peoples of the two countries. "We in Italy followed with close attention the work of the 27th CPSU Congress and regard it as an event of extreme importance, first of all due to the spirit of renewal manifested at the Congress," the guest said. Touching upon international problems, Leonilde Jotti declared:

"All countries regardless of the place they hold in world affairs, of membership of alliances, must promote the cause of peace in order to remove dangerous conflicts. It is necessary to assert new logic in international relations. The Soviet-U.S. summit meeting has led to the emergence of new elements that could result in concrete actions aimed at the easing of international tension," she said. "The program of the elimination of nuclear weapons set out in Mikhail Gorbachev's statement is also directed at achieving these aims," the guest said.

Talks Held

LD261708 Moscow TASS in English 1745 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 26 TASS -- "The prime aim of the Soviet state is to rid the world of threats and aggression, to base relations with others on the principles of equality and mutual respect," it was stated by Avgust Voss. The chairman of the Soviet of Nationalities, one of the two chambers of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR, had a meeting in the Kremlin today with Leonilde Jotti, chairman of the chamber of deputies of the Italian parliament. The meeting took place within the framework of her official visit to the USSR at the invitation of the Soviet parliament.

"The struggle for lasting peace and international cooperation is the foundation of the USSR Supreme Soviet's foreign policy activity," Avgust Voss went on. The course of expanding ties with all those who oppose war was confirmed at the 27th CPSU congress.

"Following this course Soviet members of parliament strive to develop the dialogue with their Italian colleagues," he said.

Views were exchanged on questions concerning ways of strengthening peace, security and cooperation in Europe and on the contribution that parliaments could make to continuing and developing the Helsinki process. Leonilde Jotti informed her Soviet colleagues about the activities of the Italian Parliament and declared for the further development of ties with the Supreme Soviet of the USSR. She expressed gratitude for the possibility to visit the Soviet Union and spoke highly of her meetings and conversations with Mikhail Gorbachev and Andrey Gromyko.

In the course of the conversation confidence was expressed that the visit to the USSR by the chairman of the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament will facilitate the deepening of mutual understanding between the peoples of the USSR and Italy, the expansion of cooperation between the two countries in various spheres. Taking part in the conversation were Vadim Zagladin, secretary of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Soviet of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, Vladimir Karpov, member of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the Soviet of Nationalities of the USSR Supreme Soviet, as well as officials accompanying Leonilde Jotti.

U.S. TAKES 'DISCRIMINATORY' POLICY TOWARD TURKEY

LD261230 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0900 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Shultz' talks in Ankara have ended without success. One of the main issues of the Turkish-U.S. meeting was to extend the bilateral agreement on cooperation in defense and the economy, which expired last December. In exchange for granting credits to Turkey, Washington once again attempted to get as many advantages as possible from Ankara and for its military bases on that country's territory. Turkey, however, is striving to put a stop to the U.S. discriminatory approach in the development of trade and economic ties.

HOWE ATTEMPTS TO PRESSURE GREECE ON POLICY

LD240820 Moscow TASS in English 0718 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Athens, March 24 TASS -- The British Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Geoffrey Howe, now on a visit in Greece, tried to put pressure on that country's government in order to make it give up its independent foreign policy course. During his talks with Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou and other cabinet ministers he spoke from tough pro-NATO positions and displayed dissatisfaction with the Greek Government's stand for detente and disarmament, for creating a nuclear-free zone in the Balkans. It is noted here that a new attempt by NATO to put pressure on the Greek leadership will be made during the forthcoming visit to Athens by the United States Secretary of State George Shultz.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF ALGERIAN PRESIDENT

Gorbachev, Bendjedid Confer

LD261831 Moscow TASS in English 1819 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, had a meeting in the Kremlin today with Chadli Bendjedi, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party.

Mikhail Gorbachev and Chadli Bendjedid spoke highly of the nature and level of the relationship between the two friendly countries and peoples. They expressed profound satisfaction with the atmosphere of trust, mutual understanding and sympathy, which has been characteristic both of the communication between the leaders of the two states and parties and of the entire course of the Soviet-Algerian talks.

It was reaffirmed that relations between the USSR and Algeria are built on the basis of the long-term interests of both states and have good prospects for further all-round development. Shared readiness was voiced to solve any problems, which may crop up in these relations, in the manner customary with friendly countries.

Discussed during the conversation were the most important issues of bilaterial cooperation, acute regional problems of special interest to both countries, and the general international situation at the moment.

Discuss International Issues

LD262041 Moscow TASS in English 1951 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic, general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party, held talks in the Kremlin today.

During the talks that passed in an atmosphere of friendship and mutual understanding the sides exchanged information about the achievements of the U.S.S.R. and Algeria in the socio-economic development and about the tasks facing the peoples of both countries. The sides expressed satisfaction at the successful development of bilateral Soviet-Algerian cooperation.

The sides had a detailed exchange of opinions on problems pertaining to the existing international situation, including the latest Soviet initiatives aimed at averting the nuclear threat and terminating the arms race, at safeguarding and strengthening universal peace. The attention of the Algerian side was drawn to the program for the elimination of nuclear weapons formulated in the January 15, 1986 statement of Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and to the proposals put forward by the 27th congress of the CPSU on the establishment of a comprehensive system of international security.

During the discussion of Mid-Eastern affairs the sides expressed preoccupation with the persisting explosive situation in that region. It was reaffirmed that a just and durable Middle East settlement could be achieved only on the principled basis, including the withdrawal of Israeli troops from all the territories occupied since 1967, ensuring the inalienable national rights of the Arab people of Palestine, and taking account of the legitimate interests of all countries and peoples of the region.

The participants in the talks came out in favor of scaled-up coordinated efforts of the Soviet Union and Algeria and other Arab countries toward the convocation of an international conference as a practical way for achieving a comprehensive, durable, and just settlement in the Middle East.

During the talks aggressive actions of the USA against the sovereign Libyan state were strongly condemned and solidarity with the Libyan people at that hour of difficulty for it was reaffirmed.

During the talks note was taken of the great importance of stronger cooperation of all progressive and peaceful forces in the efforts to avert the threat of nuclear war, enhance international security and ensure the rights of nations to independence and social progress. The sides emphasized that an important role in that respect belonged to the Nonaligned Movement the 8th summit conference of which would be held in Harare, the capital of Zimbabwe, in 1986.

The discussion of urgent problems of the existing international situation, including the situation in the Middle East, in the Mediterranean region, on the African Continent and in other regions, confirmed the similarity or identity of positions of both sides.

The talks will continue.

Review CPSU Congress

LD261937 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1800 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Excerpts] In the Kremlin today, talks were held between Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian Popular and Democratic Republic and general secretary of the National Liberation Front. Taking part were: on the USSR side, Comrade Gromyko, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium; Comrade Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of foreign affairs; Comrade Sokolov, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR defense minister; Comrade Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee; Comrade Katushev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations; and others. On the Algerian side were persons accompanying the Algerian president.

Mikhail Segeyevich Gorbachev spoke about the results of the work of the 27th CPSU Congress which adopted a new edition of the CPSU Program and confirmed amendments in the Party Rules and approved the Basic Gudelines of the USSR national economy for 1986-1990 and the period up to the year 2000. It was emphasized that the strategic line adopted and practical program for accelerating the socioeconomic development of the country and the course toward consolidating peace on earth were the main political result of the congress. Its decisions determine both the character and the tempo of movement of USSR society for the years and decades ahead.

For his part, Chadli Bendjedid spoke about the results of the extraordianry congress of the FLN Party and the national referendum which approved the new edition of the National Charter of the Algerian Popular and Democratic Republic which reaffirmed the Algerian people's adherence to the socialist option.

Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev highly assessed the successes achieved by Algeria in the cause of building a new society. Satisfaction was expressed at the successful development of bilateral USSR-Algerian cooperation.

'Text' of Gorbachev Speech

LD261709 Moscow TASS in English 1651 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- Follows the full text of the speech delivered by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, today at the dinner in the Kremlin in honour of Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Deomcratic Republic and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party.

Dear friends, comrades, We are glad to greet in Moscow you, esteemed Comrade Chadli Bendjedid, our high and welcome guest, your wife Halima Bendjedid, and all the members of your delegation and those who accompany you.

We are discussing at the negotiating table a broad range of questions. They pertain both to bilateral Soviet-Algerian relations and to international problems. Our conversations are passing in an atmosphere of trust and mutual understanding, as befits talks between friends. We think highly of the current state of Soviet-Algerian relations and are willing further to develop them.

The world today is complex and multifaceted, and we do not tire of pointing out this fact over and over again. Very different countries make up the world community today. Each of those countries has its own history, traditions, national features and specific characteristics. But all of them are standing up for their sovereignty and rightfully wishing to make a distinctive contribution to world politics. A realistic course cannot be pursued unless this fundamental characteristic of today's world is respected. I want to stress that understanding of this fact and respect for the interests of other states constitute the alfa and omega of Soviet foreign policy.

But it is also true that the internationalization of social, political and economic life that is characterisitc of our time and scientific and technical progress are linking the countries of the world ever more closely and facing them with common human problems ever more imperatively. The main one of them is, of course, the need to avert nuclear war. The hyman race has never before confronted the risk of self-destruction.

That is why there has never been such a vital need for cooperation in self-preservation and survival. The very preparations for nuclear war, in which there can be no winners, are putting an ever heavier burden on the peoples. The arms race is becoming a more and more serious obstacle to progress.

The Soviet Union, possessing advanced scientific knowledge, is well aware of the senseless and dangerous character of these developments. That is why we are raising the alarm and urging others, too to pursue responsible policies. We are urging them to give up the risky gamble with policy from strength and the crazy chase of the will-o'-the wisp of military superiority. The CPSU put forward at its 27th congress the concept of a comprehensive system of international security and formulated its fundamental principles. It is our conviction that all the states regardless of their ideological goals and potentials have an interest in the development of such a system.

We are going to work purposefully and tirelessly towards this goal. We are pleased to note that our honest stand is winning increasing support both among friends and in the world community as a whole, including non-aligned countries. The Soviet union attaches much importance to the positions of the Non-Aligned Movement, in which friendly Algeria is holding a prominent place. We hope that that movement will play an increasingly important role in world politics.

Regional problems, which are catalysts of local and international tension, also have independent significance which is vital to world development as a whole.

Though specific circumstances are vastly different, each of those problems, when all is said and done, hinges on the right of the peoples to decide their destinies independently. So these problems should be resolved without imperialist intervention, under conditions of respect for the independence and lawful aspirations of the peoples. We will never consent to difficulties faced by the peoples on the path of progress being used by external forces for exploiting and reactionary goals, be it in the Arab East, Latin America, Africa, Afghanistan or Southeast Asia.

Aggressive and provocative policy has recently been given in Washington a potent dope of a "doctrine of new globalism." They want to convince the world that the case in point is a new phase of struggle for "democracy" and against "communist expansion." But what they got away with in the past no longer works. The peoples have learned to see through the true plans of world reaction today.

They see that in reality it is the self-same imperial policy aimed at subordinating and enslaving, at subverting and suppressing national liberation movements and regimes disliked by America. However hard they try, they will never succeed in portraying as champions of democracy either the Somozista cutthroats,or the mercenaries and bandits in Angola and Mozambique, or the bosses of apartheid, or the Pol Pot men, instigators of genocide, or those who blow up schools and mosques in Afghanistan, or the U.S. invaders and their stooges in Grenada. The thrust of the "doctrine of new globalism" is complete disregard for the commonly recognized norms of international relations, encorachment on the sovereignty of states and the erstwhile futile attempt to deny the peoples the right to organize their lives as they see fit.

The imperial, bandit face of neoglobalist policy as become clearly visible in the past few days. The day before yesterday, American weapons were used against independent and sovereign Libya. Now the USA is not stinting words to justify that act of aggression. Facts irrefutably show, however, that it is not an unexpected incident but a "punitive" operation conceived and planned in advance.

It is not today that Libya has become a target. The provocative and threatening manoeuvres of American ships off its coast have become permanent. And what about a trade, financial and technological blockade of Libya and other discriminatory measures against it? They can only be qualified as economic terror! And look at the psychological and propaganda warfare that has been waged against Libya over the months!

The actions of the United States constitute a challenge to the world public as a whole and an encroachment on commonly recognized civilized relations. This policy is provoking regional conflicts and jeopardizing international peace and security. It is directed against all the independent peoples and contravenes the interests of the American people as well.

We resolutely denounce the aggressive anti-Libyan actions of the USA. The Soviet Union is in solidarity with the Libyan people, standing up for their sacred right to freedom and independence from imperialist encorachments.

Now that our Algerian friends are present here, I would like to touch upon the situation in the Mediterranean as a whole. The situation here affects many countries, including the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union stands for making the Mediterranean, the cradle of many civilizations, into a zone of stable peace and cooperation. Our proposals for extending agreed confidence-building measures to cover that region, reduced armed forces, withdrawing ships carrying nuclear weapons from the Mediterranean, renouncing the deployment of such weapons in the territories of Mediterranean non-nuclear countries, and for the nuclear powers to make a commitment not to use such weapons against any Mediterranean country that does not allow their stationing in its territory remain in force.

We are prepared to go even further. For the Soviet Union in principle there is no need to have its naval fleet in the Mediterranean on a permanent basis. It has to keep its ships there permanently for this sole reason: The U.S. 6th Fleet armed with nuclear-missile weapons and threatening the security of the USSR. Its allies and friends is in the immediate proximity of our borders.

If the United States, which is situated thousands upon thousands of miles from the Mediterranean, pulled its fleet out of there, the Soviet Union would simultaneously do the same. We are prepared without delay to enter talks on the issue.

At this first stage there would be imposed no restrictions on the naval activities and naval armaments of the coastal Mediterranean states themselves. Further steps to strengthen security in the region could, in our opinion, be determined with account taken of the Soviet proposals made in the statement of January 15, 1986, on the abolition of weapons of mass destruction.

In the Soviet Union the initiatives of the non-aligned Mediterranean countries, which are going to hold their second conference on Malta this year, are treated with understanding. We believe that a useful role would be played also by a broader conference similar to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Apart from the Mediterranean states and the states adjoining the region, it could be attended also by the United States and other interested countries.

Fuelled by Israel's aggressive ambitions and Washington's anti-Arab, anti-Palestinian policy, tension continues unabated in the Middle East. Latest developments have demonstrated once again the untenability of the separate, capitulatory deals imperialists and related quarters are prodding Arabs into. We are for defusing the confict situation in the Middle East with consideration given to the rightful interests of all states and peoples located there. The Soviet Union continues to regard convening an international conference with the equal participation of all sides concerned, including the PLO, as offering a reliable path towards this goal.

The '80s have been marked by mounting crisis trends in the economies of African states. Their development has been significantly complicated by the West's stepped-up neocolonialist exploitation of their natural resources, worsening conditions for barter in world markets, and the imperialists states' striving to lay the consequences of their crises on the peoples and shift the burden of the arms race onto their shoulders. Solving these problems requires the participation of all states, regardless of how different their ideological views, economic posssibilities and the sizes of their territories and population may be.

The militarism-imposed principle "armament instead of development" should give way to a different principle, namely "disarmament for development". We see the economic security of states as part and parcel of an all-embracing system of international security.

We suggest holding a world congress to discuss as a package everything that encumbers world economic relations, including such issues as foreign debt, the switching of funds released as a result of cuts in arms and military budgets over to supplying development needs, and projects for a new world economic order.

Comrades, the foundations of relations between the Soviet Union and Algeria were laid down way back during the years of the Algerian people's liberation struggle. Today we express satisfaction with their successful ongoing development. And we are convinced that the equitable and mutually beneficial Soviet-Algerian cooperation has broad prospects. We attach special significance to links between the CPSU and the FLN Party for efficient interaction and friendly mutual understanding between our two states and peoples. These links also enhance our solidarity in the common anti-imperialist struggle.

Together with the Algerian people we rejoice at their successes in consolidating national independence, laying a solid groundwork for the national economy, establishing a state sector and solving a number of complex social problems. We are pleased that a certain contribution to this has been made by Soviet specialists working hand in hand with their Algerian brothers.

In the Soviet Union much importance is given to the fact that during a recent referendum the Algerian people reaffirmed their socialist choice. They may count on the Soviet Union's continued support in tackling the tasks of economic and cultural development, in the training of national personnel and in other fields.

Let me once again greet from the bottom of my heart Comrade Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic and general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party, his wife and all Algerian delegation and accompanying persons.

I wish sound health and success to all Algerian and Soviet comrades present here.

Report on Bendjedid Speech

LD262225 Moscow TASS in English 2126 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- Algerian-Soviet relations are marked by the spirit of friendship and mutual understanding. They rest on political trust and are characterized by positive dynamics of economic, scientific and technical ties, said Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic, general secretary of the National Liberation Front Party. He made a speech in the Kremlin today at a dinner given in his honor by the CPSU Central Committee, the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet Government.

Expressing satisfaction at the character and volume of Algerian-Soviet cooperation, the Algerian leader said, we still believe that not all reserves have been tapped in this sphere and not all possibilities have been exhausted. This is why efforts should continue in the future to expand it and made it conform to the economic possibilities and the pace of developments of our countries.

Chadli Bendjedid said: The development of current international relations as a whole -- both political and economic -- causes our profound concern. A very dangerous situation has taken shape on earth as a consequence of political and economic instability. The arms race increasingly undermines the security of humankind, depriving it of valuable resources necessary to ensure prosperity for all. Persisting tension and aggravating conflicts in different regions of the world contradict the striving of nations for peace and well-being. The continuing existence of seats of imperialist and racial dominance demonstrates with all clarity the degree of anomaly of the situation in the international community and bears evidence to the deepening gap in the levels of development.

Pursuing the policy of true nonalignment, Algeria honors its commitments as a member of the Nonaligned Movement and remains loyal to the principles tempered in the fire of the national-liberation war. The completion of the process of elimination of colonialism, the establishment of a new international economic order, the attainment of disarmament, the ensuring of collective security, world-wide, the assertion of the principles of peaceful settlement of conflicts and the elimination of tensions -- all this makes up the foundation on which Algeria's activities on the international scene rest.

In this respect, Chadli Bendjedid said, Algeria is concerned to the utmost over the current events in the Mediterranean. The use of methods of violence and aggression acquired a new scope in that region. The Arab nation is subjected to threats and aggression, as was the case in Tunisia yesterday and as is the case in Libya today. Algeria condemns the aggression staged against Libya. It solidarizes with the fraternal Libyan people at that hour of difficulty for it.

The lesson that should be learnt from the current events evidently is that the Mediterranean should become a zone of peace and cooperation. Algeria has always made efforts to achieve that goal and the current disquieting development of events only makes it more determined in its striving for that.

By virtue of its natural belonging to Africa and the Arab world Algeria is concerned with the problems of these two regions and proceeds from the close interrelationship of their struggle. We are aware of the obstacles into which the liberation process runs both in the Middle East and the South Africa as a consequence of the aggressive character of the racist and expansionist regimes that serve as allies and props of imperialism.

The Middle East that has become a region of permanent tension is in the state of a crisis fraught with a threat to international peace and security. To defuse that crisis, Chadli Bendjedid emphasized, it is necessary to call an international conference with the full-fledged participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization which is the sole representative of the Palestinian people empowered to decide its destiny.

ENVOY TO IRAN MEETS VELAYATI, DISCUSSES LIBYA

LD271046 Tehran IRNA in English 1034 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] March 27, Tehran -- The Soviet Union Ambassador to Tehran, V.K. Boldyrev, in a meeting with Foreign Affairs Minister 'Ali Akbar Velayati here Thursday, explained stance of his government towards recent U.S. aggression against Libya. He also urged the Islamic Republic of Iran to make efforts and cooperate for the establishment of peace in southern Mediterranean. The Soviet diplomat also called on Iran to support the Soviet efforts in the emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council.

Boldyrev expressed concern of his country over restrictions created for the Soviet diplomats by the U.S. Administration in the United Nations. He hoped that the Islamic Republic of Iran will take measures against such expansionist policies.

Velayati said that Iran held a similar view on the U.S. aggression against Libya and the Islamic Republic of Iran has strongly condemned the U.S. action and calls for an all-out support for Libya. The Islamic Republic of Iran, he told the Soviet diplomat, will do whatever possible to protect independence and national sovereignty of Libya.

As for the U.S. restrictions on certain countries in the United Nations, he said that U.S. has exerted such pressures on Iran in post-revolutionary period. Iran, he added, protests against any pressure or influence of any country in the United Nations and has voiced its opposition in this respect.

During the meeting expansion of bi-lateral relations in all fields were discussed.

ARABS EXPRESS 'PROFOUND INDIGNATION' AT U.S. ACTS

LD261605 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0730 GMT 26 Mar 86

[North Africa correspondent Yevgeniy Lukyanov report]

[Text] The piratical attack by the U.S. military on the Libyan Jamahariya has evoked profound indignation in Arab countries.

It is viewed here as a most crude violation of all the norms of international law. The Washington administration, no longer restricting itself to the campaign of threats, blackmail and provocations which have continued incessantly for 3 months, has gone on to direct military actions against that Arab state, whose anti-imperialist policy has long caused irritation in the White House. The bombing of the suburb of the town of Surt by U.S. aircraft based on vessels of the U.S. 6th Fleet assembled off Libya's shores, was a preplanned armed operation arising from the policy of international terrorism conducted by Washington.

In connection with the act of direct armed aggression against the neighboring Libyan Jamahariya undertaken by the United States, the Algerian Foreign Ministry has issued a statement which stresses the unjustified nature of the U.S. action, which is extremely dangerous for the peoples of ther region. Algeria, the statement says, expresses its deep concern and disquiet at the dangerous development of events, and is in total solidarity with the fraternal Libyan people who are defending their gains and the sovereignty of their homeland.

The broad wave of protests and condemnations of the U.S. criminal aggression and of demands that provocations against Libya should cease which has swept the whole world, has by all accounts not found any response in the thoughts of those who rule in Washington. The Pentagon's war games in the Mediterranean have grown into a dangerous playing with fire which cannot fail to causes alarm for all the whom peace and security in the world are dear.

PALESTINIAN GROUP SUPPORTS AL-QADHDHAFI

LD231855 Moscow TASS in English 1810 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Tripoli March 23 TASS -- Unceasing threats and armed provocations by Washington against sovereign Libya are part of the state terrorism policy pursued by the American Administration against peaceloving nations in various parts of the world. Nayif Hawatimah, the general secretary of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, said. A spate of provocative manoeuvres by the American military near Libyan shores, Washington's economic sanctions and the rabid anti-Libyan campaign, he pointed out in a telegram to Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, the leader of the Libyan revolution, are aimed at forcing the people and the Libyab leadership to abandon their antiimperialist course in the international arena and the principled stand on the Middle Eastern problem. Hawatimah expressed solidarity of the Palestinian people with the people of Libya upholding their sovereignty and independence.

Need To Integrate Congress Decisions Stressed

PM261440 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Mar 86
First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "Promoting the Congress' Ideas Among the Masses"]

[Text] Our country is living and working under the profound influence of the 27th CPSU Congress' ideas and decisions. It was a congress that answered life's questions with a Leninist frankness and armed the party and the people, at the new and crucial stage of Soviet society's development, with a programmatic document and a bold strategy for acceleration.

The main aim now is not only to preserve but to consolidate in all party organizations and every labor collective an atmosphere of principledness and high exactingness toward cadres for their assigned work and for the prompt exposure and elimination of shortcomings and omissions — an atmosphere created by the congress. A recently adopted CPSU Central Committee Politburo resolution reemphasized the need for the urgent inclusion of all elements of the Soviet political system in energetic work to implement the large-scale tasks posed by the congress.

As is well known, the congress' results and the tasks arising from its decisions are due to be discussed at party committee plenums, at aktiv meetings, and within primary party organizations. These questions are also to be examined at soviet sessions, within trade union and Komsomol organizations, and at sessions of ministry and department collegiums. That discussion has already begun. The course of restructuring and the reserves and potential for acceleration in the solution of the most important national economic tasks and for increasing the effectiveness of Communists' organizational and ideological education work have been analyzed in a businesslike way at a Belorussian Communist Party Central Committee Plenum. An extensive and thoroughly exhaustive discussion of the ways of achieving what has been planned is now in progress at party and workers' meetings in the collectives.

The discussion's main aim is to focus attention on the practical fulfillment of the congress decisions in the specific conditions existing in each sector, each city or village, and each labor collective. Attention should center on the implementation of the plan targets for this year and the 12th 5-Year Plan as a whole, and the comprehensive improvement of organizational and political work and the style and methods of leadership in economic and social development and the business of the working people's communist education. It must not be forgotten that acceleration and radical transformations in all spheres of our life are no mere slogan, but a course which the party follows firmly and steadfastly.

"The most important matter on which the full force of party influence must now be brought to bear," the CPSU Central Committee's report to the congress noted, "is to ensure that each person understands the acuteness and crucial nature of the present moment. All our plans will be left up in the air if people remain indifferent and if we cannot arouse the masses' labor and social activeness, energy, and initiative."

One of the most crucial matters is ensuring that the CPSU Central Committee Political Report, the party program and statutes, and other congress documents are explained on a wide scale. The essence and spirit of the congress decisions must be conveyed to each Soviet person, and, at the same time, practical work must be organized in accordance with present-day requirements. This is the paramount duty of party organizations, leading cadres, and the entire ideological aktiv. It should also be the aim of propaganda in lecture form, touring propaganda groups, and integrated political theme days involving congress delegates.

Special attention should be paid to the in-depth study of 27th CPSU Congress materials within the party study and economic education system, in various forms of mass propaganda, and at educational institutions. Matters must be arranged to ensure that the clarification of congress documents is closely linked with vigorous practical actions to accelerate the country's socioeconomic development and to ensure that topical questions of intensifying the economy and improving people's living and working conditions, improving Soviet democracy, and further strengthening discipline and order are constantly at the fore. The task of fundamentally improving output quality must be the vital cause of every Communist and worker. The practical implementation of the congress decisions presupposes a bold creative search, a universal affirmation of the principles of social justice, and a consolidation of our moral fundamentals.

The scale and novelty of the work ahead requires a fundamental restructuring of thinking on the part of everyone — from ordinary workers to ministers. That is why it is so important to strengthen the spirit of constructiveness, criticism, and self-criticism in the propaganda and study of congress materials and in work to implement its decisions, while resolutely doing away with waffling, ostentation, complacency, and hollow triumphs. There is now no task more urgent than garnering the grains of practical experience engendered in every area, be it production or management, the work of social organization, the economic mechanism, or party activity. In this a great role is played by our press, radio, and television, which are required to be a veritable platform for that practical experience and for people's creative initiatives aimed at resolving our strategic problems and daily tasks.

Mastering the priceless ideological wealth of the 27th CPSU Congress, propagandizing and explaining its decisions and documents, and providing the organizational and political backup for the tasks put forward by it is great and multifaceted long-term work. Superficiality, hurried work, indifference, and formalism are unacceptable here. Real achievements in the struggle for the intensification of production, fundamental acceleration of scientific and technical progress, thrift and the saving of resources, high labor discipline, and strict observance of the norms of communist morality — that is what now determines the effectiveness of restructuring and the standard of party and economic leadership and political education work with people, not loud appeals or promises.

Intensive and high quality work by all the people is the main and determining guarantee of the acceleration of economic development and the improvement of people's living conditions. The party calls on every Communist and every citizen in the country to actively join this great work of implementing our plans, improving Soviet society, and renovating our socialist home.

Regulations on Meetings Issued in Kazakhstan

LD261144 Alma-Ata KAZAKHSTANSKAYA PRAVDA in Russian 23 Feb 86 p 3

[Unattributed feature: "Regulations Regarding General Meetings and Gatherings of Citizens at their Places of Residence in the Kazakh SSR"]

[Text] I. General

Article 1. According to the Constitution of the Kazakh SSR, local soviets of people's deputies involve citizens in participating, on a large scale, in their work; they submit the most important matters for their consideration and develop the public spontaneous activity of the population.

General meetings and gatherings of citizens at their places of residence are one of the forms of direct participation by the population in solving questions of local, republican, and all-union importance.

Article 2. Citizens who have reached the age of 16 years and permanently live in the given territory take part in the work of general meetings and gatherings.

Article 3. General meetings and gatherings of citizens are convened on the initiative of local soviets of people's deputies and their executive committees.

The proposals regarding the convening of a general meeting or gathering and regarding the matters due to be discussed by it can be submitted by permanent commissions of local soviets of people's deputies; deputies' groups; deputies; organs of public organizations, people's control, and public spontaneous activity of the population; law enforcement organs; leaders of enterprises, establishments, and organizations; and by citizens.

Article 4. General meetings of citizens who live in towns are convened correspondingly by gorispolkoms or rayispolkoms on the basis of microrayons, blocks, streets, or houses.

General meetings and gatherings of citizens who live in the territory of a settlement, village, or aul soviet are convened correspondingly by the executive committee of the settlement, village, or aul soviet. In the same order, general meetings and gatherings of citizens are convened on the basis of populated areas, housing blocks, or streets.

General meetings and gatherings of the citizens who live in populated areas that are under the administrative jurisdiction of a town or town rayon soviet are convened by the executive committee of the appropriate soviet.

By agreement with the executive committee of the appropriate local soviet, general meetings and gatherings can be convened by public settlement, village, aul, housing block, street, and house committees to solve matters within the scope of their competence.

In cases where the convening of a general meeting or gathering is difficult, meetings or gatherings of representatives of the citizens of populated areas, microrayons, blocks, streets, and houses can be held. The norms of representation are established by the executive committee of the appropriate town, town rayon, settlement, village, or aul soviet of people's deputies.

Article 5. General meetings and gatherings of citizens are convened as necessary, but no less frequently than once a year.

The general meeting or gathering is competent if it is attended by over half of the total number of citizens enjoying the right to participate in the meeting or gathering, or their representatives. When necessary, the leaders of the appropriate enterprises, establishments, or organizations are invited to attend the meetings or gatherings of citizens.

Article 6. General meetings and gatherings of citizens guide themselves in their work with the legislation of the USSR, the Kazakh SSR, these regulations, and the decisions of the appropriate soviets of people's deputies and their executive committees.

II. Competence of General Meetings and Gatherings of Citizens

Article 7. At general meetings and gatherings of citizens:

1. are elected public settlement, village, aul, area, street, housing block, and house committees; comrades' courts; and other organs of public spontaneous activity of the population;

2. are heard reports and information on the work of soviets of people's deputies, permanent commissions, executive committees and their departments and directorates, as well as the reports of organs of public spontaneous activity for the population, area militia inspectors, managers of palaces and houses of culture, clubs, cultural and sports complexes, and sports units;

3. are discussed draft laws and decisions of local soviets of people's deputies and their executive committees on the most important matters and on legislation and other bills enacted by organs of the state authorities and government;

4. are discussed matters of improvement of the state and amenities of populated areas; the preservation and proper usage of housing; municipal, customer, cultural, and other services provided to the population; the development of physical culture and sports; the organization of recreation for citizens at their places of residence; the protection of nature and the environment; the provision of assistance to sovkhozes and kolkhozes in carring out agricultural work; the promotion of personal auxiliary farms belonging to citizens; and the involvment of the popualation in work on the implementation of the mandate of the electors;

5. are examined the matters of education of the population in the spirit of Soviet patriotism, socialist internationalism, observance of laws, thriftiness as regards the people's property, and an uncompromising attitude towards drinking, hooliganism, profiteering, and other antisocial phenomena

6. are dicussed the behavior of citizens, who permit themselves to violate Soviet laws, public order, rules of the socialist community, and decisions of local soviets of people's deputies and their executive committees, as well as the decisions of general meetings and gatherings of citizen;

7. are examined the matters connected with naming and renaming in the established order or populated areas, streets, places, and other constituent parts of populated areas;

8. are solved the problems of self-taxation of rural population;

9. are examined other matters of economic and sociocultural construction in accordance with the legislation.

Article 8. At general meetings and gatherings of citizens, the nomination of candidates for deputies of settlement, village, and aul soviets of people's deputies is done, and questions are raised about the recall of deputies of such soviets; people's assessors are elected to rayon (town) people's courts, and the questions of their recall are resolved.

The rules for holding such general meetings and gatherings of citizens, and their competence are regulated by the appropriate legislation of the USSR and the Kazakh SSR.

Article 9. General meetings and gatherings can address their proposals to state and public organs, enterprises, establishments, organizations, and officials, which must examine these proposals within a month and inform the executive committee of the appropriate soviet of people's deputies about the measures taken. The soviet of people's deputies then informs the population about this.

Article 10. General meetings and gatherings of citizens can apply measures of public influence, i.e. warnings and reprimands, to persons who commit the violations mentioned in Paragraph 6 of Article 7 of these regulations, and to persons who do not implement the decisions of the general meetings and gatherings of citizens.

When necessary, general meetings and gatherings of citizens can send the material on persons who have committed violations of the public order and rules of the socialist community to the comrades' court, or appeal to the competent organs to make violators answerable, administratively or another way.

III. The Rules for Preparing and Holding General Meetings and Gatherings of Citizens

Article 11. The preparing and holding of general meetings and gatherings is assured by the executive committee of the appropriate soviet of people's deputies.

When a public settlement, village, aul, area, street, block, or house committee convenes a general meeting or gathering of citizens, the appropriate committee assures its preparation.

The population is informed in good time as to the time and place of a general meeting or gathering of citizens and the matters proposed for discussion.

Article 12. A general meeting or gathering is opened by the chairman (deputy chairman or secretary) of the executive committee of the appropriate soviet of people's deputies or by a person empowered for this by the executive committee.

A general meeting or gathering of citizens, which is convened by a public settlement, village, aul, area, street, block, or house committee, is opened by the chairman (deputy chairman or secretary) of the appropriate public committee.

Article 13. A presidium, consisting of a chairman, secretary and one to three members, is elected for the purpose of directing the general meetings or gatherings of citizens.

The agenda is approved by the general meeting or gathering of citizens.

Article 14. At a meeting or gathering of citizens, minutes are taken indicating the date and place of the meeting or gathering; the total number of citizens living in this territory and enjoying the right to participate in the meeting or gathering, or the total number of representatives; the number of those present at the meeting; and the composition of the presidium, the agenda, the contents of the speeches and the decisions adopted.

The minutes are signed by the chairman and the secretary of the general meeting or gathering of citizens and are passed to the executive committee of the appropriate soviet of people's deputies.

Article 15. The decisions of general meetings and gatherings of citizens are made by a show of hands of those citizens present at the meeting, for a majority vote.

The decisions of general meetings and gatherings are compulsory for observance by all residents of the appropriate populated areas, microrayons, blocks, streets, or houses.

Article 16. The decisions adopted by general meetings and gatherings of citizens are implemented either by the executive committees of the appropriate soviets of people's deputies, or, on their behalf, by public settlement, village, aul, area, street, block or house committees, or other organs of public spontaneous activity of the population.

The citizens themselves, as well as the appropriate enterprises, establishments, and organizations, take part in the implementation of the decisions of general meetings and gatherings of citizens.

The executive committees of the soviets regularly inform the population regarding the implementation of decisions of the general meetings and gatherings of citizens.

Article 17. The decisions of general meetings and gatherings of citizens which contradict the legislation are subject to cancellation by the executive committee of the appropriate town, town rayon, settlement, village, or aul soviet of people's deputies with a subsequent notification of a general meeting or gathering of citizens on this matter.

Georgian Plenum Sees Need for 'Vigorous' Action

PM261227 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 25 Mar 86 First Edition p 2

[Article by G. Lebanidze: "Road to the New. From the Georgian Communist Party Central Committee Plenum"]

[Text] Tbilisi — The time has come for vigorous action. This idea was the leitmotif of a Georgian Communist Party Central Committee Plenum held on 22 March. D. Patiashvili, first secretary of the Georgian Communist Party Central Committee, delivered a report on the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and on the tasks of the republic's Communists in implementing the congress' decisions.

The speaker and those who participated in the discussion noted that, when accelerating the rates of economic and social development, measures of an economic nature should be more closely linked with measures to strengthen discipline and law and order, and to increase cadres' exactingness and responsibility. Meanwhile, some leaders, it was stated at the plenum, are still in no hurry to reorient themselves. Last year the republic failed to fulfill its plan for the sale of industrial products. As the January and February results attest, the situation has not been rectified everywhere. Thus, 2.7 percent of all collectives failed to meet the target for industrial production output and 8.9 percent for the sale of industrial products. The production rates for agricultural products have dropped.

Renewal of fixed production capital must now be done in real earnest. As calculations show, this will make it possible to double the real return on capital investments. Light industry is particularly in need of reconstruction. Every third unit of equipment in silk production, every fifth in leather footwear production, and every seventh in cotton production has been in use for more than 20 years. The republic's Ministry of Light Industry (Minister B. Makashvili) was criticized for this sluggishness and other organizational shortcomings.

Participants in the plenum set the accelerated development of the food industry as one of the most important tasks. It was pointed out that, in view of the reduced production of liqueurs and vodkas, Georgia must become a major supplier of nonalcoholic tonic beverages and natural fruit juices in the coming years.

Analyzing the work of party organizations to accelerate scientific and technical progress, these present proposed giving up certain fruitless, unpromising research and reorienting scientific research institutes and design bureaus toward resolving the practical tasks of improving production. Science is also expected to make its contribution to saving resources, creating low-waste and waste-free manufacturing processes, and increasing the scale on which the potential of hydraulic, solar, wind, geothermal, and other renewable energy sources are used in the national economy.

Serious remarks were leveled at the republic's Ministry of Finance and Gosbank. They have been tasked with helping associations and enterprises in the transition to achieving financial autonomy, paying their own way, and self-financing.

A great deal of attention was devoted to questions of improving output quality. Acknowledging the criticism leveled at Kutaisi automobile builders by the 27th congress to be perfectly justified, the plenum demanded that Kutaisi Party Gorkom and Avtozavodskiy Party Raykom adopt exhaustive measures to eradicate wastage. Quality work must become the concern of every worker and every leader.

Today the economic experiments in progress in many sectors have become accelerators of the growth in production efficiency. The Abasha experiment in management of the agro-industrial complex, for example, has become widespread. There is great interest in the Poti experiment and in the creative quest in Tbilisi's Zavodskiy rayon. Of particular importance is the fact that they contribute to enhancing the role of local soviets in economic building. However, experience that has already been accumulated and put to the test is still being disseminated only slowly.

Participants in the plenum focused local organs' attention on the necessity to devote greater attention to questions of supplying the population with consumer goods and improving the organization of trade and consumer services. The work of public health organs was criticized.

A great deal was pointedly said about improving the work of party organizations in the selection, education, and placement of cadres. It is the general opinion that an uncompromising struggle must still be waged against violations of the Leninist principles of cadre policy and that we must decisively rid ourselves of people who abuse their official position and compromise the lofty name of communist by their deeds and actions. The plenum recommended that more extensive use be made of the practice, approved by the 27th CPSU Congress, of hearing Communists' reports and establishing references on the basis of them.

Serious claims were brought to bear against the Signakhskiy, Telavskiy, Makharadzevskiy, Tianetskiy, Tsalkskiy, Mtskhetskiy, and some other rayon party organizations which have perpetrated errors and blunders in cadre work. The necessity to improve the style and methods of work by party and soviet leading organs was discussed. Departments of the republic's Central Committee and Council of Ministers were particularly criticized for their mania for convening a large number of sessions and conferences. It was noted that organizational work is sometimes replaced by the creation, for any old reason, of various commissions, working groups, and staffs. Although the Georgian Communist Party Central Committee has implemented a series of measures to combat the generation of paperwork, the stream of information and circulars shows no signs of slackening.

Ways of improving ideological work and strengthening its link with organizational activity were discussed in an exacting manner.

The initiative, supported by the plenum of Tbilisi worker delegates to the 27th CPSU Congress, which appealed to all workers in the republic to join in competition under the slogan "The target for 2 years of the 5-year plan by the 70th anniversary of the Great October Revolution" is directed by the concern to scale new heights.

The plenum mapped out a specific program for the unconditional fulfillment of the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. A long-term plan for organizational and political work was approved.

Leningrad Party Aktiv Views Congress Tasks

PM261131 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Second Edition p 2

[PRAVDA correspondent V. Gerasimov report under the rubric "The 27th CPSU Congress Decisions — Into Action!" and the general heading "Following the Acceleration Program"]

[Text] Leningrad — The working people of Leningrad Oblast began the 1st year of the 12th 5-Year Plan quite well. In the first 2 months of the year, labor productivity in industry markedly outstripped the plan indicator. Workers in the agro-industrial complex fulfilled targets for the sale of livestock products to the state. Plans for retail trade turnover and the volume of consumer services to the population were exceeded. The other day the CPSU obkom bureau approved the initiative of workers who were congress delegates, who appealed to the working people of the city and oblast to complete the targets for the first 2 years of the 5-year plan by the 70th anniversary of Great October.

These facts were cited at a meeting of the Leningrad party organization aktiv held in the Tauride Palace yesterday. A report on the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the communists' tasks in implementing its decisions was delivered by Yu. Solovyev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first secretary of Leningrad party obkom.

The main task, the speaker said, is to resolutely overcome difficulties and shortcomings in order to ensure the dynamic development of the economy and the social sphere on the basis of the achievements of scientific and technical progress, and to utilize as a reliable source of accelerated growth the positive trends which emerged in the concluding stages of the last 5-year plan, in the course of implementing the "Intensifikatsiya-90" program.

Intensive, complex work lies ahead. Therefore, it was noted in the report and the speeches, the plan must really become the law of economic life; its strict fulfillment must be the criterion for assessing cadres' practical qualities and their ability and desire to work in the spirit of the times. However, the restructuring is going slower than it should. In particular, 28 industrial enterprises failed to meet targets and precongress pledges. Of the 13 industrial projects that the Main Administration for Construction in Western Regions of the RSFSR was supposed to complete last year 10 have still not been commissioned. The quarterly program for commissioning housing was only one-third fulfilled by the beginning of March.

Drawing attention above all to shortcomings in organization and keenly criticizing errors and those responsible for them, the speakers expressed this idea from the platform: By means of increasing in every way the personal responsibility of cadres for their sector of work, the center of gravity must be shifted to the rapid renewal of fixed capital, the preferential development of the production and social infrastructure, and the comprehensive saving of resources.

There are plenty of points where maximum efforts should be applied. According to the results of job certification work, nearly one-fourth of the jobs in industry were deemed superfluous or not sufficiently up-to-date. Productivity is growing more slowly than the capital-labor ratio. In this connection, there was criticism of V. Sergeychik, director of the Vyborg "Elektroinstrument" plant, A. Voronyuk, director of the "Sputnik" association, O. Pashkov, director of a tool-building plant, and others.

The question of improving product quality was raised in a principled way. In the 5-year plan, as has been outlined, it is planned to not only bring 700 machine-building articles up to the standard of the world's best models, but to sharply increase the proportion of consumer goods in the top quality category. However, there is still an obvious lag here. Last year the trade network rejected nearly 12 percent of the output tested and stopped accepting output for sale from 24 enterprises.

Scientific collectives could and should do much to promote the successful and rapid resolution of this task and, incidentally, of other problems of intensification. Their potential is great and there is no lack of experience. But forces and resources are often dissipated on minor and obviously fruitless topics. Justly criticizing a certain inertia on the part of scientific cadres, the speakers noted that science should be directed more energetically toward the needs of the national economy. It is equally important to ensure that production is oriented toward science. Valuable ideas and developments put forward by scientists sometimes go for years without finding any application.

The average annual production of output in the agro-industrial complex is to be increased by nearly 20 percent. Although very good results are so far being ensured here, it cannot be said that they accord with the potential which exists. Why? The same reasons exist — poor organization, slowness in spreading the front-runners' achievements and intensive techniques, and great losses of produce during storage. Last year alone, because of violations of techniques, thriftlessness, and extravagance, meat losses amounted to more than 2,000 metric tons at the meat industry association — Yu. Pochtar, general director, and G. Ipatova, party committee secretary. This is equivalent to the annual volume produced by an entire rayon.

The rate of economic growth depends directly on the conditions in which people live and work. The participants in the meeting spoke with concern about the disproportions which have become established in the health, trade, and consumer service systems. The stream of justified reproaches addressed to them is not dying down. The plan for the construction of stores in new housing districts is not being fulfilled. The provision of hospitals is below the norm. The demand for paid services is nearly three times the supply.

The scale and complexity of the attainment of the set goals make increased demands on cadres, the style of party work and its methods and content. The party worker's word must not diverge from his deeds anywhere and under any circumstances. The principle of collective leadership with personal responsibility and wide publicity is designed to promote the improvement of the situation on all levels, it was noted at the aktiv meeting. The ideological aktiv, social scientists, and workers in culture and art must act in the spirit of the congress demands.

Regarding the congress decisions as guidance for energetic action, the Leningraders are confirming with practical deeds their readiness to fulfill them with honor and reach higher targets than originally planned in all spheres of activity.

IZVESTIYA on Congress, Socialist Enterprise

[Editorial: "The 27th CPSU Congress on Socialist Enterprise"]

[Text] The Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress explicitly and clearly speaks of the need to expand the rights of enterprises, the introduction of autonomous financing, and the intensification of socialist enterprise.

Practice, the congress emphasized, has shown the unsoundness of ideas according to which, under socialist conditions, production relations automatically comply with the nature of production forces. In life everything is more complex. Yes, socialist production relations open up scope for the development of production forces. But for that they must be constantly improved. And that means that it is necessary to note obsolete methods of economic management in good time and replace them with new methods.

A lot is now being done in the country in this direction. The experiment which is being conducted in the majority of sectors of industry and at a number of sectors of construction production and the services sphere convincingly shows the enormous potential concealed in the sensible combination of centralized management and economic autonomy for enterprises and associations on the basis of stepping up their responsibility for end results. IZVESTIYA has already described the experience of the labor collectives of the Volga truck plant, the Summy machine building association, and the Belorussian railroad workers who have rapidly been able to achieve high indicators in economic and social development.

This has happened mainly because qualitatively new working conditions stemming from the principles of genuine financial autonomy, paying their own way, and greater independence and responsibility were created for these collectives. The Sumy machine builders, for instance, were given the opportunity to retain possession of a stable — 70 percent — proportion of the profit they obtain and to spend these funds in accordance with established normatives on the development of production, material incentives, sociocultural needs, and other purposes. The collective decides exactly how the funds are spent.

Here emphasis must be placed on an important natural law: Economic independence is precisely what creates conditions for the manifestation of socialist enterprise. The money earned can be spent on the acquisition of the necessary equipment, on the construction of housing, and on an increase in workers' wages — decide for yourselves, comrades, as long as your decisions benefit society. This idea was stressed in the Central Committee Political Report, which critically assessed the still widespread position whereby people discern in any change almost a deviation from the principles of socialism and which noted that the supreme criterion for the improvement of management and of the entire system of socialist production relations should be socioeconomic acceleration and the practical consolidation of socialism.

Understandably, socialist enterprise is incompatible with the practice of petty tutelage of enterprises which, unfortunately, has been a most frequent sin of ministries and departments. The party has demanded that an end be resolutely put to this practice. In their activity ministries and departments must focus their attention on questions of technical policy, intrasectorial proportions, and the satisfaction of the national economy's requirements for high-quality output from its sectors. But even today there are many instances of ministries issuing a flood of peremptory written instructions and prescriptions and rules to fetter the economic managers' initiative and banning and thereby preventing the selection of better and more economical, higher-quality methods of work. For instance, a machine building plant could, by agreeing to share with a neighboring chemical industry enterprise, package its finished output in plastic boxes. But the ministry demands that in accordance with planned procedure it report on how much timber has been spent to produce packaging. So it has to maintain its sawmill and surplus workers and ship timber.

Nor can we fail to draw attention to the following aspect of the matter. Sometimes enterprise is understood as a means of achieving some kind of benefits and advantages in narrow departmental interests which very often contradict the interests of the state and society. Here is what D. Kozyrev, member of the Taldy-Kurgan aviation enterprise party bureau, wrote to the editorial office: "In 1980 our aviation enteprise switched to work on a three-shift schedule with a view to making fuller use of the aircraft pool and working more profitably. We have increased the personnel by 200 people but the plan has remained at the 1979 level. As a result while previously the state gave our enterprise a subsidy of about R500,000, now the figure is up to R2.5 million. During the three summer months the enterprise works strenuously but from September people have only a 50-percent workload. It is necessary either to increase our plan and allow us to work to the full or else to dispense with the third shift and reduce the personnel." What guided the airmen in this case when they increased the personnel? The arguments would seem to be weighty ones: making fuller use of capacities and increasing economic indicators. Actually, they ensured themselves an easier life: It is not by their ability but by their numbers that they fulfill the plan which, moreover, has remained at its previous level.

These cases are frequently used by opponents of the expansion of labor collectives' economic independence and enterprise. Give them a free rein! they say... But it is a case of socialist enterprise. On the one hand it presupposes activity for the benefit of all society, in the interests of the state; and on the other, under the conditions of what is indeed the socialist, planned management of the economy it can and must be directed toward satisfying the interests not only of the worker and the collective but also of society.

It is precisely here that the role of the ministries and other central departments should be fully manifested. Here, the Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress emphasizes, we should not be stopped by fixed ideas, still less by prejudices. For instance, if it is essential and justified to apply economic normatives instead of some directive indicators, that does not mean a deviation from the principles of planned leadership but merely an alteration to its methods and means. The same may be said of the need to step up the autonomy, initiative, and responsibility of enterprises and to enhance their role as socialist commodity producers.

The restructuring of the economic mechanism now under way in our economy is a complex process that requires time. The success of this work largely depends on how rapidly cadres are reorganized. Essentially that is the main thing. The entire course of historical development shows that it is people who can accelerate or delay it. But of itself this process is irreversible and is subordinated to the dialectical laws of the development of society.

To shape and develop socialist enterprise it is essential first to create the appropriate conditions that not only permit but also encourage the search for the most expedient and economically advantageous forms and methods of work. Second, socialist enterprise must be taught — in the school, VUZes, and at courses and seminars. The well-organized study of the best experience of our economic managers can be of inestimable benefit. For instance, the experience of managers such as Aleksey Petrovich Vitkovskiy, who was the director several years ago at the Voronezh heavy mechanical presses plant; Vladimir Pavlovich Kabaidze, general director of the Ivanovo machine took building production association; Nikolay Sergeyevich Ghikirev, general director of the Moscow "Stankozavod imeni Ordzhonikidze" association; and others.

The path on which we have embarked is not strewn with roses. At its congress the party frankly said that there could be difficulties, that we are not ensured against blunders; nevertheless, the main thing now is to advance purposefully, step by step, in the direction we have chosen, supplementing and improving the economic mechanism on the basis of the experience accumulated and eliminating everything which has become obsoltete or has failed to give a good account of itself.

The means for resolving this task are well known — the conscientious fulfillment of his duties by each person, a sense of supreme responsibility for the matter in hand, initiative, and creativity.

PRAVDA Editorial Views Spring Sowing Work

PM261025 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[Editorial: "Arable Farmer's First Test"]

[Text] Scarcely had the March thaw awakened the southern steppes before thousands of units immediately went out onto the fields. The machine operators have welcomed the first spring of the 5-year plan together. They are feeding the winter crops, sowing the spring crops, and tending the meadows and pastures.

The workers of the agro-industrial complex have a lot of work to do to cope successfully with the task set by the 27th CPSU Congress — considerably increasing the agricultural production growth rate and markedly improving the country's food supply in the current 5-year period. And that largely depends on how the spring sowing is carried out. The organs of the agro-industrial complex must make effective use of their production potential and create every condition for the kolkhozes and sovkhozes for intensification in greater depth and guaranteed production output.

Previously it often happened that when they suffered a setback the farm leaders would cite the unfavorable weather conditions. No one denies that weather has sometimes let the grain growers down. But is the weather alone to blame? The leading collectives are proving otherwise. In the same soil and climatic conditions as the laggards, they are sowing within the best agrotechnical deadlines and using good-quality seeds, dressing the soil well with fertilizers, and gaining in the process — they are raising good harvests every year. The "Zarya Kommunizma" kolkhoz, Kirovograd Oblast, and the imeni Kalinina kolkhoz, Dnepropetrovsk Oblast, are harvesting 40-45 quintals of grain per hectare, while the Altay Kray imeni Shumakova kolkhoz and the Krasnoyarsk Kray "Iskra" and "Nazarovskiy" sovkhozes are harvesting 30-32 quintals per hectare.

At the same time some kolkhozes and sovkhozes, dragging out the time taken to perform field work and violating agrotechnical requirements, are essentially marking time or retreating from the level they have previously reached. For instance, in the past 5-year plan grain production declined in Rostov and Volgograd Oblasts and Altay Kray. While many beet-sowing oblasts and autonomous republics of the RSFSR increased the sugar beet yield, in Voronezh and Gorkiy Oblasts and the Bashkir ASSR it declined. The reason for the output shortfall is well known to the local party committees and agro-industrial organs. Their duty is to help the kolkhoz and sovkhoz leaders be more vigorous in introducing leading experience, intensive technologies, progressive forms of organization, and labor payment.

The arable farmers and farm and rayon agro-industrial association specialists have frequently been convinced of the tremendous damage caused by the disruption of the sown areas structure. Under these conditions it is hard to assimilate scientifically substantiated crop turnovers which, naturally, holds back the growth of the production of grain and other output. They are being assimilated extremely slowly on a number of kolkhozes and sovkhozes of Azerbaijan, Moldavia, Ryazan and Pskov Oblasts. Where does the underestimation of crop rotations lead? To the point where in the past 5-year plan almost one-fifth of arable land was used unsystematically. The USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee [Gosagroprom] must achieve the point where crop rotations are assimilated everywhere within the next few years. This will make it possible to determine the optimum structure for crops and to improve the overall standard of arable farming.

More effective use must be made of reclaimed land. Right now it occupies over 34 million hectares. Leading farms obtain quite a lot of produce from them, but as a whole the yield is still low. We cannot come to terms with the fact that the yields on irrigated fields of some rayons of Georgia and Tajikistan are still low and poor use is being made of drained land in many oblasts of the non-Chernozem Zone of the RSFSR.

Every grain grower knows where the keys to fertility lie. They lie in organic fertilizer. In Belorussia and the Baltic republics every hectare receives 10-15 metric tons of local fertilizers, but on the farms of Kirghizia and Turkmenia the figure is no more than 3 tons. The leaders of the rayon agro-industrial associations and the agrochemical services to agriculture scientific production association enterprises must set up the work of the fertility service more precisely and increase the use of organic fertilizers. It is important to make broader use of the experience of those farms which apply fertilizer to the drill rows at the same time as the seeds, lime acid soils, and on this basis sharply increase the yield of the fields and the return on fertilizers.

Right now a fundamental restructuring of the management of the agro-industrial complex is under way in the countryside and the economic mechanism is being improved and good conditions are thereby being created for the creative work of the arable farmers and the improvement of its quality and for seeking ways of effectively managing plant growing. The party organizations and rural Communists are called on to do everything to support people who work vigorously, with a high degree of professional skill, and with an innovatory streak.

There are many grain growers on the kolkhozes and sovkhozes whose labor serves as an example to others. For instance, Ivan Rublikov's link works at the imeni Kirov stud farm, Tselinskiy Rayon, Rostov Oblast. Last year it harvested an average of 55.7 quintals of grain, increasing production output per member of the collective to R61,000. On the "Zarya Kommunizma" kolkhoz, Korenevskiy Rayon, Kursk Oblast, good indicators were achieved by the mechanized detachment of USSR State Prize winner A. Myagkostupov. Using the collective contract, the machine operators obtained 524 quintals of sugar beet from each of 300 hectares and the prime cost of each quintal of output was R2.5. There are similar frontrunners among the corn, potato, cotton, and vegetable growers. Being concerned with ensuring that their experience is widely applied on the spring fields and making fuller use of the internal reserves of every kolkhoz and sovkhoz to increase the harvests is one of the priority tasks of the rayon agro-industrial association specialists.

The spring sowing is the arable farmers' first test in the new 5-year plan. Passing it successfully means responding with deeds to the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress. This test is being taken, together with the grain growers, by the party, Komsomol, and trade union organizations in the countryside and the local soviets. They are called on to distribute forces and funds skillfully and to organize the grain growers' competition, so that each of them should know who is ahead today and whom they should emulate in labor. It is essential to display constant concern for moral and material incentives for leading workers, for pulling up laggards, and for the sowing workers' working and daily living conditions. Success at the sowing is the basis of the harvest. It is not for nothing that they say that the spring day feeds the year.

Agricultural Developments for 24-26 Mar Reported

LD270408 [Editorial Report] The following is a compilation of reports on agricultural developments in the USSR carried by Moscow Domestic Service in Russian, unless otherwise indicated, on 24-26 March. Times of broadcast are given in parentheses at the end of each item.

24 March

Preparations for sowing early grain has ended in Amur Oblast. Amur Oblast Agro-Industrial Committee Deputy Chairman Nikolay Nikolayevich Dukhovnov says that because of the mild winter, the fieldworkers want to commence fieldwork as soon as possible. Our correspondent asks about the low soya harvests recorded in Amur valley which has the country's main soya fields, and how it is intended to correct this situation. Dukhovnov says that the prerequisites exist for a good harvest this year. Almost all of the area under soya will be on under winter fallow. Soya will be intensively cultivated on an area exceeding 30,000 hectares. (0100 GMT)

Kursk Oblast's kolkhoz and sovkhoz machine operators have started the preparation of winter crops. Farm agronomists are checking on the condition of the sown winter crops and perennial herbs. Special attention is being paid to winter wheat fields which are being cultivated intensively. (0104 GMT)

Cotton sowing has begun in Tajikistan. (0700 GMT)

Spring crops have been sown on 200,000 hectares in Uzbekistan thus far. (Moscow Television Service 1130 GMT)

At the Land and Animal Husbandry Research Institute of Western Regions in the Ukraine, a new barley variety called Shirokolistyy [broad-leaved] has been developed. Time spent on growing it was reduced by one-third using biotechnology methods. (1430 GMT)

The first sowing machines have started work in the beet fields of the Kuban. Sugar beet will be cultivated over an area of about 200,000 hectares in Krasnodar Kray this year. The socialist pledges of the agricultural workers envisage selling over 6 million metric tons of it to the state. (1600 GMT)

25 March

Cotton sowing has begun today in south Uzbekistan. Cold sping weather delayed the beginning of work a little. The area under the new regionalized, fine-fiber cotton variety Termez-14 has been almost doubled this year. (0900 GMT)

26 March

Checheno-Ingushetiya: Mass sowing of spring crops has been completed today. (0530 GMT)

The first several hundred hectares of early fodder crops have been sown in Moldavia. This year Moldavian farmers have pledged to bring grain yield up to 40 quintals per hectare. (1100 GMT)

Grain sowing has begun in Kazakhstan. (1130 GMT)

Kazakhstan is having an unusual spring: Douthern farmers are normally sowing crops at this time; however, it is still winter there. Snow is falling in Alma-Ata and Taldy-Kurgan Oblast. Snow retention is still being carried on the final hectares of the planned total of 32 million hectares. (1330 GMT)

Rostov Oblast farmers start sowing early cereal crops today [27 March]. (2330 GMT)

The first sowing units went out into the cotton fields of south Uzbekistan on 27 March. Virtually 2 million hectares are allocated for cotton growing in the republic this season. (2330 GMT)

Nikonov Addresses Agricultural Sciences Meeting

LD261717 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian
1200 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] The annual meeting of the VASKHNIL [Lenin All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences] began in the Hall of Columns of the House of the Unions in Moscow today. A report, devoted to the results of the academy's work and the tasks to ensure scientific back-up for the development of the agro-industrial complex in connection with the 27th CPSU Congress decisions, was delivered by Comrade Nikonov, the academy's president and deputy chairman of the USSR State Agro-Industrial Committee. He noted that during the 11th 5-Year Plan, selection centers have made approximately 4,000 strains and hybrids of grain crops and other agricultural crops available for state tests. More than 800 strains have been zonally graded.

At the same time, the report notes, VASKHNIL's activities still fail to correspond fully to the resolute course aimed at speeding up socioeconomic transformations and to the tasks of scientific and technological progress. The speaker analysed in detail the main tasks of scientific establishments in the 12th 5-Year Plan, aimed at intensifying production within the agro-industrial complex.

Cosmonauts Continue Work on 'Mir' Complex

LD261721 Moscow TASS in English 1129 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 25 TASS — a TASS special correspondent reports from the Mission Control Center:

Spacemen Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev are continuing their work aboard an orbiting complex consisting of the research station Mir (Peace), the spaceship Soyuz T-15 and the transport craft Progress-25.

In the past few days they were mostly busy unloading the unmmaned freighter and placing the equipment it had brought up in the station. They also performed the planned testing and adjustment of the new systems and equipment of the Mir station in the manned flight mode.

After completing preliminary operations to check the air-tightness of the fuel lines and pump out compressed nitrogen, they are refuelling the station's tanks with fuel delivered by Progress-25. Using the latter's propulsion system, they are to correct the manned complex's orbit today.

According to telemetry readings and the crew's reports, the flight is proceeding as normal.

The cosmonauts are in good health and feeling well.

Cable TV Experiment To Use Fiber-Optic Lines

PM251403 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 18 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 1

[Article by V. Velikov under the "Fact and Commentary" rubric: "Television Without Interference"]

[Text] In the next 2 years an experimental cable television system using so-called fiber-optic lines will be created in the capital. Let us recall that IZVESTIYA has already described the first experiments in this kind of reception of programs from Ostankino carried out in a few houses on Altayskaya Street, which is in northeast Moscow.

"In big cities with buildings of different heights, sometimes more than 10 stories high and 'overshadowing' each other," Yu. Dykhovichnyy, deputy director of the capital's Main Architectural Planning Administration, says, "it is very hard to provide good reception conditions for all television viewers.

"In addition, the larger the city, the more sources of interference and image and sound distortion it contains. In particular 1 of every 7 of Moscow's 3.5 million television sets operates poorly for these reasons.

"The solution proposed by specialists consists of installing special collective antennae in those places where conditions for reception from the Ostankino tower are most favorable. Then electromagnetic impulses are fed to the amplifiers of a nearby intermediate station (which consists of several pillars with apparatus). From here high-quality picture and sound signals are sent to many hundreds and even thousands of subscribers in the apartment of blocks of a whole residential region."

The experience acquired in operating the first experimental sector in the region of Altayskaya Street equipped with a cable television system has shown the unusually high quality and steadiness of the picture on domestic television screens. The owners of many television sets say that their sometimes quite elderly sets seemed to have been rejuvenated — the picture was so much brighter and more vivid and the sound was so much better and clearer.

It so happened that some of the inhabitants did not even know why their capricious "Rubin," "Berezka," and "Foton" television sets had suddenly begun to work magnificently one fine day...

"The use of the most delicate fiber-optics for communications lines," Yu. Dykhovichnyy noted, "makes it possible to use existing telephone ducts of relatively small diameter to lay light-conducting cables. In addition they are absolutely 'unreceptive' to external interference, do not corrode, and are not affected by drops in temperature. Another advantage of the new television reception systems is the possibility of ensuring a preview of the Ostaninko television center's fifth experimental channel."

[Velikov] Who is developing cable television in our country and what are the prospects and deadlines for its practical use in Moscow?

[Dykhovichnyy] Scientific "backup" has been assigned to the USSR Academy of Sciences Institute of General Physics headed by the well-known scientist and Lenin and Nobel Prize winner A. Prokhorov. A number of industrial ministries producing the necessary apparatus and materials will also take part.

The Moscow State Trust for the Construction of Telephone Installations and the "Mostelemontazh" trust are installing new antennae on all apartment blocks which are being erected in the capital and are also replacing previous antennae when buildings are being modernized.

It is planned that the capital's Khimiki-Khovrino residential region will be the first to be entirely served by cable television.

General Lizichev Views CPSU Congress Decisions

PM201519 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 19 Mar 86 Second Edition pp 2-3

[Article by Army General A. Lizichev, chief of the Soviet Army and Navy Main Political Directorate: "At a Turning Point in History"]

[Text] In our country's life there are events which are of historic significance for its development. Such an event was the 27th CPSU Congress. The congress, held at a crucial turning point in communist building, answered the fundamental questions set before the party and society, adopted major strategic decisions on the improvement of socialism, and gave powerful impetus to the continued revolutionary renewal of all spheres of social life begun by the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum. The congress' main political result was the party's general line in domestic and foreign policy, which it adopted and approved — the line of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development and consolidating world peace.

The theory and practice of communist building have been enriched with new provisions and conclusions. The CPSU Central Committee's Political Report to the 27th party congress, delivered by Comrade M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, is a true document of creative Marxism-Leninism. The Political Report embodies the party's collective wisdom, provides answers to the most burning questions of the present day, and calls for deep thought and responsible actions. The strategy and tactics for improving socialism, our society's attainment of a qualitatively new condition, and the struggle for peace and social progress are accurately and succinctly determined in accordance with Leninist demands by the new edition of the CPSU Program — the reliable compass for the party and the people at the present stage of progress toward communism. The program goals and tasks are given specific form in the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000. The amendments and additions to the CPSU Statutes carried by the congress promote the implementation of the planned course, the further strengthening of the party, and the improvement of its activity.

People have been stirred by the documents adopted at the congress, the atmosphere of party principle prevailing there, and the businesslike discussion of the most burning problems in the language of truth, frankness, and dissatisfaction with what has been achieved. The congress' ideas and decisions have found undivided support in the party and among the people and have been taken as guidance for action.

I.

The 27th CPSU Congress summed up the results of the country's development in the period since the adoption of the third party program. While rating highly what has been achieved, it nevertheless analyzed thoroughly and comprehensively the difficulties, shortcomings, and negative processes that emerged in the seventies and early eighties and outliined ways to overcome them. And it did so on the basis of the concept of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development, which was the main theme of all the congress documents and materials and of congress delegates' speeches.

The strategy of acceleration in the material production sphere is aimed at transferring to an economy of supreme organization and efficiency with comprehensively developed production forces, mature socialist production relations, and a harmonious economic mechanism. The paramount task is to eliminate the unfavorable trends in the development of the economy and give it the necessary dynamism. This must be done within the 12th 5-Year Plan by making wide use of our potential and reserves and strengthening discipline and organization.

The party believes that the fundamental acceleration of scientific and technical progress is the main lever for intensifying the national economy. On that basis it will be possible to carry out the new retooling of social production and to raise the Soviet economy to the highest level of labor productivity, organization, and efficiency. By the year 2000 it is planned to double the country's production potential while also achieving its fundamental qualitative renewal and to increase labor productivity by 130-150 percent.

All this is possible on the basis of advanced equipment and the latest achievements of science, which as a result of the implementation of the party's plans is becoming a full and direct production force.

The main emphasis is on renewing the means of production, saving resources, raw and semifinished materials, fuel, and energy, sharply improving the technical level and quality of output, and making thrifty use of fixed capital. A task of special importance is to start up mass production of new-generation equipment capable of decisively increasing labor productivity and opening the way to the automation of all stages of the production process. The key role here belongs to machine building. Microelectronics, computers, instrument-making, and the entire data processing industry will receive accelerated development.

The party proceeds from the premise that transforming the USSR economy into the most modern and powerful in the world is impossible without the further development of heavy industry. At the same time the CPSU considers the most important task of the moment to be the implementation of USSR Food Program within the current 5-year plan so as to considerably improve the population's food supply.

The implementation of qualitative improvements in society's production forces requires thorough changes in the whole system of production relations. The task that has been set is to radically reform management, planning, and the entire economic mechanism.

An active and strong social policy and increasingly full affirmation of the principle of social justice constitute a powerful device for accelerating the country's development. In the package of measures outlined in this sphere, the party continues to pay paramount attention to further increasing the people's prosperity and raising their cultural standards.

In the next 15 years the volume of resources to be channeled into improving living conditions is planned to double. Their increase and distribution is to take place in strict accordance with the level of development of production forces that has been achieved, with the country's economic potential, and with the amount and quality of labor by all members of society. The congress demanded the resolute eradication of the payment of unearned incomes and bonuses and an uncompromising campaign against nonlabor incomes and other deviations from socialism's basic principle "From each according to his ability, to each according to his labor."

An equally acute question is that of satisfying the population's effective demand and of supplying the market and high-quality goods and services. That is the aim of the Comprehensive Program for Developing Consumer Goods Production and the Services Sphere.

Housing construction will continue on a wide scale with the aim of ensuring that by the end of the centruy each family will have its own apartment or individual house.

The task of creating an integrated, continuous education system was placed on the agenda. The general education and vocational school reform will continue. The next task is to restructure higher and secondary specialized education in accordance with the demands of accelerating scientific and technical progress.

The course aimed at improving Soviet people's health and developing physical culture and sport is being consistently implemented in our country. The party Central Committee's line of establishing a healthy, sober way of life and eliminating drunkenness and alcoholism has won the people's undivided support.

An object of constant concern to the CPSU and the Soviet state is the strengthening of the family and developing it spiritually and morally, the further improvement of the situation of mothers, and the resolution of social problems facing young people and labor and war veterans.

The 27th CPSU Congress paid great attention to improving social, class, and national relations. The party's course designed to ensure the rapprochement of classes, social strata, and groups and eliminate the substantial divergences between people engaged in physical and mental labor and between the city and the country is aimed at establishing a classless structure of society within socialism's historical framework. The nationalities policy displays a constant concern with strengthening the fraternal friendship of all the nations and ethnic groups in the country and with ensuring that all the republics' contribution to the development of the integrated national economic complex is in accordance with their increased economic and spiritual potential.

II.

A necessary condition for accelerating the country's development is the further improvement of social relations, the renewal of the content, forms, and methods of political and ideological institutions' work, the deepening of Soviet democracy, and the steady development of the people's socialist self-management. Measures to improve all elements of our society's political system have been outlined and are being implemented in accordance with the party's line in that sphere.

The 27th CPSU Congress pointed out that the very logic of the development of socialist democracy indicates the need to activate the soviets of people's deputies. In brief, this means developing businesslike and fruitful initiative and efficiency and timeliness in their activity, in their resolution of all questions of acceleration, of the satisfaction of the population's needs and demands, and in the struggle against bureaucracy and red tape when dealing with people.

The times demand that social organizations be involved increasingly actively in the administration of the country. Trade unions are urged to work to mobilize working people to ensure plan fulfillment, to develop socialist competition, to strengthen discipline, and to increase labor productivity. They play an increasing role in defending working people's legitimate interests, in labor protection and safety techniques, and in the implementation of social policy. The Lenin Komsomol's most important and basic task has been and remains to educate young people and train active, conscious builders of the new society who are devoted to communism's ideals, diligent, and ready to accomplish great deeds and make sacrifices for the motherland's sake.

The congress recognized the need to further enhance the role of trade unions, the Komsomol, and the creative unions and voluntary societies in the management of society and to expand the range of questions which state organs can only resolve with their participation or consent. In the interests of the development and effective utilization of direct democracy, measures have been outlined to activate labor collectives and extend democratic principles in the management of their affairs.

The development of socialist self-management is being implemented within the framework of the socialist state system. This places new and higher demands on the activity of all state organs. The congress deemed it necessary to comprehensively expand publicity in their work, to secure Soviet people's rights and freedoms day by day while striving to ensure their fulfillment of their duties at the same time, and to strengthen the socialist rule of law.

In the new historical conditions the party's leading role in Soviet society's life objectively increases; greater demands are made on the standard of political, ideological, and organizational activity; and it is necessary to activate the human factor — the decisive factor in all change. The complex tasks of resolutely accelerating the country's development require a fundamental restructuring of party work, the establishment of an atmosphere of creativity, principled exactingness, and self-criticism in every party organization, and a search for new and effective solutions to the problems that emerge. The congress noted that the need for restructuring has still not been understood by everyone or everywhere. Many organizations are too slow to eliminate inertia, formalism, and stereotyped working.

The CPSU Statutes and the congress documents laid down a package of measures aimed at developing the party and improving intraparty relations. Healthy and productive life for every party organization is inconceivable without strict observance of intraparty democracy, the principle of collective leadership, openness, publicity, humanity, and mutual exactingness. No organization or leader must be above criticism or control in the party.

Party organizations are urged to wage a determined campaign to ensure a pure and honest party membership, to educate Communists in the spirit of the great traditions of Bolshevism, and to remove fawning, servility, and toadyism from the party environment and from our entire life.

The CPSU's cadre policy was comprehensively examined at the congress. In modern conditions it is a particularly acute problem to promote to leadership workers who are politically mature, highly moral, competent, and resourceful so as to ensure that young, promising workers work alongside seasoned older-generation cadres, gain experience, and acquire the necessary tempering. The unity of word and deed, the capacity to assume responsibility, and the ability to organize the harmonious work of subordinates are particularly necessary for all leaders now.

The interests of social progress demand that full use be made of the creative, transforming power of Marxist-Leninist ideology to accelerate the country's socioeconomic development. The congress indicated the need to increase the motivating power of all areas of education, particularly of ideological-political, labor, and moral education. The most important thing now is to make everyone understand the crucial and critical nature of the time we are living through and to increase the masses' labor and social activeness. The congress emphasized the improvement of work with individuals as the most important form of education.

Propaganda on socialism's great advantages and committed struggle against bourgeois ideology and morality, anti-Soviet provocation, and imperialism's ideological subversion have acquired particular topicality.

III.

The party's fundamental, strategic tasks within the country are indissolubly linked with the CPSU's and Soviet state's international policy. Its main aim is to provide the Soviet people with the opportunity to work in conditions of lasting peace and freedom. The main thrust of the party's activity in the international arena has been and remains the struggle against the nuclear danger and the arms race and for the preservation and consolidation of world peace.

Our principled position is that safeguarding international security is increasingly becoming a political task which can be resolved by political means.

The CPSU considers the implementation of the program for the complete and universal elimination of nuclear weapons and other means of mass destruction by the end of the 20th century, set out in the CPSU Central Committee general secretary's 15 January 1986 statement, the central area of its foreign policy for the years ahead.

When putting forward new peace initiatives, our party looks to the future with optimism. It believes with the utmost conviction that imperialist reaction is not omnipotent, that nuclear war is not fatally inevitable, and that it can be prevented. The development of the world revolutionary process and the upsurge of the mass democratic and antiwar movements have considerably expanded and intensified the vast potential of peace, reason, and good will. The CPSU is doing everything necessary to strengthen it.

Ensuring the high dynamism of the world socialist system's economic and political development and the acceleration of common progress is becoming particularly significant in modern conditions. Cooperation among the fraternal parties of the socialist community countries has been considerably enriched in recent years. The Warsaw Pact is an effective, constructive factor in world politics.

The CPSU is a party of internationalists. Graphic evidence of its international ties was provided by the presence at the 27th congress of 152 delegations from communist, workers, revolutionary democratic, socialist, social democratic, labor, and other parties and representatives of democratic social organizations. They came from 113 countries in all parts of the world.

As an indissoluble part of the international communist movement, our party sees its strength in a bold, creative approach to the new realities based on the teaching of Marx, Engels, and Lenin, class solidarity, and equitable cooperation in the struggle for the common goals of peace and socialism. These great goals are also the main force unifying the communists of all countries and helping them to surmount the existing divergence of views.

The congress confirmed the unfailing solidarity with the forces of national and social liberation and the CPSU's line of developing relations with countries of a socialist orientation, revolutionary democratic parties, the Nonaligned Movement, social democrats, and with all who oppose war and support the creation of an all-embracing international security system.

The CPSU takes account of the fact that imperialism is stepping up its opposition to positive change and is trying to halt the course of history and take social revenge on a worldwide scale. It has not abandoned the hope of achieving military superiority over socialism in the sphere of the arms race and the militarization of space.

In these conditions the CPSU Central Committee and the Central Committee Politburo are paying unremitting attention to the country's defense capability, the combat might of the USSR Armed Forces, and the strengthening of military discipline and are showing ceaseless concern to ensure the reliable defense of Soviet people's peaceful, creative labor. This is the aim of the party's policy in the sphere of the country's defense and the aim of our state's military doctrine, which is purely defensive in character.

The CPSU is doing everything necessary to ensure that the USSR Armed Forces are at a level which precludes imperialist forces' strategic superiority and that their combat potential represents a durable fusion of military skill, high-standard technical equipment, ideological staunchness, personnel organization and discipline, and personnel loyalty to their patriotic and internationalist duty.

IV.

The 27th CPSU Congress set the Soviet Armed Forces complex and responsible tasks. The Armed Forces must show high vigilance and be ever ready to thwart imperialism's intrigues against the USSR and its allies.

The concrete reply of Army and Navy servicemen to the 27th party congress' historic decisions must be to ensure high-quality fulfillment of the tasks and plans of operational and combat training in 1986. The main emphasis must be placed on the further improvement of field, air, and sea training and on making the training of troops and naval forces as close to real combat conditions as possible. Of particular importance now are realism in the assessment of the achieved level of combat preparation, training, discipline, and the political-moral state of divisions and units and a creative search for new approaches to the attainment of a real increase in military skill, efficient management, and self-criticism of leading cadres in their evaluation of their own activity.

In keeping with the congress guidelines, work to strengthen discipline and organization should be viewed as a priority for all political-command and engineering-technical cadres, administrative organs, and party and Komsomol organizations.

The 27th congress results and the tasks arising from its decisions will be discussed at military council sessions, at meetings of the party aktivs of the Defense Ministry, districts, groups of forces, fleets, and divisions, and at all primary party organizations, at meetings of the Komsomol aktiv of divisions and military educational institutions, and in Komsomol and trade union organizations. It will be necessary everywhere to thoroughly study and comprehend the congress decisions and formulate and implement concrete measures aimed at the consistent fulfillment of the party's political strategy. It is important that everyone realizes that the time has come for vigorous and cohesive action.

The most important task facing military councils, commanders, staffs, political organs, and party organizations is to convey to every serviceman, worker, and employee the wealth of ideas and the essence and spirit of the 27th CPSU Congress decisions. It is necessary to develop people's political enthusiasm and professional attitude and to transform the potential of plans into the energy of concrete, skillful, and responsible actions in people's assigned areas of work. When organizing the study of the 27th CPSU Congress documents in all forms of personnel political training, it is necessary to ensure high-quality training of propagandists and a high ideological, theoretical, and methodological standard in classes.

The study and propaganda of the congress decisions are expected to reveal the historic significance of the party's course of accelerating the country's development in terms of strengthening its economic and defense might. Special attention must be paid to revealing the theoretical depth and practical importance of the Central Committee Political Report, the new edition of the CPSU Program, and the CPSU Statutes. Using the spoken and printed word and visual agitation work it is necessary to illustrate clearly socialism's historic achievements and its advantages over capitalism, to educate personnel by means of positive examples from our life, and to mold in servicemen a profound belief in the historical rightness of our cause and in the feasibility of the plans outlined.

The implementation of the congress guidelines on defense questions requires a major restructuring of the content and style of the work of communist leaders, political organs, and party organizations. Specificity, professionalism, consistency, unity of word and deed, and openness must be actively introduced into the practice of party political work. Inertia, formalism, indifference, the habit of submerging vital matters in empty talk, and "feigned restructuring" are particularly unacceptable now.

The personal example set by Communists and their concrete high results achieved in combat and political training and discipline are especially important in mobilizing personnel to fulfill the 27th CPSU Congress decisions.

The 27th CPSU Congress showed with new force that Lenin's party is equal to the tasks facing it at a turning point in history. The Soviet people and Army and Navy servicemen fervently and wholeheartedly support the party's domestic and foreign policy. Therein lies the guarantee of the successful fulfillment of the party's plans and the further strengthening of the motherland's economic and defense might.

FRG SIGNS AGREEMENT ON CONTRIBUTION TO SDI

Agreement Signed

LD271758 Moscow TASS in English 1744 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 27 TASS -- TASS correspondent Nikolay Turkatenko reports: Though the United States and the other NATO countries continue to claim that they are seeking to fold up the arms race, the Governments of the USA and West Germany have today signed an agreement in Washington on West Germany's contribution to the Strategic Defense Initiative. The agreement was signed by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger for the American side and economics Minister Martin Bangemmann for West Germany.

West Germany has thus become the third NATO country -- along with Britain and, with some reservations, Italy -- to become involved by Washington in SDI. Washington has dragged its allies in this venture, which poses a mortal danger to mankind, in the hope of exploiting scientists and the technological potentials of those countries, of shifting onto them a considerable share of the astronomic expenditures involved in the fulfilment of the "star wars" program and of making them share responsibility for all the consequences of the program. SDI is the main obstacle on the way to progress at the Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons. The USA describes it as purely defensive and even claims that it will eventually lead to the elimination of nuclear weapons.

In reality, however, the administration is pressing ahead with the development of a space weapons system and getting ready to deploy it along with feverishly building up the nuclear arms potential and developing new-generation nuclear weapons, such as the MX first-strike missile, Trident-2 and the Midgetman. The administration has already spent one trillion dollars on America's nuclear rearmament program and is going to spend at least as much more. Symptomatically, Weinberger has stated on more than one occasion that the USA will continue to improve the build up its nuclear weapons, at least until the Pentagon takes delivery of defense systems under SDI. However, these statements do not at all indicate that the Pentagon will agree even then to the dismantling of nuclear armaments.

As senior administration officials have admitted on more than one occasion, the "star wars" program envisions the use of nuclear energy while one of the leading scientists working on SDI, Edward Teller, recently said at the Washington National Press Club that space weapons systems are to be predominantly nuclear.

The NATO countries, which have been dragged by their "senior partner" in the "star wars" program, are objectively blocking success at the Soviet-American talks on nuclear and space weapons. As for West Germany's contribution to SDI, having joined the "star wars" program, it obfiously hopes to secure the opportunity to develop its own advanced nuclear weapons in circumvention of post-war accords. This prospect is hardly likely to cheer even West Germany's NATO allies, at least those in Western Europe.

Smelov Comment

LD280027 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1922 GMT 27 Mar 86

["In Washington's Space Harness" -- TASS headline]

[Text] Moscow, 27 Mar (TASS) -- TASS commentator Vladimir Smelov writes: And so the FRG has again come out in the role of the Pentagon's sword-bearer, this time a space one. FRG economics Minister M. Bangemann and Pentagon chief C. Weinberger signed an agreement in Washington today on the participation of West German firms and concerns in the U.S. "Strategic Defense Initiative", and also an agreement on the so-called "improvement of general technological exchange" between the FRG and the United States. Bonn, having surrendered its national interests to please the militarist ambitions of the United States, has again demonstrated political support for forces which are undermining the edifice of international peace and in every way opposing the efforts, first and foremost of the Soviet Union, to fully deliver mankind from nuclear weapons and from the threat of war, including from space.

Bonn must understand that participation in the Pentagon's space adventure means linking the Federal Republic to a new and most dangerous spiral of the arms race. This is precisely why on the Rhine they are trying so painstakingly to conceal this obvious fact, are try ing to pass off the "star wars" program as a panacea for all misfortunes and as a project which is supposedly of a purely defensive nature capable of virtually moving forward the cause of disarmament. Their attempts are in vain: such assertions are clearly intended for simpletons because the Pentagon, as THE WASHINGTON POST emphasizes, views the SDI as "a purely military undertaking".

Taking into consideration the mass protests of the public and the opposition parties in the FRG against linking the country to the notorious "Strategic Defense Initiative", and the disagreements on this issue even in the camp of the ruling coalition, Chancellor Kohl is forced to put a brave face on a sorry business. How he has already tried, if only to more convincingly demonstrate the "independence" of his government in resolving questions which are vitally important to the FRG -- questions of war and peace, and also the "purely commercial" nature of the deal on the SDI. And the proof, they say, is available. You see, the agreement on the FRG's participation in "star wars" is not the "memorandum on mutual understanding" on the SDI between the United States and Great Britain, authenticated by the signatures of the ministers of defense of those countries. You see, Kohl sent a "peaceful" minister for economics across the ocean, although the Pentagon wanted, it said, to see the head of the FRG military department instead.

However, the business lies not with ministers and not with the names of agreements, however nice sounding they might be, but in their essence. And it is as follows: Having harnessed itself to the U.S. "star wars" program the FRG has confirmed that it remains one of the most zealous conductors of the militaristic course of the United States and NATO and that it is ready to meet any political and military demands made by Washington to the detriment of the cause of peace and security.

U.S. BLOCKS FORMATION OF NUCLEAR TEST BAN BODY

LD272228 Moscow TASS in English 2147 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Geneva March 27 TASS -- The U.S. stand once again became the main obstacle holding back the establishment of a special committee to deal with the prohibition of nuclear testing within the framework of the Geneva conference on disarmament.

An early establishment of that body would make it possible to get down to concrete work in order to draft an agreement on the general and complete termination of nuclear weapon tests.

Addressing today's meeting of the conference on behalf of the group of socialist countries, Harold Rose (the German Democratic Republic) emphasized that such a document would meet the demands of the present day and the aspirations of millions of people of the world. The head of the Mexican delegation Alfonso Garcia Robles noted with regret that the situation that had taken shape last year when the United States had blocked the establishment of the special committee was about to recur. Not even a group of delegations, he said, but the U.S. delegation alone is holding back work on that important and urgent problem.

ZHUKOV VIEWS EUROPEAN SDI INVOLVEMENT

PM261519 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 24 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Article by political observer Yuriy Zhukov: "'EuroSDI' -- What Is It?"]

[Text] Reports on plans to create a so-called "European system of defensive space armaments" ("EuroSDI") which would supplement the U.S. "Strategic Defense Initiative" (SDI) are appearing in the Western press. The word "defensive" is, of course used as a blind on this occasion too.

Woerner's Plan and General Rogers' Specifications

This plan was actively worked up back in spring last year among Parisian right-wing circles and among Bonn's ruling echelons, which displayed special interest in it. And it is evidently no accident that the idea of "EuroSDI" is now being increasingly frequently linked with the name of FDG Defense Minister Woerner.

For instance, here is what the informed West German magazine DER SPIEGEL said back in December 1985: "The U.S. antimissile space system will have a European brother: Defense Minister Woerner is demanding the approval of the EDI -- the 'European Defense Initiative.'"

As AP reported 2 March, "Woerner suggested the 'European Defense Initiative' plan back at the NATO session in Brussels in December last year but this idea failed to generate great enthusiasm among other Europeans." But he did find friends and fellow-thinkers in Washington and this was clearly no accident: after all the "EuroSDI" is indeed th "younger brother" of the American SDI and they have the same father: the Pentagon.

As Woerner himself admitted in the article "Europe needs an ABM defense" published 28 February in the Hamburg weekly DIE ZEIT" "For several years now (!) the Federal Republic in conjunction with the United States has been developing a system... which in terms of its tactical and technical data signifies a new quality in the direction of obtaining heightened capabilities in ABM defense."

Language of barrack-room coarseness, but the crux is clear!

To reassure the West European public a story has been put into circulation alleging that the creation of their own "independent" space weapon enables the West European states to "gain independence" from the United States.

But as early as 13 February a crushing blow was dealt to this crafty story by none other than the U.S. General B. Rogers, commander in chief of the NATO Allied Armed Forces, Europe, who gave a thunderous interview to the West German newspaper NEUE OZ OSNABRUCKER ZEITUNG. The talk of "European independence" and "originality" launched by the West German press seemed to him a danerous heresy.

Incidentally, back in November, when the first reports of the "EuroSDI" plans had percolated to the press, this U.S. general made it clearly understood in an interview with the newspaper FRANKFURTER RUNDSHAU that it was only a case of a military-technical addition to the SDI and that this additional system would be at his disposal.

Moreover, at the same time he accidentally revealed that the actual idea of creating this additional system was put to the West European allies from Washington: "Specialists employed on the SDI program," he said, "have assured me that it will also be necessary to create a system against weapons like the SS-20 and other missiles. I attach great importance to the fact that we (!) have created a system of defense against these weapons in West Europe."

Later the irrepressible Rogers, describing the "star wars" preparation program, stated in a peremptory tone that "the West Europeans must (!) begin to pursue a parallel program, as the Germans call it -- the European Defense Initiative." And he immediately added that this system is conceived as a "side-effect" of SDI.

And in February, in NEUE OZ OSNABRUCKER ZEITUNG, Rogers again made it clearly understood that the "EuroSDI" is conceived only as a sideshoot of the U.S. "star wars" program. Going even further, he said that the United States is prepared to take an active part in the implementation of Woerner's plan: "If the Europeans succeed in pooling their technical potential and organizing this, it would be possible to develop such a system including with the aid of scientific exchange across the ocean jointly (jointly! -- Yu.Zh.) with SDI."

The only thing which annoys and angers the high-ranking U.S. general is the cool attitude toward Woerner's plan displayed by a number of West European allies who do not support this plan. "I am most disappointed," he said, "that other states have failed to take up the FRG official circles' initiative. To this day I have noticed no signs of any special desire on the Europeans' part to follow the FRG's proposal...Yes, I am disappointed."

Obediently playing up to the U.S. commander in chief, NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington said a few days later in the Italian newspaper CORRIERA DELLA SERA: "In my opinion, everything which can create among Americans the opinion that we no longer need them and intend to act independently would only cause harm." And in turn he urged the West European countries belonging to the NATO military bloc to use their "joint efforts" with the United States to create antimissiles...

Witches'Sabbath in Munich

Inasmuch as hesitation and apprehension persist in the West European NATO countries, the supporters of "EuroSDI" have brought in their heavy propaganda artillery, so to speak. In the first days of March another conference of the so-called "Wehrkunde" military-scientific society, which in the FRG is rightly called the "Areopagus of cold war," was held in Munich.

This time 150 high-ranking "Atlanticists" came, including F. Ikle, U.S. under secretary of defense, P. Nitze, the President's special consultant; M. Glitmann, leader of the U.S. delegation at the Geneva talks; General Rogers himself; E. Teller, the notorious "father of the U.S. hydrogen bomb;" and the defense ministers of a number of West European countries. Their meeting immediately acquired the nature of a veritable sabbath of witches practising hellish plans.

The tone to this sabbath was set by F. Ikle, who, West German television reproted, "expressed himself in favor of achieving military superiority over the Soviet Union" and urged Washington's allies to join in the implementation of SDI. FRG Defense Minsiter M. Woerner followed him and "warned NATO of the danger (!) of the all-engulfing desire to eliminate nuclear armaments." (I am quoting here and subsequently from the AP report). And he immediately "expressed himself in favor of implementing a European program similar to the U.S. 'star wars' program."

E. Teller, a fanatical supporter of the "star wars" idea, also performed his piece. Obviously anxious to inspire the participants in this sabbath, THE WASHINGTON POST reports, on 3 March he boastfully "stated that it is possible 'quite easily' to destroy Soviet near-range missiles" "with the aid of a laser reflected from a mirror put into space."

These bellicose speeches, however, failed to generate enthusiasm in West Europe, even among the circles of convinced supporters of military partnership with the United States. Thus in Bonn, addressing a press conference, H. Schaefer, the Free Democratic Party Bundestag faction's expert on foreign policy, urged the U.S. President to dissociate himself from F. Ikle's statement. H. Scheer, the Social Demcratic Party of Germany Bundestag faction's disarmament expert, also protested this Washington envoys statement. H. Ehmke, deputy chairman of this same faction, rejected M. Woerner's "EuroSDI" proposal and stated that its implementation would be the cause of the further buildup of armaments in Europe.

Voices of protest were also heard in other West European countries. But all this in no way embarrasses the Washington "hawks" who are acting increasingly openly in the role of the main interested party in creating the "EuroSDI." They are now gambling on the West European military-industrial monopolies' interest in the profits which participation in this business would bring them.

It is no accident that it was General B. Rogers again who in his interview with NEUE OZ OSNABRUCKER ZEITUNG recalled that a few years ago he had suggested creating for research, development, production, and adoption a "pool of West European military concerns" which could "lead to the point where the United States would purchase the necessary combat equipment in (West) Europe at more favorable prices."

In the Chase After Advantageous Orders

Promises of this kind are so to speak balm to the souls of the manufacturers of death who profit from the arms race. And now the military-industrial monopolies of the FRG, Britain, France, and several other West European states are rushing to develop plans to take part in both the U.S. SDI and the "EuroSDI."

The FRG monopolies have begun to invest considerable sums in the appropriate developments. The West German press reports that the Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blowm (MBB) firm for instance, together with the Nuernberg firm of (Dil), has spent DM25 million on the creation of a high-energy laser model. MBB is preparing to spend about DM100 million on experimental design developments rights up to the series production of this laser.

Their French, British, and other competitors are not lagging behind the FRG military-industrial firms which are now openly boasting that they hope to obtain advantageous orders.

Detailed information on this score was published in the U.S. magazine AVIATION WEEK AND SPACE TECHNOLOGY 16 December 1985. The British firms British Aerospace, GEC, Marconi, and Thorn EMI, the French Matra firm, the Italian strategic technology consortium, which has been joined by eight major aerospace and electronic firms, and others are vying with each other to offer their services as contractors in SDI and "EuroSDI." Such are the facts confirming that "EuroSDI" is nothing but an offshoot of the U.S. "star wars" preparation program in whose creation the Pentagon is interested. Phony arguments that this design accords with the interests of the consolidation of West Europe's "independence" and virtually opposes SDI are built on sand and are made only as a blind.

In reality the "EuroSDI" is nothing but an attempt to create a new type of weapon and therefore to open an additional new channel for the arms race. The implementation of this design sharply destabilizes the situation in Europe and will make it uncontrollable and will not raise but considerably lower the European countries' level of security and bring the threat of nuclear war nearer. Hence the only correct conclusion: Europe's peace-loving forces must redouble their efforts in the struggle against the militarization of space, under whatever mask they try to implement it: SDI or "EuroSDI!"

U.S. SDI POLICY PRESENTS 'IMPUDENT CHALLENGE'

PM250930 Moscow KRASNAYA ZVEZDA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Second Edition p 3

[Colonel M. Ponomarev "Military-Political Review": "Impudent Challenge to the Peoples; No Goal More Important Than Saving Life on Earth; Washington's Nuclear Response; 'Strategic Defense Initiative' Is Greatest Deception of the Century"]

[Text] In our time it is worth devoting one's life to saving life itself on earth. There is no more important goal. After all, the arms race has already brought mankind to a crisis point.

Curbing this race, destroying mass destruction weapons, and averting the military danger is a truly historic task in terms of its scale and importance posed by the entire course of social development. The road to its resolution is long and extremely complex. But any road starts with a first step.

The Soviet Union has proposed making that step. And making it immediately, without postponing it for the morrow, for the future. And this step on the path of ridding mankind of the nuclear arms race with all its baneful consequences can and must be the ending of nuclear tests.

Why are nuclear weapons tested? Primarily to modernize them, to increase their combat and destructive qualities, and to create new types of weapons, including for use in space. This means that those who insist on continuing these tests are gambling on further building up the potential of mass destruction weapons. Yet even the weapons that have already been accumulated could wipe all life from the face of the world. On the contrary: The ending of test explosions would lead to an improvement in the international atmosphere, the limitation of nuclear arsenals, and, ultimately, the elimination of nuclear arms in general.

The Soviet Union has already taken its first step along this road. For more than 7 months -- since 6 August 1985 -- it has unilaterally adhered to a moratorium on all nuclear explosions, calling at the same time on the United States to follow this example. Not meeting with reciprocity, the Soviet Union considered it possible to extend its moratorium to 31 March 1986. And then in response to the appeal addressed to the USSR and the United States by the leaders of six countries -- Argentina, India, Mexico, Tanzania, Sweden, and Greece -- not to hold any nuclear tests until the next Soviet-U.S. summit, the Soviet Union stated that it would hold no nuclear explosions until the first nuclear explosion in the United States.

The USSR made that decision despite the fact that -- not having held any nuclear explosion, either as tests or for peaceful purposes, for 8 months -- it had already incurred certain costs both military and in terms of the national economy. But the decision showed our country's constructive approach to the ending of nuclear tests. The decision must be seen as the practical implementation of the provisions formulated in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress: "It is necessary to seek, find, and utilize even the slightest chance of breaking the trend of the military danger to grow before it is too late."

Well, how did Washington react to the call from the leaders of the six countries? The United States responded to it not by ending nuclear tests but by expediting them. The latest nuclear explosion previously planned for April was carried out yesterday evening.

This act cannot be assessed as anything but an impudent challenge to the peoples of the entire planet and as an undisguised provocation. Washington continues to gamble on force and force alone. And this is openly proclaimed by the leaders of the U.S. Administration. Many statements have been made on this score recently, although clearly for the sake of decorum they have sometimes been spiced with a certain amount of peace-loving rhetoric, so to speak. Here is a typical example: "Western security and world peace depend absolutely on U.S. military might." These are the words of U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger. "Absolutely," he stresses so as to leave nobody in any doubt. "Absolutely" -- and the earth continues to shudder under the nuclear explosions at the Nevada test site.

That is how official Washington is acting. That is how it is reacting to the Soviet peace initiatives. It is trying either to entirely ignore them or to distort and besmirch them. Yet Washington itself continues in the same old vein. A letter sent to the Senate by President Reagan 10 days ago sets out the U.S. position: It will neither introduce a moratorium on nuclear explosions nor ratify the 1974 Treaty on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests and the 1976 Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes. But why? Because "today and in the foreseeable future the security of the United States and its friends and allies must rely on a reliable and effective nuclear deterrent."

Moreover, this phrase from Reagan's letter has by no means been highlighted. On the contrary, it is almost lost among the numerous "arguments" adduced by the White House incubent to justify his position. But it does not lose its sinister purpose for all that. As for the so-called "arguments," we will dwell on just one of them -- the statement about "concern" at the problem of verifying [kontrol] the conducting of explosions and the USSR's lack of readiness to accede to such verification [kontrol] on Soviet territory.

What can be said on that score? A KRASNAYA ZVEZDA representative put that question at a press conference held in Moscow the other day. And he received an authoritative reply whose essence, in short, is this: Our country is interested in verification [kontrol] and its reliability and stringency no less than anyone else. Provided solely that it is verification [kontrol] of the observance of specific accords -- verification [kontrol] using national or international technical means -- the USSR is open to verification [kontrol].

It was stressed that the entire territory of the Soviet Union is surrounded by approximately 200 stations set up either by the United States or under its leadership. We have approximately 20 such stations. But even under these conditions the USSR agrees to maintain mutual verification [kontrol]. We believe that our stations are adequate to monitor nuclear tests carried out abroad and have so far not missed any of these tests. So the only thing that could hamper the organization of verification [kontrol] is the clear reluctance on the U.S. side.

Yes, this reluctance is obvious. Is the President proposing anything for his part? He proposes... inviting observers from the USSR to the next nuclear tests in the United States. That is, not ending tests nor banning nuclear explosions but legalizing them with Soviet participation. Is it necessary to talk about the total unacceptability of that approach?

In 1985 the United States carried out 18 nuclear explosions. Yesterday yet another one was carried out. Many of them -- such as the explosion at the end of last year, for instance -- are carried out under conditions close to those existing in space. And the data obtained is used to develop and create "star wars" weapons.

Here we have reached the moment of truth. Why does the Reagan administration reject the Soviet proposal to end nuclear tests? "It is doing this," Senator E. Kennedy, the well known U.S. politician, replied, "because it needs nuclear tests to improve nuclear arms and to carry out the 'star wars' program, which is opening up a new stage in the arms race."

What can you say, he has hit the nail on the head. It is those goals that Washington is pursuing.

We recall that exactly 3 years ago, 23 March 1983, President Reagan made a speech setting out the administration's intention to spread the arms race to space and to create a wide-ranging antimissile defense with space-based elements. In America itself these plans started to be called the program for preparing for "star wars," even though the administration stubbornly calls them the "Strategic Defense Initiative." But this falsehood has long since been exposed. In the 3 years since the proclamation of SDI the program has not become any more attractive in the eyes of the public. And its extremely dangerous essence has been made obvious to all who take the trouble to think about the future. In essence SDI boils down to a desire to ensure that a nuclear first strike can be carried out with impunity. Even the most rabid advocates of the "star wars" program in the Pentagon have now been forced to admit that it is built on the expectation of such a strike. The discussions now heard in the Pentagon go like this: The number of missiles and warheads penetrating the U.S. ABM system must be radically reduced and U.S. losses can then only be reduced by a preliminary first (disabling) strike against the other side's nuclear missile bases.

Thus, the "Strategic Defense Initiative" is not defensive but offensive, and another unchecked buildup in nuclear arms.

People in the United States sometimes try to claim that the work within the SDI framework does not go beyond the bounds of research. But, first, this "research" is itself aimed at transferring the arms race to space and creating space strike weapons. It is no accident that the Pentagon is strengthening its scientific and technical potential in every possible way in order to expedite the work to implement the "star wars" program. For instance, according to an AVIATION WEEK AND SPACE TECHNOLOGY report, Lieutenant General Abrahamson, leader of the organization to implement the program, has just recommended that the U.S. defense secretary create an institute to work out the scientific and technical (that is, entirely specific) problems associated with SDI.

Second, one hears increasingly frequently about practical steps in this sphere. The same Abrahamson, pressing for increased appropriations for space weapons at Congressional hearings, directly stressed that, on obtaining the relevant funds, the organization he heads "intends to move from technological development to carrying out important practical experiments" in the new fiscal 1987. And nuclear explosions aimed at testing elements of space strike arms are among those experiments.

The circle is thus closed. All the more so as the Soviet Union's position is well known and was fully reaffirmed at the 27th CPSU Congress. The USSR is a most convinced opponent of nuclear war in any scenario. Our country favors withdrawing mass destruction weapons from circulation and limiting military potential to the bounds of sensible sufficiency. But in order to do this it is necessary to seek before it is too late a real solution which would act as a guarantee against the arms race being transferred to space.

This is the position not only of the Soviet Union. The communique of the recent session of the Warsaw Pact Foreign Ministers Committee in Warsaw wholly supported the program for the complete elimination of all arsenals of nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of this century and the prohibition of space strike arms put forward in the 15 January 1986 statement by the secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

In response to the U.S. concept of absolute security for itself and absolute danger for everyone else, the USSR has put forward the concept of creating a comprehensive international security system. This is one of the main components of Soviet peace strategy.

U.S. PREPARING FOR NEW NUCLEAR TEST IN APRIL

LD280646 Moscow TASS in English 0630 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 28 TASS -- The United States is planning to conduct yet another nuclear test and most probably it will be carried out within the third week of April. This was confirmed by Edward Djerejian, deputy press secretary of the White House, at a briefing for foreign correspondents on Thursday.

Djerejian said the United States had a programme for tests and was planning next explosion. President Reagan in one of his recent statements is known to have made it clear that a test would be effected in the third week of April. It follows from pronouncements by the deputy press secretary of the White House that the date still holds good.

The United States conducted its previous test with a yield of up to 150 kilotons at the proving ground in Nevada on March 22 in defiance of the demands of both U.S. and world public that the USA should follow the Soviet Union's example and announce a moratorium on nuclear tests.

GORBACHEV SENDS YEAR OF PEACE MESSAGE TO UN

LD271629 Moscow TASS in English 1626 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 27 TASS -- Follows the full text of a message sent by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, to United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar:

"Esteemed Mr Secretary General,

The Soviet Union responded with gratification to the unanimous proclamation by the United Nations of the current year, 1986, as the International Year of Peace. We consider this a manifestation of the world community's striving to achieve at long last a drastic change for the better in the development of international relations. This approach is fully in accord with the foreign policy principles and goals put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress. We hold that our ideal is a world without weapons and violence, in which every nation would live under conditions of justice and security and be free to shape its destiny.

Is it realistic to pave the road to such a future from today's world of ours, saturated with weapons which threaten to turn it into a lifeless desert? Our answer is univocal: It is. To this end, it is necessary first and foremost to realise that in the nuclear and space age our planet is too small and fragile for wars and power politics, and to embrace a new political mentality, which demands that the philosophy of survival and equal security for all be followed up by bold and resolute actions. Herein lies the essence of the principles formulated by the CPSU congress. The proposal, put forward at the congress, on the foundations of a comprehensive international security system is in harmony with the goals and tasks of the International Year of Peace. It amounts to making peaceful coexistence a universal principle of state-to-state relations, embodied in the constructive and creative interaction of states and peoples.

The congress decided that efforts to implement the program for universal security through disarmament, set forth on January 15, 1986, shall be the central guideline of the foreign policy of the Soviet Union. The core of the program is a plan for step-by-step elimination of nuclear weapons given the ban on space strike arms. Simultaneously with nuclear weapons the U.S.S.R. proposes to eliminate chemical weapons completely and to give up the development of other systems of mass annihilation. Along with this we are prepared to go as far as other states are ready to go also in the sphere of reduction of conventional arms and armed forces. All disarmament measures proposed by us provide for verification, including on-site inspections where necessary. This verification should be enough to ensure the compliance of all the sides with the agreement.

Nations can and should ensure that the International Year of Peace will go down in mankind's history as a year that will see the beginning of the establishment of a comprehensive system of international security and that every next year after that and till the turn of the centruy will become a milestone on the road toward completely ridding mankind of nuclear weapons, toward eliminating the threat of universal destruction. The prohibition of nuclear weapon testing would create a realistic possibility for that. Not to conduct tests means to put an end to the modernization of such weapons and the development of their new types, to start practical steps toward the elimination of nuclear arsenals. This issue is today at the focus of attention of the nations of the world.

An accord on the complete elimination of the medium-range missiles of the USSR and the United States in the European zone on a reciprocal basis could become a major event of the International Year of Peace. The Soviet Union is prepared to come to terms on the issue, just as on nuclear testing, without any linkages.

The International Year of Peace could be marked by mounting joint efforts by states in the peaceful exploration of outer space and in laying down organizational foundations for international cooperation to prevent an arms race in space and to use it for peaceful purpose, as is in effect unanimously demanded by the United Nations.

Establishing an all-embracing system of international security is a task which is not only a multifaceted but also a global one requiring the joint efforts of states and peoples, all and everyone. All international forums, in the first place such a universal instrument for multilateral cooperation as the United Nations, are called to make an effective contribution to accomplishing it. The vital cause of ensuring peace must not be allowed to drawn in endless verbiage. The peoples are waiting for all ongoing talks to become effective and productive. A regular dialogue, both bilateral and multilateral, among the leaders of all countries of the world community should play an important role. By virtue of the U.N. Charter a special responsibility for the world situation rests on the permanent members of the U.N. Security Council, which, moreover, are nuclear powers. This is why the Soviet Union suggests that the five powers gather at a round table to discuss what can and should be done to strengthen peace, first of all to do away with nuclear weapons. Obviously, what is meant is not the recognition of any claims to 'leadership' in world affairs but what is in essence an opposite goal. Once the nuclear weapons are destroyed, the so-called exclusive club of nuclear-weapon powers would also cease to exist and a great stride forward would be made towards democratizing international relations.

When putting forward the large-scale program of ensuring international security, the Soviet Union proceeds from the assumption that measures planned and implemented within the framework of the International Year of Peace are called upon to promote joint actions of states and peoples aimed at warding off the war threat and to rally the broadest popular masses to this cause. By taking resolute actions with a view to ensuring a radical change for the better in the development of the world situation, the Soviet leadership complies with the mandate from our entire people and relies on the potential of peace, reason and goodwill which is strengthening on our planet.

Soviet people express hope that all the countries will take advantage of the International Year of Peace in order to take concrete, practical steps in the current year already towards really delivering the present and future generations from the threat of nuclear catastrophe. The Soviet Union will continue to take part in the efforts aimed at attaining the goals of the International Year of Peace, whose motto is to safeguard peace and the future of humanity, and to actively promote the enhancement of the role and prestige of the United Nations Organization in questions connected with the consolidation of peace and security of nations and the development of international cooperation.

Perez de Cuellar on Message

[Text] New York March 27 TASS -- Perez de Cuellar, U.N. secretary general, has expressed high appreciation of the message sent to him by the General Secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Mikhail Gorbachev which welcomes the proclamation of 1986 as the International Year of Peace. He said that the Soviet Union had always favoured and continued to favor the preservation of international peace and security and the enhancement of the role played by the U.N. in this sphere. The message of Mikhail Gorbachev is another evidence of the support for the United Nations organization rendered by the Soviet Union.

ACADEMICIANS OUTLINE SOVIET SECURITY CONCEPTS

Primakov Describes 'Philosophy'

PM240703 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 17 Mar 86 First Edition p 6

[Article by Academician Ye. Primakov: "A Philosophy of Security. The 27th CPSU Congress: Elaborating a Foreign Policy Strategy"]

[Text] One very important result of the 27th CPSU Congress is the party's foreign policy strategy elaborated at it. There are objective reasons for this.

History has entered a very dangerous period. The first half of the eighties saw an intensification of nuclear confrontation between the United States and the USSR and between NATO and the Warsaw Pact. There appeared the threat of the destruction of human civilization. Never before, therefore, had the problem of normalization of the international situation and creation of a reliable barrier against plunging into a devastating nuclear missile war been so acute. Never before had state leaders, primarily those of the strongest countries from the military viewpoint, borne such a high responsibility for the fate not only of their own and allied peoples, but of all the peoples of the world.

Another group of reasons which necessitated the elaboration of a detailed CPSU foreign policy strategy is associated with the arrival of a qualitatively new stage in our country's domestic development. And normalization of the international situation, together with the cessation of the very dangerous and expensive arms race, would create ideal conditions for carrying out the set tasks.

The CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th congress says: "Our task is to acquire a broad, Leninist understanding of the times we are living in and to elaborate a realistic and thoroughly considered program of actions organically combining impressive goals with realism of potential and the party's plans with everyone's hopes and aspirations." This is the approach the party adopted when elaborating the program of actions in the foreign policy sphere.

The scale, depth, and -- above all -- the mounting danger of the problems that have accumulated in the international sphere are obvious. They are:

The unbridled arms race unleashed by imperialism, which is leading mankind to the brink of self-destruction; and the prospect of strike weapons being put into space, which would greatly magnify the threat to peace and could make the arms race on earth irreversible;

Regional conflicts, which could explode and destroy the present relative stability at the global level;

The buildup of distrust between states, which is eating into the fabric of international relations;

Unsettled global problems: ecology, raw materials, famine, and disease;

The backwardness of former colonies and semicolonies, with a gulf between them and the former mother states that is not narrowing; and continuing exploitation of the liberated countries -- in particular, the enormous debt that hangs over them like the Sword of Damocles.

Can these and other problems be solved merely by repeating the steps that have been taken in the past? The 27th congress clearly confirmed the need to exploit all available opportunities for solving them, including new methods, means, and approaches. This makes it particularly important to form a realistic assessment of, on the one hand, the factors that gave rise to the dangerous development of the international situation, and, on the other, the forces, processes, and trends which could play a positive part in improving it.

Imperialism has not changed its nature. It is still characterized by militarism, hegemonism, and aggression. It is hindering efforts by the USSR and other peace-loving states to stabilize and improve international life.

But it would be wrong today to act on the basis of these assessments alone. The historic gain of world socialism is not only the creation, but the guarantee of the preservation of strategic military parity between the USSR and the United States, the Warsaw Pact and NATO. Imperialism's potential has diminished, and the leaders of the capitalist world have to face up to this. A thermonuclear war spells suicide for mankind. In these conditions, it is now possible if not to state that a mood of realism has spread among the leaders of the capitalist world, then to predict with a greater degree of probability that it will emerge in the foreseeable future.

Nor can the capitalist coalition confronting us be regarded as an integral whole. The United States takes the most extremist stance on a number of international issues. But it does not have the unconditional support of all its allies, especially in a policy that could block compromise solutions.

There is extensive manipulation of public opinion in the capitalist world. But it still has a certain incluence on the elaboration of foreign policy decisions.

As tension in the world grows, the conglomeration of political forces consciously or objectively acting in the interests of improving the international situation acquires an increasingly broad outline. The spectrum of these forces is pretty extensive. They include the Nonaligned Movement and individual or groups of liberated countries upholding the principles of detente and democratization of the system of international relations; trade unions of different hues; numerous nongovernmental organizations; and a number of pacifist movements. The success of the struggle to preserve peace depends largely on the intensity of the antiwar activity of various forces in the international arena. The Soviet foreign policy strategy takes all the aforementioned circumstances into account.

The world socialist system is a factor that plays an extremely big part in improving the international situation. The CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th congress says: "Today the fact of peace and of social progress is linked more closely than ever to the dynamism of the ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE WORLD SOCIALIST SYSTEM" [uppercase passage published in boldface]. The CPSU's foreign policy strategy pays special attention to effective collaboration among all the socialist countries and the entire communist movement, which leads to an increase in the potential for peace.

One of the chief components of the Soviet peace strategy is the concept of an all-embracing system of international security, which was elaborated after the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum.

What is it based on? Above all on the conclusion that no state is capable of defending itself solely by military-technical means, even with the most powerful defenses.

Life rules out the possibility of safeguarding security by building up one's own military potential, even if one managed to achieve military superiroity over the other side. Given the nature of modern weapons, the only way to safeguard security is through political channels, in other words, through accords taking into account the interests of the sides and aimed at halting the arms race and stabilizing the world situation.

At the moment, to be frank, security is based on fear of retribution. It was not our country that initiated this method of safeguarding security, but in the conditions of the Washington-inspired unbridled arms race we were forced to commit ourselves to catching up the United States in the race and then maintaining parity in the military-strategic sphere. The USSR has never regarded this situation as ideal or even acceptable. The USSR wants to lower its level while maintaining equal security for the sides.

But the arms race has continued in both quantitative and -- what is even more dangerous -- qualitative terms. As a result, the problem of maintaining the sides' equal security becomes a problem of equal danger for them. Since the whole world becomes hostage to this situation, it is perfectly clear how immoral it is. The CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th party congress also notes the absurdity of this situation. The continuation of the arms race is bound to raise this "equal danger" to the level where the world situation will cease to depend on the reason and will of politicians, and the fate of mankind will be "entrusted" to technology, with all the potential fatal consequences that that entails. Our party congress reached the conclusion that, if the present trends continue, military-strategic parity will eventually be unable to perform a restraining function.

The CPSU deems it necessary to effect an immediate breakthrough in the main area and eliminate nuclear and other types of mass destruction weapons from the military-stragegic balance. A detailed, comprehensive proposal for the oomplete and universal elimination of nuclear and other mass destruction weapons is contained in the CPSU Central Committee General Secretary's 15 January statement. A real solution insuring against the spread of the arms race to space is fundamental in this case.

The leadership of the U.S. Administration also talks of its desire to abandon the "balance of terror" (ravnyy strakh) concept. But what new security philosophy is it proposing? It is the creation of a system of space weapons and preparation for "star wars" which can allegedly make nuclear weapons unnecessary and unusable. According to the experts, including well-known U.S. scientists, the placing of weapons in space can only utterly destabilize the international situation and whip up the offensive nuclear arms race. Even if one imagines that the U.S. leaders sincerely want to find ways of getting rid of nuclear arms, is it not simpler to eliminate them altogether -- in stages, as proposed by the USSR, taking into account the need not to cause even temporary damage to any state's security?

The Soviet security concept is based on ruling out the possibility of one side's safeguarding its interests to the detriment of the other. As for USSR-U.S. relations, the security of both can only be mutual, based on consideration of each other's interests and identification of areas where they coincide and of actions to bring them closer together.

The Soviet security concept is not confined to USSR-U.S. relations, important though they may be. The task is to create an all-embracing international security system.

First, it could be based on political accords not only at the global level, as mentioned above, but also at regional level.

Here great significance attaches to joint efforts to find ways of resolving regional conflicts -- in the Near East, Central America, and southern Africa -- wherever hotbeds of war danger exist.

Second, the CPSU is intending not only to use military detente measures to create an all-embracing international security system, although, naturally, specific measures to improve matters in the military sphere are of paramount significance. As well as actions in the military sphere, the CPSU Central Committee Political Report designates actions in political, economic, and humanitarian spheres as the basis for an all-embraching international security system. It is a matter of creating a broad and lasting foundation for international security, capable of taking the strain of the contradictions and unresolved problems that have accumulated over the years.

Third, measures to stabilize peace must be implemented immediately. While recognizing the importance of all spheres of the struggle to improve international life, the Soviet security concept sees the struggle to halt the arms race as the chief task. Neither the problems connected with an accord on the political settlement of regional conflicts, nor the process of building confidence between the two systems' states can be set up as an obstacle to this struggle, whose aim is to well and truly cut off the main source of the threat to peace. It must also be seen that positive advances in the sphere of reduction and then elimination of nuclear weapons would contribute to the solution of other vital tasks connected with the improvement of the international climate.

The very dangerous atmosphere of nuclear confrontation demands new political thinking. M.S. Gorbachev talked about this in Geneva. The idea was confirmed and developed in the 27th CPSU Congress materials.

The dialectics between the division of the world into two opposing parts and its continuing and even increasing unity -- especially in conditions where mankind is facing the full-scale problem of sirvival -- are manifested in the fact that opposition between capitalism and socialism OBJECTIVELY [uppercase word published in boldface] should occur in the form of peaceful competition and peaceful rivalry.

We cannot turn a blind eye to the social, ideological, and political contradictions with capitalism. Obviously, the capitalist countries' ruling circles will not turn a blind eye to contradictions with socialism either. But this is no justification at all for turning international relations into the sphere in which the fate of competition between the two systems will be decided.

Soviet foreign policy is geared to the quest for mutual understanding, to dialogue, and to the consolidation of peaceful coexistence as the norm in relations between states. The element of normalization of relations between the states of the two systems is increasingly becoming a part of the concept of peaceful coexistence. It is not just a matter of removing war from the life of society, but of renouncing tough, strongarm forms of opposition, behaving in a restrained and circumspect manner in the international arena, and widening mutually advantageous cooperation in various spheres, in particular to solve global problems.

The new political thinking must incorporate a correct attitude to the objective process of social development in the world. Marxism-Leninism has always stated that it is futile and impermissible to encourage revolution from outside. At the same time, no one must ever be allowed to halt the onward march of history and preserve an outdated sociopolitical status quo by exporting counterrevolution.

The party's foreign policy strategy, elaborated by the 27th CPSU Congress, is becoming an active factor in international life. Its principles must be incorporated in political relations between states. The USSR's specific proposals on normalizing the international situation have been placed on the negotiating table and now belong to the world public.

Of course, we are not expecting instantaneous radical changes in relations with the United States. "The militarist, aggressive forces would prefer, of course, even now, to freeze and perpetuate confrontation," M.S. Gorbachev said in is speech at the closing of the 27th CPSU Congress. "So what do we do, comrades? Slam the door? It is possible that this is precisely what they are trying to get us to do. But we are perfectly well aware of our responsibility for the fate of the country, for the fate of peace. Therefore we do not intend to go along with those who would force mankind to become accustomed to the nuclear threat, to the arms race."

Ahead lies a path of long and stubborn struggle to implement the Soviet peace strategy.

Proektor Elaborates

PM141701 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 14 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Professor D. Proektor article: "The Soviet Concept of Security"]

[Text] Throughout history it has been believed that the security of states and alliances can only be ensured by military strength. "War is the father of all things," the philosopher Heraclitus said. At the beginning of the 20th century, the "philosopher" M. Harden wrote: "Only one principle is taken into account -- strength. Insist on that, and everything else can be disregarded." At the end of our century, President Reagan has urged: "Let us realize our own strength!" Three completely different eras -- approximately the same cult of strength.

Surely mankind is not doomed to view its own history and its future only through the prism of arms balances and to build its life primarily in accordance with categories of militarist thinking?

The socialist way of thinking is the first to scientifically substantiate other possibilities of ensuring security. This question is particularly acute today when, having reached peaks of progress, people have simultaneously created a vast potential for self-destruction. And when political and military awareness has managed to fall into line with the totally new demands made by the development of the scientific and technical revolution in by no menas every stratum of bourgeois society.

It goes without saying that the ideas in the sphere of international security policy formulated by the 27th CPSU Congress are crucial to the understanding of this major problem. They are the fruit of creative use being made of the Marxist method in the development of one of the most important questions of war and peace as applicable to the end of our century.

The congress definition of international security as a political task, which can only be revolved by political means, must be recognized as a most important theoretical tenet. The militarist-technical approach to international security -- characteristic of imperialism -- drives interstate relations into a deadlock of hopeless confrontation; it is a colorless, soulless approach. It offers mankind no future, other than the expectation of worse to come, and it engenders a sense of fear and impotence.

It is unworthy of man, degrading and gradually turning him into a slave of the technology of war and of those who create and control that technology. This approach renders international relations and the whole of mankind's existence primative. We would not be exaggerating if we said that now the watershed in understanding the essence of security policy lies between those who can see nothing in that policy above military and military-technical categories and who tend to make any solution to its problems dependent solely on the number of units of arms, and those who perceive here primarily a flexible and complex form of political interrelations.

Developing principles of security policy which correspond totally to the very complex conditions of our time and to the prospects for the foreseeable future, the CPSU is creatively guided by Leninist ideas on war and peace, with the characteristic, unconditional priority they attach to a political basis. The party has reached a number of conclusions which are of principled importance. The main conclusions are as follows:

First: The nature of contemporary arms can leave no state any hope of defending itself by military and technical means alone or even by creating the most powerful defense. This means that all the old, traditional forms of military and defense stragegy, be it a "Maginot Line," every possible kind of "wall," or multizone systems, the formation of which swallows up gigantic means and resources, can no longer guarantee security in its modern interpretation. The latest technology will scarcely alter this. Consequently, the transatlantic "Strategic Defense Initiative" -- if it is implemented -- will most probably be no more reliable than the infamous "Atlantic Wall" in 1944.

Second: If the arms race is going to continue on earth and, what is more, spread into space, the critically high rate at which nuclear weapons are being improved will deprive of all meaning the parity of forces between East and West as a restraining factor. Consequently, even parity of military forces is by no means an absolute form of security. It is, like all the rest, an historical phenomenon characteristic only of certain conditions. Of course, we have no right to ignore the scenarios of a nuclear attack on our country which have been created in the Pentagon, and as long as they exist we are compelled to strengthen or defense shield. But it is our firm belief that peaceful coexistence and detente are a far higher and more reliable form of ensuring international security.

And the third conclusion: The situation in the world is drawing near the state when, perhaps, it will no longer depend on the reason or will of politicians. It could prove to be in thrall to technology and military-technocratic logic. The Pentagon does not simply envisage the most extensive possible introduction of information science and computerization to the entire U.S. military structure; It must make it possible, to use the expression of one American political scientist, "to spread the arms race to the furthermost corner of our solar system." It is a question of a so-called "war without people," or, to be more precise, a growth in the potential to annihilate people with machines on the basis of computer technology and microelectronics, robot technology, and artificial intelligence. Is this really a future worthy of mankind?

On the basis of these conclusions the CPSU has formulated the main tenets of Soviet security policy, which were expounded by M.S. Gorbachev in his Political Report at the 27th CPSU Congress: "...The contemporary world has become too small and fragile for wars and policies of strength. Saving and preserving this world is impossible if we do not break -- decisively and irrevocably -- with the type of ideas and actions which have formed over the centuries on the basis of the acceptibility and permissibility of wars and armed conflicts."

Breaking with obsolete forms of political thinking is absolutely essential. But it is also realistic, because in the final analysis the idea of equal security for all must inevitably be established. Awareness that it is no longer possible to win the arms race, or nuclear war itself, must also be established. In approximately comparable industrial, scientific, and technological potential of today's developed states and their alliances makes attempts to gain unilateral military superiority and to build policies in the new era on the basis of antiquated aims of the distant past both senseless and archaic.

In the spirit of innovation the CPSU has also developed another extremely important idea -- to create an all-embracing international security system. For as far back as man can remember, the predominant aspiration has been to guarantee one's own security at the expense of another, and sometimes actually to the detriment of another. Various "balances of forces," "maneuvering between power centers," these infamous "triangles" and "polygons," every kind of "axis" or "polar model," and so forth -- all this was based on the ancient political "subtleties" of the play on contradictions, on cunning, on stirring up some people against others, and so forth.

In the contemporary world the only constructive approach can be one which, first, guarantees the same level of security for all -- which is impossible to achieve without making the most decisive break with old concepts of methods of politics and diplomacy, and with scholastic attempts to drag them into the present, completely changed era. Second, an approach which excludes any of the worship of military strength so characteristic of the past. And, third, an approach which is based on an integrated concept of security, that is, one which includes all the most important areas of state functioning and interaction -- political, military, economic, and humanitarian.

Proceeding precisely from this kind of approach and taking as a basis the Soviet philosophy of peace, which put forward the idea of collective security as early as the beginning of the thirties, the 27th CPSU Congress elaborated the principled "Basis for Creating a Comprehensive International Security System" as applicable to the situation at the end of our century. The characteristic feature of this most contemporary security concept consist in the following. In the military sphere it envisages a rejection by nuclear powers of war against one another or against third states -- either nuclear or conventional war -- plans, prevention of an arms race in space, a monitored reduction in the levels of military potential, the dissolution of military groupings, and a proportional and balanced reduction in military budgets.

Of an equally broad nature are the ideas embracing the political, economic, and humanitarian spheres of international security. Realization of these ideas would make it possible to turn peaceful coexistence into the highest universal principle of interstate relations.

A truly Leninist approach to the problem of security opens up before mankind the possibility of being free of the onerous pressure of militarization and constant threat. Now as never before, it is dangerous to divide peace from war by only the thin barrier of the arms balance. More reliable walls and many layers of padding are necessary, which would form a reserve of strength. Only an integrated approach, with unconditional priority given to the political principle, can erect these -- reliable and strong -- walls of an edifice of peace.

The vitality of the Soviet theory of international security is determined by the fact that objective conditions have taken shape, under which the struggle between capitalism and socialism can take its course solely and exclusively in the forms of peaceful coexistence and peaceful rivalry. This conclusion has permanent theoretical and practical significance.

It has allowed us, in particular, to put forward a program for eliminating mass destruction weapons -- a program which will be a central aspect of the Soviet Union's foreign policy in the years to come.

Set out in M.S. Gorbachev's statemant of 15 January this year, it has been received with great interest and understanding virtually everywhere. Of course, there is also no shortage of misunderstanding and critical judgments. But how could it be otherwise? It is never the case that new ideas come into the world without encountering opposition. Just take the arguments put forward by opponents of the Soviet program to eliminate mass destruction weapons. Some believe that its realization "would deprive relations between East and West of a stabilizing basis." Others claim that our program is difficult to implement, because the United States will not give up SDI and France and Britain will not give up their own nuclear forces. In the opinion of others, the program is disadvantageous to the West, because the elimination of nuclear weapons would signify "consolidation of Soviet superiority in conventional weapons." And others are convinced that our statement is only the result of the U.S. "policy of strength," and so forth.

The groundlessness of these "arguments" has been proven more than once. And so we will not repeat ourselves. We will only note that the historical process possesses astonishing properties and that sooner or later it will definitely put everything in its place. And the laws of the objective order are revealed during this process -- laws compelling people to act in accordance with them and not in accordance with any far-fetched dogmas, which history can also expose well enough. Our statement is addressed not only to the governments of the NATO countries, but basically to all peoples and governments, whose will plays a large role. We will stubbornly strive to realize the ideas inherent in it, and we believe that the rightness of our cause will be proved in the foreseeable future. This is because the ideas in the statement correspond to the needs of the era.

The security concept developed at the congress counters the amoral and absurd philosophy of "deterrence." The amorality of this philosophy lies in the fact that one should not try to build peace on the basis of mankind's fear and horror of universal annihilation. Life under these conditions can lose all meaning. The absurdity of this philosophy lies in the negation of one's own self; stimulating the increasing nuclear arms race, "deterrence" not only does not guarantee security but, on the contrary, ultimately catastrophically undermines it.

The Soviet security concept places the entire problem in a different dimension: not to "deter" with the annihilation of the human race for the sake of political ambition or one-sided interpretation of the course of history, intolerance, and infinite class egoism, but to relentlessly, indefatigably seek political solutions to the most complex, involved situations. In international relations, as in life,there are no hopeless situations. So-called "political deadlocks" are basically, for the most part, only evidence of the inability of politicians preferring a head-on clash to flexible maneuver. All that is needed is for people to look properly for solutions -- not in crises, conflicts, and wars, but in intellegent decisions based on a desire for peace and mutual understanding wherever there is even the slightest chance of this, and then solutions to the most "hopeless" situations will be found.

In the difficult time ahead, attempts will probably be made to force us to abandon our chosen course of detente and peace and to provoke military, strong-arm confrontation in the hope, perhaps,that we will slam the door. But we will not yield to such challenges and begin copying the methods of the inspirers of imperial ideology and policy who continue to regard strength as the most powerful argument in world politics.

We will pursue our own Leninist policy and follow our own course, worthy of a socialist state. We have no need of attempting to halt the course of history by force. It was declared from the congress restrum to the whole world that Soviet foreign policy is oriented toward seeking mutual understanding, toward dialogue, and toward the establishment of peaceful coexistence as the univeral norm in interstate relations. "We are perfectly aware of our responsibility for the fate of the country and the fate of peace. And that is why we do not intend to play up to those who would like to force mankind to get used to the nuclear threat and the arms race," M.S. Gorbachev aid at the close of the congress. Our concept of security serves to achieve the main aim of CPSU foreign policy strategy -- to guarantee the Soviet people the opportunity to work under conditions of lasting peace and freedom and to preserve universal peace.

OFFICIAL ON BENDJEDID VISIT, SDI, MEDITERRANEAN

LD281031 Moscow TASS in English 1025 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 28 TASS -- At today's briefing Valeriy Sukhin, deputy head of the press department of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs, informed those present of the results of the official friendly visit to Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic, general secretary of the National Liberation Front (FLN) Party, to the USSR.

Journalists' attention was particularly drawn to the USSR's new peace initiative which was put forward during the Soviet-Algerian talks and which is aimed at making the Mediterranean a zone of stable peace and cooperation. It was emphasised that the need and urgency of the attainament of this goal was once again confirmed by the recent aggressive actions by the U.S. naval task force against Libya and in the area which is thousands of miles away from the United States.

"At one time the Soviet Union came forward with a number of proposals aimed at making the Mediterranean a zone of stable peace and cooperation. All those proposals still hold good. At the same time, as Mikhail Gorbachev stated during the visit of the president of Algeria, if the United States withdraws its fleet from the Mediterranean, the USSR would do the same simultaneously. The Soviet Union is ready to enter into negotiations on this matter without delay. The USSR has to keep its ships in the Mediterraean as a reply measure only because the U.S. sixth Fleet, the nuclear-missile weapons of which threaten the security of the USSR, of its allies and friends, is in direct proximity to Soviet borders. We regard with understanding the initiatives of the Mediterranean non-allied countries which are preparing for their second conference".

In our view, a more representative conference involving apart from the Mediterranean states and the states adjoining this area also the United States and other countries concerned, by analogy with the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, would play a useful role.

Responding to questions, the representative of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs said that acquisition of nuclear weapons by Pakistan would create a qulitatively new situation in the South- and South-West-Asian region, adjoining the USSR's southern borders and would have dangerous consequences for the cause of peace in Asia and all over the world.

Weare convinced that a truly reliable guarantee of security, territorial integrity and sovereignty of Pakistan can be assured not through persistent efforts to develop nuclear weapons and frenzied armament, but through sober assessment of the present-day state of affairs in the world, in South and South-West Asia and the constructive approach to relations with neighbours and the other states of the region.

In connection with the signing of an agreement on the participation of West Germany in the so-called U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, the question arises how such actions are tallied with statements by West German Government quarters on the striving to make a constructive contribution to the East-West dialogue. The statement by the USSR's Embassy in Bonn dated December 27, 1985 confirmed by the Soviet side views these moves as a practical step in drawing West Germany into the realization of the U.S. plans to develop space strike arms.

The USSR is interested, as before, in holding a Soviet-U.S. summit meeting to continue efforts started at the Geneva summit, the representative of the USSR Ministry of Foreign Affairs stressed. Certainly, we cannot disregard the U.S. actions on the international scene before the upcoming summit.

WARSAW PACT, NATO PLANNING GROUP MEETINGS CONTRASTED

LD212040 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1600 GMT 21 Mar 86

[Viktor Levin commentary]

[Excerpts] The press in socialist countries has devoted considerable attention to the results of the session of the Committee of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Warsaw Pact member states which took place in the Polish capital on 19-20 March. Here is a latest news commentary: At the microphone is Viktor Levin:

Unity of views and unity of actions: This is how the results of the work of the Committee of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of fraternal states can be fully justified. There is this unity of views on the modern international situation, which remains tense and dangerous, but besides this, thanks to the energetic and purposeful actions of the socialist states, a real hope for changes for the better is provided. The unity of action is aimed at implementing the opportunities which have opened up for solving the most urgent, cardinal task of modern times: the elimination of the threat of nuclear war; the ending of the arms race, above all the nuclear arms race; and a further movement toward disarmament. Assertions are being stubbornly spread by the fuling circles of the United States and its closest partners, who blindly follow the policy of Washington, that the cause of the tension allegedly lies not in the arms race, but in a lack of trust. If, so they say, countries and people trusted each other, then there would be no arms race. But trust is formed not by what is said but by what is done. You can't build it with the most ardent speeches or the most high-flown rhetoric Practical actions are needed.

The socialist states are not only prepared for this, they are also carrying out such actions in practice. The most vivid and convincing example is the position of the Soviet Union, unanimously supported by other fraternal countries, on the question of ending nuclear tests.

Unfortunately it has to be stated that this kind of readiness does not exist across the ocean. At the session, concluded today, of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group, assistant to the U.S. Secretary of Defense, Wagner, stated that the continuation of nulcear tests has a decisive significance for the United States. British Defense Secretary Younger here took up this assertion and reported London's intention also to continue nuclear tests. What is this? A contribution to building trust? Of course not! We can see perfectly that talk of the pre-eminence of trust is intended to try to justify military preparations.

In the current complex international situation the constant strengthening of the one unity and cohesion of the Warsaw Pact member states has a particular significance. The fraternal countries have decided to continue to interact closely in international affairs and in the elaboration and inplementation of an agreed policy of peace, security and international cooperation.

U.S. SENATE VOTES AID FOR NICARAGUAN CONTRAS

Senators Issue Warnings

LD280358 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0327 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, 28 March (TASS) -- After an intense and lengthy debate, the Senate of the U.S. Congress has supported by a 6-vote majority the provision of additional aid to the Nicaraguan hirelings. As Senator Exon warned, the United States is thus embarking on a "dangerous path." Another eminent Democratic senator, Leahy, assessed this as "a major step toward direct participation in the war in Central America." The outcome of the Senate vote was influenced by unprecedented pressure on the part of the administration, which over the past days has staged a crude propaganda frame-up over a supposed invasion of Honduran territory by the Armed Forces of Nicaragua.

House 'Battle' Next

LD280907 Moscow TASS in English 0823 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 28 TASS -- TASS correspondent Igor Ignatyev reports:

The U.S. Senate gave the "green light" to continuing the undeclared war against Nicaragua, waged by the United States with the hands of its mercenaries. The upper chamber of the U.S. Congress voted 53 to 47 to approve in a somewhat smoothed form the White House's request for releasing new millions of dollars to the contras to continue violence and bloody terror against the Nicaraguan people.

The plan would immediately provide 25 million dollars in aid to the counter-revolutionary gangs, including the shipment of antiaircraft missiles. The remaining 75 million dollars of the aid package will start to be channelled in a lapse of 90 days.

It was clear from the outset that the Senate, which is controlled by the ruling Republican Party, would approve the request for extra aid to the contras. Nonetheless, the White House did not bring down its pressure on the lawmakers up to the last moment. John Poindexter, assistant to the President for national security affairs, arrived in the Capitol virtually several hours before the opening of the debates and set out to condition the leaders of the Democratic faction. However, the course of the debates and, which is the main thing, a slim vote margin, show that the administration's aggressive policy towards Nicaragua does not enjoy "monolithic support" even in the Senate.

Senator Patrick Leahy warned during the debates that the case in point is not just aid to the contras, but whether the United States should take a major step towards direct involvement in a war in Central America. He said that the move to authorize the administration's request is antamount to an approval of sending U.S. military advisers to train contras.

Political observers indicate that the fight which broke out on the Capitol Hill over the request for direct military aid to the contras is far from being completed. The President is in for a new battle in the House of Representatives which rejected the administration's request a week ago, the CNN television network said.

FURTHER REPORTS ON U.S. MANEUVERS NEAR LIBYA

Pre-Planned Attack

PM271655 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 27 Mar 86 First Edition P 5 ($f1)

[Report by own correspondent V. Gan under the general headline: "Brazen Provocation. Widespread International Condemnation of the U.S. Aggressive Act off the Libyan Coast"]

[Text] Washington -- The continuing aggression against Libya was planned long ago by Washington, which wants to "teach a lesson" to independndent states who reject U.S. "recipes" for their foreign and domestic political development.

It has now become known here that the Reagan administration had the idea for the bandit attack on Libya last July. The president had a secret conference with his foreign policy allies in the CIA, State Department, and Pentagon at which it was decided to take "strong measures" against the Al-Qadhdhafi government which is vexing Washington by its refusal to yield to U.S. diktat. According to a report in THE WASHINGTON POST, there was even talk of surprise "military strikes against Libya in collaboration with U.S. allies in the Near East."

But, for reasons known only to the administration, the United States refrained, although the aim remains the same to "redraw the map of North Africa." In accordance with this aim, interdepartmental groups elaborated detailed plans of targets for destruction and outlined the "propaganda backup" for future actions and measures to "neutralize" international protests. The work on hatching sinister plans against Libya was headed by J. Poindexter, now assistant to the President for national security affairs, who had already become a joad hand planning the gunning down of Grenada.

At the same time, President Reagan approved a CIA plan envisaging the physical elimination of Al-Qadhdhafi and the destabilization of his regime. It was only an accidental leak of information on the plot to the press that prevented Washington from carrying out this sinister scenario.

The actions by international terrorists at Rome and Vienna airports last December were seen on the Potomac as "convenient grounds." although the Tripoli government rejected all the fantasies about Libyan "involvement."

The recent bombardment of Libyan territory and the attack on its peaceful ships were the direct result of the latest secret plan, "prairie fire," approved by the White House on 14 March. According to the press, it envisages the actual destruction of Libya's main military and economic facilities and the total subjection of the country to U.S. will...

So U.S. imperialism is adding new chapters to the history of its crimes against mankind. So the people on the Potomac are trying at all costs to buttress their aspirations to "all-American supremacy," which have already caused suffering and claimed the blood of innocent victims.

End of Maneuvers

LD271557 Moscow TASS in English 1541 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 27 TASS -- The Pentagon today announced an end to its naval maneuvers off Libyan shores, which were to last till April 1.

Washington conceived those provocative war games as a kind of "punitive operation" against the Libyan Government which has for long been the target of threats and a vicious smear campaign on the part of the United States.

During the large-scale provocation U.S. warships as well as U.S. aircraft which intruded into Libyan air space over the Gulf of Sidra striked at a number of Libyan facilities.

The bandit-style acts of international terrorism touched off a storm of worldwide indignation and were summed up as a challenge to all world public opinion and an outrage upon generally recognized civilized relations.

The U.S. military's piratic actions against Libya were strongly condemned by public personalities and politicians in many countries, including the United States itself. They pointed out that this policy by Washington provokes regional conflicts and jeopardises international peace and security and that it is directed against all independent nations and contradicts the interests of the American people themselves.

Withdrawal Offer Rejected

LD272021 Moscow in English to Great Britain and Ireland 2000 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] The American Department of State has rejected the Soviet proposal for withdrawing the American and Soviet naval forces from the Mediterranean. The haste with which the reply was made suggests that the Soviet initiative has not been even considered. Such an approach to Soviet peace initiatives has become typical of Washington. The American Administration has answered with more nuclear explosions to the Soviet call for joining its moratorium on nuclear testing. In January, the Soviet Union advanced a sweeping program for eliminating nuclear and chemical weapons step by step. It has been supported by many countries except for the United States and its closest allies.

Libya Supports Offer

LD281101 Moscow TASS in English 1017 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Tripoli March 28 TASS -- Libya has stated support for the proposal made by Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, on simultaneous withdrawal of the American and Soviet fleets from the Mediterranean. A statement of the People's Bureau for External Relations of Libya, which has been distributed by the JANA NEWS AGENCY, says that the proposal fully accords with the striving of the Mediterranean states to make a region a zone of peace, security, cooperation and progress. Approving the Soviet leader's proposal, the Libyan Jamahiriyah calls upon all Mediterranean countries to support this significant initiative and exert every efforts towards its materialization.

Task Force May Return

LD280726 Moscow TASS in English 0720 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 28 TASS -- U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger has stated that the U.S. Sixth Fleet ships "will return if necessary" to the Gulf of Sidra, the UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL reported today.

The Pentagon chief maintained that the U.S. naval exercises in the area of the Gulf of Sidra became a "successful operation". However, the entire progressive mankind thinks otherwise: U.S. ships fired on the Libyan Jamahiriyah's boats and positions, which is an act of international banditry.

Although Weinberger said to U.S. pressmen that the exercises were fully terminated earlier than planned, he hurried to emphasise that the U.S. fleet might return to the Gulf of Sidra at any moment.

U.S. PRESIDENT ADVOCATES FURTHER DEFENSE BUILDUP

LD280802 Moscow TASS in English 0745 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 28 TASS -- "Peace through strength is a fact of life", said President Reagan in his overtly militaristic statement.

The President's speech in New Ocelans, Louisiana, on Thursday, show how in practice the United States is trying to materialize this very dangerous concept. The President in actual fact advocated further build-up of the military muscles of America, asserting that this is allegedly the "leverage" for negotiations on control over armaments. Without such a "leverage", one cannot conduct serious negotiations, said the head of the White House.

Reagan's pronouncements reaffirmed that the United States intends to speed up the development and establishment of a large-scale anti-missile defence system with space-based elements, the star wars system which Reagan tried to depict as an anti-missile defence shield, contrary to the well-known facts and admissions of his own advisers.

The President reaffirmed that the U.S. Administration intended to resolve problems of the situation in Central America only from the position of strength. It is this concept that underlies Washington's policy towards sovereign Nicaragua. Having again piled up heaps of lies against Nicaragua, Reagan demanded congressional early approval of the administration's request of another 100 million dollars in military aid to terrorist contras gangs.

WEINBERGER STATEMENTS 'PRIMITIVE, FALSE'

LD271553 Moscow TASS in English 1531 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 27 TASS -- TASS military news analyst Vladimir Bogachev writes:

Willingness deliberately to distort the truth in pursuit of one's goals is an aspect of the politics of most presidents, a NEW YORK TIMES analyst observed recently. He also noted with regret that current administration leaders were not criticised in the United States when they told lies.

This lenience towards deliberate misrepresentation of facts in the USA obviously encourages White House officials, who have lately been butchering facts without even going to the trouble of inventing something at least remotely resembling the truth.

For instance, Defense Secretary Weinberger decided again at a recent press conference on the occasion of the publication of the fifth propaganda booklet "Soviet Military Power" to try to justify the need for increasing the Pentagon's budget by the growing military threat posed by the USSR.

But this time he did that exercise expecially clumsily, without straining his mental capacities in any way. Weinberger merely listed the more glaring actions commited by Washington against peace and imputed them -- to the Soviet Union.

A Colin Gray said in the U.S. journal FOREIGN AFFAIRS that the USA could win a nuclear war. The Reagan administration exulted over a "public substantiation" of its own MAD concept and appointed Gray an adviser on disarmament (sic) to the U.S. President. Now Weinberger claims that it is the Soviet Union rather than the United States that thinks it possible to fight a nuclear war and win it.

The Reagan administration has long announced the SALT II treaty, to be "fatally flawed" and more than once violated its stipulations. The Pentagon makes no secret, for instance, that the United States is now developing two new inter-continental ballistic missiles, the MX and the Midgetman, which is an outright violation of the 1979 Soviet-American treaty, which has not been ratified by Washington. Weinberger, who recently called the SALT II accord a pseudo arms control agreement, blamed the Soviet Union at the press conference for the selfsame violations which the United States is committing openly.

According to Weinberger, it is not the United States but the Soviet Union that is working to deploy new, binary chemical weapons and to introduce thousands of strike weapons in outer space. It appears that the Pentagon chief himself advocates an accord on arms reduction with the Soviet Union. There is a snag, however: he believes that the only dependable path to that goal is the continuation of the U.S. nuclear arms program.

The Pentagon chief ought to be credited, however, with refraining at the press conference from holding the Soviet Union responsible for a nuclear weapon test at the American testing site in Nevada. As regards all the other matters, the statements of the U.S. defense secretary were as primitive and false as the Pentagon's booklet "Soviet Military Power," which he launched at that press conference.

U.S. CONGRESSMAN MET BY ZAGLADIN ON ARRIVAL

MEETING CELEBRATES CENTENARY OF PRC's DONG BIWU

LD261811 Moscow TASS in English 2221 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 24 TASS -- A function was held in the Peoples' Friendship House today to mark the birth centenary of Dong Biwu, China's prominent party and state leader.

Speakers at the meeting noted that Dong Biwu had been one of the founders of the Chinese Communist Party, attended the first congress of the Chinese Communist Party. In the period of the national liberation war of the Chinese people he strove for the consolidation of the united national anti-Japanese front. After the victory of the revolution in China, he was elected member of the Standing Committee of the Politbureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, member of the Central People's Governmental Council of the Chinese People's Republic, deputy chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. Dong Biwu declared for the development and strengthening of ties with the Soviet Union, was one of the founders of the Chinese-Soviet Friendship Society.

Members of the board and activists of the society, representatives of Moscow's public, as well as Ambassador of the Chinese People's Republic to the USSR Li Zewang and the embassy's officials were present at the function.

COMMENTATOR DISCUSSES EXPANSION OF JAPANESE TIES

LD271018 Moscow World Service in English 1531 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Nikolay Georgiyev commentary]

[Excerpts] The 27th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party held in Moscow recently called for jointly searching for the ways to resolve painful problems in Asia politically. The concrete ways to strengthen security in Asia can be different. The promotion of bilateral neighborly relations can play a great role. Take Japanese-Soviet ties. They have always exerted considerable influence on the state of affairs in Asia. Normal relations serve as a factor for stability, and when they aggravated [as heard] tensions intensified locally. Life has shown that the development of Soviet-Japanese ties on the basis of neighborliness, trust and mutually beneficial cooperation is in the interests of the two countries and serves the goal of ensuring security in Asia as a whole.

Particular attention should be paid to promoting trust. Measures aimed at strengthening trust between countries belong to the foundations of international security. In the meantime it is evident that the level of trust between Japan and the USSR leaves much to be desired. This is due primarily to the war threat growing in the Asia-Pacific region, an area the United States seeks to destabilize more and more. Washington's attempts to secure for itself military dominance in the region, to surround the eastern part of Soviet territory by its nuclear and conventional weapons, lead solely to intensifying the arms race in Asia. And this does not enhance security either for the USSR or for the United States, not to mention other countries such as Japan.

Besides, trust in relations between Japan and the Soviet Union is undermined by the propagandistic references to the so-called Soviet threat practiced in Japan. Though these references are absolutely unfounded they seriously poison the atmosphere in bilateral relations. It would be much better to discuss mutual anxieties and suspicions at the negotiating table. The negotiating table is an ideal place for resolving all international problems. Confidence between countries is strengthened not by guns and missiles but by constructive political decisions based on the good will of both sides.

The Japanese Constitution itself, with its renunciation of wars and armaments, advocates this approach. We can only regret that certain forces stubbornly push Japan along the path of arms buildup, on the pretext of the mythical Soviet threat. In the meantime everyone knows that Japan's militarization generates distrust in many Asian countries. That is why we believe that the road to peace lies primarily through strengthening confidence between neighbor nations. Much has already been done in this direction. An important role was played by a visit to Japan paid last January by the Soviet foreign minister, Eduard Shevardnadze. The Soviet Union is in favor of expanding such a dialogue and gaining accord on the issues of mutual interest. The joint communique on the outcome of the Soviet-Japanese talks held in January indicates that there are many points of contact between our two countries, and further dialogue should be based on them and not on the problems that divide us for one reason or another.

The Soviet Union and Japan are neighbors and this fact can't be abrogated. It imposes a high responsibility. Neighbors should search for the ways to establish good relations regardless of differences in their outlook. The common interest in strengthening peace and stability in Asia and in the world at large mentioned in the joint Soviet-Japanese communique also calls for this. The question of confidence-building measures in the political and military scenes in the Far East should be a topic of discussion in the Soviet-Japanese dialogue.

As many as 5 years have passed since the Soviet Union suggested to Japan to discuss this issue. Had hte Soviet proposal met with a constructive reply the situation in Asia today would undoubtedly have been much more favorable. It's appropriate to refer to this now when Japan voices scepticism in regard to the Soviet concept of Asian security. It attributes to the Soviet Union now the intention to resolve its problems at the expense of other countries, now the (attempts) to drive a wedge in Japanese-American relations. Such charges are a typical example of how mistrust creates obstacles on the path of strengthening peace in Asia. They also show that Japan has a misconception of the Soviet foreign policy. The highest wisdom is not in taking care only of one's own interests particularly to the detriment of the other side. It's essential for all to feel equally secure, said the political report to the recent party congress in Moscow, a document outlining the basic principles of the Soviet foreign policy.

It's desirable for all responsible politicians in the world to grasp this truth, to make it possible to start without delay, to resolve pressing Asian and world problems in order to spare themselves regrets over missed opportunities in the future.

ANNIVERSARY OF USSR-DPRK ACCORD MARKED

SK230017 Moscow International Service in Korean 1130 GMT 15 Mar 86

[Text] [Beginning portion not recorded; recording, in Korean, in progress]... To the people of Korea and the Soviet Union, this year, which marks the 37th anniversary of the signing of the agreement on economic and cultural cooperation, is significant.

The 27th CPSU Congress held recently was a successful one. The congress, which confirmed the party's strategic policy presented at the plenary meeting of the party in April last year for the promotion of socioeconomic development, we indeed held in the midst of a renovative and creative atmosphere. It has also opened a path of epochal change for the development of Soviet society.

The Korean people rejoice over the fact that the Soviet people have risen with one mind on a single path of struggle for the consummation of socialism by rallying firmly around the CPSU led by Comrade Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, with a firm confidence in the future and firm (?faith). They are also convinced that the Soviet people will achieve great advancement and success in their struggle to implement the decision adopted at the 27th CPSU Congress. [end recording]

In his speech, [DPRK Ambassador to USSR] Comrade Kwon Hui-kyong stressed that the role played by the Soviet Union's peace proposals in today's complicated international situation and in the struggle for world peace is (?indescribably great). The ambassador said: We fully support the peace proposals advanced by the Soviet Union at the Soviet-U.S. summit meeting, in Comrade Gorbachev's 15 January statement, and at the 27th CPSU Congress.

He continued by talking about the new proposals advanced by the DPRK aimed at returning the situation on the Korean peninsula and the situation in this region [as heard] to a normal condition. He then thanked the CPSU and Soviet Government for their full support for these proposals.

[Begin recording] The great leader Comrade Kim Il-song has taught: The Korean people and Soviet people are class brothers and close comrades-in-arms who have fought together for a long time for their common ideals and goals. Korean-Soviet friendship is based not only on solid class alliance relations and comradely friendship, but also has deep historical roots. The traditional friendly and cooperative relations between Korea and the Soviet Union have been developing more actively since the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song made a visit to the Soviet Union in May 1984.

Mutual visits of high-level (?officials), such as the visit to Korea by a Soviet party and government delegation led by Geydar Aliyev, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first vice premier; a visit to our country by Comrade Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and Soviet foreign minister; and visits to the Soviet Union by the premier of the State Administration Council and the foreign minister of the DPRK were made during last year and this year. Such mutual visits have made a great contribution to further consolidating the class alliance relations between our two fraternal countries and to expanding and developing cooperation in various fields.

Korean-Soviet economic and trade relations are expanding with each passing day. An agreement on long-term economic cooperation for the period 1986-90 and another agreement on [word indistinct] have recently been signed. The substance of the cooperation between the two countries in the economic, scientific, and technological fields is becoming richer with each passing day. Mutual exchanges and contacts are expanding in all fields, such as science, technology, education, public health, and sports, and the ties between the two countries' public organizations and the writers' leagues are further deepening.

We are satisfied at the fact that mutual cooperation and exchange are being briskly achieved in the political, economic, and cultural fields in accordance with the spirit of the Korean-Soviet agreement on economic and cultural cooperation. The Korean people, who value Korean-Soviet friendship, will make every effort possible to further expand and deepen the friendly and cooperative relations with the Soviet people in all fields. [end recording]

NAGASAKI MAYOR STATES 'INDIGNATION' AT U.S. TEST

LD240755 Moscow TASS in English 0706 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Tokyo March 24 TASS -- Mayor of Nagasaki Hitoshi Motoshima and the Municipal Council of that Japanese city that had lived through the horrors of the American atomic bombing forty years ago addressed a message to the Reagan administration, expressing indignation at the nuclear blast staged by the United States in Nevada.

The message says, in part: Nuclear tests carried out in Nevada during the international year of peace are at a basic variance with the striving of nations for nuclear disarmament. The residents of Nagasaki strongly demand the termination of all nuclear blasts and the beginning of disarmament talks with the Soviet Union.

DEMICHEV DEPARTS DELHI, ARRIVES IN MOSCOW

PM251150 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 22 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 4

[TASS report: "Departure From Delhi"]

[Text] Delhi, 21 Mar -- The CPSU delegation headed by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo, has left Delhi for Moscow. The delegation comprised V.P. Anishchev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and second secretary of the Uzbek Communist Party Central Committee; and P.V. Kutsobin, chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Section. The delegation participated in the work of the 13th Communist Party of India Congress, held in the city of Patna (Bihar State) 12-17 March.

During the subsequent official visit to the city of Delhi a Soviet-Indian intergovernmental agreement on holding in 1987-88 a Soviet festival in India marking the 70th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution and an Indian festival in the USSR marking the 40th anniversary of Indian independence was signed. P.N. Demichev met with R. Gandhi, Indian prime minister; R. Venkataraman, vice president; B.R. Bhagat, external affairs minister; P.V. Narasimha Rao, minister of manpower resources and home affairs; and G. Parthasarathy, chairman of the Indian External Affiars Policy Planning Department.

The delegation was seen off at Delhi's Indira Gandhi International Airport by P.V. Narasimha Rao and other officials. V.N. Rykov, Soviet Ambassador to India, was among the send-off party. At the airport in Moscow the delegation was met by N.V. Talyzin, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and first deputy chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers; and I.I. Kovalenko, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Section. S. Nurul Hasan, Indian ambassador to the USSR, was among the reception party.

Delhi Press Conference

PM251106 Moscow SOVETSKAYA KULTURA in Russian 20 Mar 86 p 2

[Excerpt] A press conference given in Delhi by P.N. Demichev, candidate member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and USSR minister of culture who is on an official visit to India, was devoted to questions concerning the further development and strengthening of Soviet-Indian cooperation in the sphere of culture and art.

Touching on the signing of the Soviet-Indian intergovernmental agreement on the holding of a USSR festival in India and an Indian festival in the USSR in 1987-88, P.N. Demichev noted that they will be devoted to the 70th anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution and the 40th anniversary of India's independence. The festivals are planned to run for 1 year. They will include the most diverse events, including events in the spheres of culture, art, science, and sports. The USSR has experience in holding major events in the sphere of cultural exchange, but this will be the first time such comprehensive festivals will be organized, the minister said. We are pleased that these comprehensive events will be held jointly with India, with which our country is linked by long-established ties in the sphere of culture and art.

Soviet-Indian ties in this sphere, the minister pointed out, have developed along an ascending line in the 25 years since the signing of the USSR-Indian agreement on cultural and scientific cooperation, and have been crowned with sound results. Famous collectives of Soviet masters of art and individual solo artists have toured India in the past. We are actively exchanging different exhibitions. Wonderful dance, music, and other collectives from India have toured our country.

The experience accumulated in cultural exchanges will now make it possible to move on to larger comprehensive events like the festivals. During my meeting with Prime Minister R. Gandhi, we discussed the question of holding them and he expressed very ardent support for the idea. We are convinced that the festivals will help the further strengthening and expansion of ties between the Soviet and Indian peoples and between our countries not just in the sphere of culture and art but also in many other spheres. Our peoples will be able to acquire better knowledge of each other's culture, science, traditions, and character.

We expect assistance in this important work from both countries' mass news media, the minister said. The Soviet Union and India advocate that information be objective and truthful, help bring peoples closer together instead of dividing them, and not help the fanning of hatred but the struggle for peace, against the threat of war, for the easing of international tension. In this respect we can cooperate very well, since the two countries' policies in the sphere of international relations coincide in many respects.

We are confident that the main slogan of the USSR and India festivals will be the struggle for peace, for disarmament, against the military threat, and for the development of cooperation between all peoples, P.N. Demichev emphasized in conclusion.

U.S. 'DIKTAT' ON TRADE, RELATIONS WITH INDIA VIEWED

PM261517 Moscow SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA in Russian 23 Mar 86 p 3

[International observer M. Nepesov article "Pressure Misfires"]

[Text] To whom it is not clear now that trade and economic cooperation between states can be successful only if a number of indispensable conditions are observed? Such as, for example, equal rights and noninterference in the other side's internal affairs. Conversely, diktat and imposing one's own views and demands on the partner or partners will hardly lead to positive results.

The correctness of these generally well-known and incontestable truths recently received graphic confirmation at the talks in Delhi between representatives of Indian and U.S. business and scientific circles. In particular, addressing a session of the Indian-American Joint Council for Business Ties, Romesh Bhandari, secretary for external affa affairs at the Indian External Affairs Ministry, declared that the measures on which the United States was insisting do not accord at all with his country's national interests.

A quite harsh and unambiguous statement, as we see. But what provoked it is a different question. India is a great country which has secured considerable achievements in its economy, science, and culture since its liberation from the colonial yoke. It has now begun, like many other countries, incidentally, implementing an extensive modernization program in various spheres of its national life, including computerization and the use of robots. India would like, in particular, to acquire certain types of electronic equipment from the United Sates. Particularly as many firms, including such a well-known company as ITT, have expressed readiness to sell electronic equipment to India.

But then the Pentagon intervened in the matter. With imperial arrogance its "brass hats" demanded that Delhi sign a special document called "Agreement to Keep Military Information Secret." However, there are points in it which provide for American military personnel to conduct the on-site inspection of installations where equipment purchases from the United States would be used. This is nothing but direct infringement of national sovereignty. Of course, as an independent state, India could not consent to such an "agreement" and resolutely rejected it.

As has been learned from official sources, India declared that it plans neither to purchase nor to produce anything under American licenses. An eminent Indian diplomat, who recently visited Washington, said: "Why does the United States want us to sign an agreement, not military information."

There is also another quite significant aspect to the Indian rebuke to the lovers of diktat in international relations on the other side of the ocean. As THE INDIAN EXPRESS pointed out, "Certain spokesmen for the Reagan administration openly characterize the aim of Washington's present policy toward Indian as an attempt to 'alienate' it from the Soviet Union." Here I would like to cite another very eloquent quotation from that newspaper: "Are the Americans really still so naive," THE INDIAN EXPRESS asks, "as to believe that providing Indian with computer equipment, the majority of which it can obtain from other sources, will undermine its strong friendship with the Soviet Union? The United States will never be able to do as much for relations with India as the Soviet Union has done. And the fact is that India does not intend to pay a political price for American friendship."

I would like to emphasize in this connection that it was pointed out at the 27th CPSU Congress that the Soviet Union will continue to develop cooperation with Asian, African, and Latin American countries. Our multifaceted aid to those states helps to shape and develop their national economies, overcome the colonial legacy, and advance along the path of economic and social progress. The USSR has established stable, long-term ties with many of them, as, for example, with India and a number of other states. They are becoming increasingly mutually advantageous.

And we want this fruitful process to continue on the basis of full equality and non-interference in each other's internal affairs, with observance of the most-favored-nation status. Sooner or later these principles must without fail triumph in trade and economic relations among all states on the planet.

U.S. TURNING PAKISTAN INTO 'PENTAGON BRIDGEHEAD'

LD261047 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 0330 GMT 26 Mar 86

[From the "International Diary" program, presented by Nikolay Agayants]

[Text] U.S.-Pakistani talks have ended in Islamabad as a result of which the U.S. Government will supply to the regime of Ziaul-Haq over $4 billion of aid, primarily for military needs. I would remind you, comrades, that in 1981 a similar agreement was already concluded for a sum of $3.2 billion, after which Washington began carrying out wide-scale supplies to Pakistan of the most modern military equipment that included artillery; tanks; and aircraft, including 40 F-16 fighter-bombers capable of carrying nuclear weapons. And now, as we see, the story is continuing. The United States is now supplying its loyal ally on the India subcontinent with the latest types of arms, on a scale which exceeds its defense interests, with the aim of turning this country into a tool of its hegemonist policies in southwest Asia and into a Pentagon bridgehead. The militarization of Pakistan is just a link in the general chain of global military preparations by the United States. This is done by various methods: in some countries the Pentagon sets up its bases, and in others -- as, say, in long suffering Grenada -- they do not stop short of intervention, or of occupation.

AFGHAN TRADE UNION DELEGATION BEGINS VISIT

PM251115 Moscow TRUD in Russian 20 Mar 86 p 3

[Text] A delegation from the Central Council of Trade Unions of Afghanistan headed by (Abdul Bashir), chief of the Central Council of Trade Unions of Afghanistan Propaganda and Education Section, is in the USSR at the invitation of the AUCCTU. The Afghan guests will familiarize themselves with the Soviet trade unions' experience of educational work and with the practice of organizing working people's leisure and involving them in amateur creative activity and sports activities.

Yesterday the Afghan delegation was received at the AUCCTU Mass Cultural and International Sections and the TRUD editorial office.

On the same day a press conference was held for Soviet journalists at which the delegation members described the Afghan people's courageous struggle against domestic and foreign counterrevolution, which relies on the support of international imperialism headed by the United States, and the profound sociodemocratic transformations in the country.

DRA PROTESTS FRG BUNDESTAG HEARINGS

LD272036 Moscow TASS in English 2014 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Kabul March 27 TASS -- The West German charge d'affaires ad interim in the democratic republic of Afghanistan was summoned to the Afghan Foreign Ministry where he was handed a note of protest, BAKHTAR news agency reported.

The note said that despite repeated warnings by Afghan authorities about the inadmissibility of hostile and subversive activities against this country, there have taken place so-called hearings on the Agfhan issue in the Bundestag.

The propaganda show was staged on the initiative of right-wing political circles in West Germany.

Afghan counter-revolutionaries were given the right to take part as "experts" and the Pakistani ambassador in West Germany was also given the possibility to speak there and make slanderous allegations in respect of Afghanistan.

Following a hostile course with regard to Afghanistan, Bonn, the note said, sails in the wake of U.S. aggressive policy. This has been borne out by the statement made at the "hearings" by Hans-Dietrich Genscher, a deputy federal chancellor and foreign minister of the Federal Republic of Germany, and the illegal penetration into Afghan territory by West German MP Volker Neumann.

The Afghan Foreign Ministry, the note said, expresses a strong protest against the subversive and hostile actions by the West German authorities and views tham as gross interference in the home affairs of this country. The note demanded that the West German Government immediately discontinue such interference which only exacerbates relations between the two countries even further.

AQUINO PLANS MOVES TO CONSOLIDATE POWER

Revolutionary Government Seen

LD220012 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1955 GMT 21 Mar 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Igor Fesunenko]

[Text] Aquino, the new president of the Philippines, is consolidating her power. She announced today that she intends to dissolve parliament at a future date, and, as she said, form a revolutionary government. It is still not clear when this will be done. The U.S. military authorities are in a hurry to consolidate their hold on their bases in the Philippines, Clark Field and Subic Bay. Meeting with mass protest actions there by Filipino workers who began on 18 March to picket these bases, the U.S. military command, demonstrating an altogether unusual flexibility in this department, suddenly agreed to accept the conditions the new collective labor agreement proposed by the Filipino workers' trade union. This agreement envisions improvement of working conditions, an increase in wages and social benefits paid to Filipino workers whose interests were previously always very strongly infringed upon by the Americans.

Parliament Dissolved

LD262247 Moscow TASS in English 1646 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Manila March 25 TASS -- TASS correspondent Sergey Almazov reports:

President Corazon Aquino of the Philippines today declared an interim Constitution and the dissolution of the National Assembly. The Constitution was signed in a ceremony at Malacanang Palace at the presence of all members of the government and the Philippine military command. The head of state said that the interim Constitution would be in effect until the draft of a permanent constitution is worked out and endorsed. A special commission would be named to draft within 90 days a new constitution which would later be put to a nationwide debate.

Under the provisions of the interim constitution, the parliamentary elections can be held during the transititional period. At the same time, it is up to the president to decide on the terms for the holding of elections to the local government bodies, who will wield exclusive executive and legislative powers during this period, including the right to make appointments to all state posts. The country will be governed by issuing presidential decrees.

FILIPINOS AT SUBIC BAY, CLARK FIELD ON STRIKE

LD231138 Moscow TASS in English 1113 GMT 23 Mar 86

[Text] Manila March 23 TASS -- The strike by Philippine personnel at the American naval base in Subic Bay has spread to the U.S. air base of Clark Field. The strikers set up barricades near entrances to the U.S. largest overseas bases that employ about 2,000 Filipinos. Clashes with American servicemen were reported. According to a correspondent of the American NBC television network, at least 12 people were injured.

AQUINO'S GOVERNMENT FACES 'CERTAIN DIFFICULTIES'

PM211549 Moscow IZVESTIYA in Russian 21 Mar 86 Morning Edition p 5

[Report by own correspondent I. Kovalev: "A Difficult Start"]

[Text] Manila -- Approximately 1 month has elspsed since the change of power in the Philippines. What is the situation now?

A considerable proportion of the big and middle bourgeoisie, the most influential circles of the army and the police, and the Roman Catholic Church are in favor of the new regime. At the same time, from the very outset President Corazon Aquino's government has come up against certain difficulties.

There are a multitude of problems. At present the only thing more or less obvious is that a minimum of 3 months will be required to work out a new (or revise the old) constitution, while elections to local organs of power will be held no earlier than November. The situation is being aggravated by frictions within the parties incorporated in C. Aquino's coalition. The trade unions, demanding an improvement in working conditions, have become more active. Workers and employees in communications establishments and the paper industry and miners are on strike.

The top Army leadership crossed over to C. Aquino's camp at the critical moment, which largely contributed to F. Marcos' overthrow. However, in some military districts the command is continuing armed operations in violation of the course proclaimed by C. Aquino aimed at reconciliation with the rebel movement that has seized a number of the country's regions in recent years.

All these events are unfolding against a background of continuing pressure from the United States, Japan, and other imperialist states which are declaring their intention of "assisting" the new government. However, the advice of these "helpers" amounts to attempts to channel the domestic economic, foreign economic, and foreign policy activities of the new Philippine authorities into unquestioning subordination to the international banks, multinational monopolies, and U.S. global strategic interests.

'KHMER REACTIONARY' PROPOSALS ON CAMBODIA REFUTED

PM241254 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 22 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Boris Barakhta "Commentator's Column:" "Futile Venture"]

[Text] The leaders of three Khmer reactionary groupings have put forward proposals in Beijing for settling the "Cambodian problem." This action has been rightly seen as an attempt at crude interference in the sovereign PRK's internal affairs with the aim of foisting on it an antipeople regime in the guise of a "quadripartite coalition government."

The appearance of these provocative proposals, allegedly dictated by a desire for "national unity and reconciliation," is no accident. The counterrevolution, which has been expelled from the country, is trying to grab power once more in the disguise of a "coalition government," which represents no one. In its organizers' minds this backstage maneuvering using these "proposals" is aimed at saving the political specter of "democratic Cambodia" from final rout and collapse and at securing the Pol Pot followers' return to the country.

An irreversible process of national rebirth and building of the foundations of the new life begun from scratch is now underway in the PRK. The republic's successes both within the country and in the international arena are obvious. They are indissolubly linked with the purposeful work of the People's Revolutionary Party and the fraternal assistance from the Soviet Union, Vietnam, and other socialist community states.

Last year the Kampuchean People's Revolutionary Army destroyed more than 10 Khmer reactionary bases in the region of the Cambodian-Thai border, seized large stocks of weapons, and captured more than 10,000 bandits. The victory showed irrefutably the vitality and durability of people's power and the increased might and combat skill of its armed forces defending the people's revolutionary gains. The withdrawal of the Vietnamese volunteers, introduced into the PRK at the request of the legitimate government, is continuing, a withdrawal which, as the recent meeting of the three fraternal Indochinese states' foreign ministers noted, will be completed by 1990.

Many countries recognized the PRK Government. They include India, the prestigious leader of the Nonaligned Movement. Together with Vietnam and Laos, People's Kampuchea is pursuing a consistent, peace-loving course in the region. Its aim is to establish lasting cooperation in Southeast Asia.

It is perfectly clear that the Cambodian problem has already been resolved by the Khmer people themselves. It has been resolved definitively and irreversibly. To ignore that objective fact, to fail to see the existence of the sovereign state of the PRK, and to deny that it is the sole legitimate representative of the Cambodia people is like trying to measure the sky with a bamboo pole, as they say in Asia. But no one has managed to do that yet.

GUSTAV HUSAK ELECTED CPCZ GENERAL SECRETARY

LD280940 Moscow TASS in English 0935 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Prague March 28 TASS -- The first plenary meeting of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia Central Committee, held here, has elected the Presidium and the Secretariat of the party Central Committee. Gustav Husak was elected as general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia.

Gorbachev Congratulations

LD280938 Moscow TASS in English 0925 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 28 TASS -- Mikhail Gorbachev has cordially congratulated Gustav Husak on his being elected the general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia. The telegram by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, published here today, says, in part, that the Soviet people well know Gustav Husak's services in "cementing Soviet-Czechoslovak friendship, forging the unity and interaction of the states of the socialist community. The 17th Congress of the Communist party of Czechoslovakia confirmed the Czechoslovak Communists' determination tirelessly to see to it that this friendship and our fraternal alliance gain in strength in the interests of both countries and peoples, of the entire socialist community. The CPSU and the working people of the Soviet country will, on their part, do everything so that this be so".

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS CONGRATULATES ATANASOV

PM250945 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 23 Mar 86 Second Edition p 1

[Text] To Comrade Georgi Atanasov, chairman of the Bulgarian Council of Ministers

Esteemed Comrade Atanasov,

In connection with your election as chairman of the Bulgarian Council of Ministers, please accept our cordial congratulations and wishes for great successes in your activity in the new state post.

We are firmly confident that the fraternal friendship and all-around cooperation between the Soviet Union and Bulgaria will continue to develop for the good of the Soviet Union and Bulgaria peoples, in the interests of strengthening the unity and cohesion of the entire socialist community, and for the sake of ensuring lasting peace in the world.

[Signed] The USSR Council of Ministers

GREEKS PROTEST SHULTZ' VISIT, U.S. BASES

LD280022 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Report by correspondent Georgiy Voytsekhovskiy in Athens; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] On the eve of George Shultz' visit to Athens there was a nuclear blast in Nevada, and on the day of his arrival open aggression against Libya. That is the backdrop. The chief aim of the visit is to force Greece to give Washington a suitable assurance that the U.S. military bases will remain on Greek territory for many years to come and that the Pentagon may strengthen and modernize them.

If the U.S. secretary of state were to listen to the voice of the Greek public, he would make out a word that he possibly knows: Oxi -- no. With this word on their lips and banners, thousands of Athenians marched on the streets on the first day of George Shultz' visit: "No to the U.S. bases of death! No to nuclear weapons! No to star wars!" they chant. In the columns of demonstrators are public figures, mayors of districts in Athens, war veterans, women, young people, and members of all the antiwar organizations.

Mass numbers and pointed anti-U.S. feelings were the features of this demonstration whose participants angrily condemned Washington's policy of pushing the world into the abyss of military catastrophe. Late in the evening, the protest march ending with a meeting in Constitution Square. Those who addressed the meeting spoke of the threat to universal peace borne by the arms race and unleashed by the United States and its aggressive action against sovereign states.

The nuclear blast in Nevada, says Kostas Karalis, mayor of a district in Athens, is a challenge to the whole world. Washington is ignoring the opinion of the world public and, as we can see, is preparing for nuclear war. Nikos Panagulis, a worker from Piraeus, says that while the USSR is putting forward measures to turn the Mediterranean into a sea of peace, the United States is carrying out aggressive actions there. We demand that an end be put to the U.S. armed provocations.

Rally Held

LD272138 Moscow TASS in English 2129 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Athens March 27 TASS -- The question of U.S. bases in Greece is the central issue of the talks of U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, paying a visit here, with the Greek leaders. Athens has stated more than once its intention to rid the country of foreign bases. The status of those bases is now stipulated by a Greek-American agreement on cooperation in the economy and defence, which will expire in 1988. The United States, contrary to the wish of the overwhelming majority of the Greek population, is seeking to prolong the agreement indefinitely.

In the course of his visit, the Greek press says, the overseas guest has resorted to flagrant pressure on Greek. Exploiting the economic difficulties which are now besetting the country, he has made it clear that the USA could give a helping hand if Greece makes concessions on the question of the bases. The London FINANCIAL TIMES observes that Greece may be reimbursed with larger American capital investment and more U.S. tourists.

Shultz' visit has provoked a storm of protests in Greece. About 20,000 demonstrators gathered in front of the Greek Parliament, chanting "Down with death bases," "Hands off Libya," "No to NATO." Several thousand demonstrated in front of the American Consulate in Saloniki, the Greek second largest city. There were clashes between demonstrators and police, in which some people were wounded and arrests were made.

The events in the Gulf of Sidra showed that a grave threat is posed by American bases. They do not meet our national interests but are only needed by the USA and NATO to control the eastern Mediterranean, M. Nikolinakos, chairman of the Greek Committee for the Closure of Foreign Military Bases, said at a rally in Athens. The Greek people demand the removal of the U.S. bases from Greece and withdrawal from NATO. The visit of Shultz, A. Argiriadis, chairman of the Greek Committee for International Detente and Peace, said, is a challenge to the Greek people, who want to be masters of their country. A resolution passed by the rally stresses: Struggle against the bases is a patriotic duty of all the Greeks.

ITALY'S JOTTI ENDS VISIT, SEEN OFF BY VOSS

[Text] Moscow March 27 TASS -- Nilde Jotti, president of the Chamber of Deputies of the Italina Parliament, who stayed on an official visit in the Soviet Union at the invitation of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., left Moscow for home today. At the airport she was seen off by Avgust Voss, president of the Soviet of Nationalities of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., and other officials.

The visit was a success, Mrs. Jotti told a TASS correspondent before departure. Meetings with Soviet leaders and discussions at the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. were fruitful. I'm returning home with a sense of fulfilled duty and feel friendship and sympathies toward Soviet people. We have opportunities, Mrs. Jotti emphasized, for strengthening bonds of friendship and cooperation linking our nations.

SHISHLIN COMMENTS ON RESULTS OF FRENCH ELECTION

LD232032 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1458 GMT Mar 86

[From the "International Panorama" program presented by Nikolay Shishlin]

[Text] Hello comrades! International life is rich in events, and last week was no exception. Furthermore, all these events are uniquely vital and important, insofar as they bear the imprint of our turbulent and worrisome times. Even when we are speaking about internal events which, it would seem, are national affairs of this or that state, these too have, in general, certain international reverberations. The French National Assembly elections held last Sunday are, of course, such an event. The results of these elections are well-known: the forces in the elections; and as for the French Communists, they obtained less than 10 percent of the votes for the first time in many decades. The political axis in France has swung to the right. How do things stand with the country's foreign policy orientation; will this undergo any changes?

It is no simple matter to answer that question. But in any event, a certain nostalgia can be perceived in France for the politics of the General de Gaulle era, a policy distinguished by protection of France's national interests, and at the same time distinguished by a sincere striving toward full-blooded dialogue between East and West.

Of course, everything is hazy here for the moment -- all the more so in that it is unknown how the relations between the Socialist President Francois Mitterrand and Prime Minister Jacques Chirac -- who is the leader of the forces of the right -- will turn out.

COMPARISON OF GORBACHEV KREMLIN DINNER SPEECH

Moscow PRAVDA in Russian on 28 March carries in its First Edition on page 2 a TASS report on M.S. Gorbachev's speech at the 26 March Kremlin dinner in honor of Algerian President Bendjedid. The PRAVDA report, entitled "In a Friendly Atmosphere," has been compared to the Moscow TASS English version published in the 27 March Soviet Union DAILY REPORT, page H 3, revealing the following variations:

PRAVDA omits the first paragraph. The remainder of the item is identical to the TASS version.

REPORTAGE ON BENDJEDID MEETINGS, DEPARTURE

PRAVDA on Gorbachev Talks

PM271647 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[TASS report: "M.S. Gorbachev's Meeting with C. Bendjedid"]

[Text] M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, met with Chadli Bendjedid, secretary general of the National Liberation Front Party and president of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria, in the Kremlin 26 March. M.S. Gorbachev and C. Bendjedid evaluated highly the nature and level of relations between the two friendly countries and peoples. They expressed profound satisfaction with the atmosphere of trust, mutual understanding, and sympathy which is characteristic both of the relationship between the leaders of the two states and parties and of the entire course of the Soviet-Algerian talks.

It was confirmed that relations between the USSR and Algeria are built on the basis of both states' long-term interests and have good prospects for further all-round development. Mutual readiness was expressed to solve any problems which might arise in these relations in the manner customary between friendly countries.

The most important questions of bilateral cooperation, acute regional problems of special interest to both countries, and the general international situation which has now taken shape were discussed during the talks.

Talks Continue

[Text] Moscow March 27 TASS -- Talks were continued in the Kremlin today between Mikhail Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic, general secretary of the National Liberation Front (FLN) Party.

Chadli Bendjedid has been staying in Moscow since Tuesday on an official friendly visit at the invitation of the Central Committee of the CPSU, the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet and the Soviet Government.

Talks With Leaders

LD271625 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 1530 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Talks continued today in the Kremlin between Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, and Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Algerian People's Democratic Republic and general secretary of the FLN Party.

Those who took part in them were, on the Soviet side: Comrades Gromyko, Shevardnadze, Sokolov, Dobrynin; Comrade Katushev, member of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, and others. Members of the delegation took part on the Algerian side.

During the talks, which took place in a businesslike and friendly atmosphere, particular attention was paid by the sides to issues of bilateral Soviet-Algerian relations. Satisfication was expressed at the successful development of these relations and there was confirmation of the desire to carry on strengthening friendly Soviet-Algerian ties. The participants in the talks emphasized their profound conviction in the fact that the development and expansion of Soviet-Algerian cooperation, based on the principles of equality, mutual advantage and full respect for each other, respond to the fundamental interests of the peoples of our countries.

The sides established that in the sphere of bilateral cooperation significant positive experience has been accumulated, which has allowed its further expansion into various spheres. There was confirmation of the intention of the sides to try to achieve the further improvement of the forms and methods of this cooperation, including in such areas as the economy, trade, science, culture, education, health care, sport, and cadre training.

An accord was reached on signing a long-term program of economic, trade and scientific-technical cooperation between the Soviet Union and Algeria and other documents. Mutual conviction was expressed in the fact that this program will become a good basis for further all-round consolidation of Soviet-Algerian relations up to the start of the 21st century. There was also a continuation of an exchange of opinions on a number of topical international problems.

Discusses Cooperation

SANDINIST MILITIA REPEL REBELS INVADING FROM HONDURAS

LD271021 Moscow TASS in English 0804 GMT 25 Mar 86

[Text] Managua March 25 TASS -- Nicaragua's border guards and units of Sandinista People's Militia dealt powerful blows at Somozista groups which had invaded Nicaraguan territory from Honduras in order to attack one of the major settlements in Nicaragua.

According to Nicaragua's Defense Ministry, 115 Somozistas, among them the ringleader of one of the bands, were killed during six days of fighting in Nueva Segovia Department. A large amount of military equipment supplied to the terrorists by the CIA was seized during the operations.

Nicaraguan Army units are pursuing the counter-revolutionaries who are trying to take shelter in the hills on the boundary between Nueva Segovia and Jinotega Departments.

NICARAGUAN OFFICIAL REFUTES HONDURAS INVASION CLAIM

LD271013 Moscow TASS in English 0822 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] Managua March 27 TASS -- TASS correspondent Aleksandr Trushin reports:

Joaquin Cuadra, Nicaragua's deputy defence minister, chief of the General Staff of the Sandinist People's Army, has refuted the Reagan administration's slanderous inventions to the effect that Nicaraguan troops allegedly "invaded Honduras". Speaking to newsmen, he stressed, that contrary to the false claims of the White House, the Sandinist People's Army had not launched any attacks against the military bases of the Somozistas in Honduras and even less so "are encircled in that country's territory."

The Washington administration is crudely distorting the facts, Joaquin Cuadra said. It is not the Sandinist People's Army, which crossed the border, but a large grouping of CIA mercenaries invaded Nicaragua from Honduras early in March this year. Nearly 600 Somozista cutthroats have been encircled by Nicaraguan troops and are now trying to make their way back to Honduras. The fighting men of the Sandinist People's Army are locked in fierce fighting against the mercenaries on the outskirts of Teotacasinta populated locality and in a number of other border areas, yet all fighting is going on in Nicaragua's territory, he emphasized.

The provocative invention about a "Nicaraguan invasion of Honduras" is part of the propaganda campaign unleashed by the Reagan administration in an attempt at getting from Congress new appropriations worth millions of dollars for military aid to the Somozista mercenaries, said Jose Leon Talavera, Nicaragua's deputy foreign minister. Addressing a press conference in Managua, he said that the government of the Republic had addressed the Contadora Group with a proposal that a commission of observers be sent to the Nicaraguan-Honduran border to convince itself of Washington's false accusations.

The fresh false invention of the American authorities has once again exposed them as the main instigators of conflicts between Nicaragua and Honduras, J.L. Talavera said. The problems on the border are created by the gangs of American mercenaries, who are fleeing from the Sandinist People's Army into Honduras and instigating unrest there.

The deputy foreign minister stressed that Nicaragua will never launch an aggression against another country, and favours a peaceful settlement of the explosive situation in the region caused by U.S. military interference.

SPEECHES BY DELEGATES AT CPSU CONGRESS

Kostroma Flax Works Weaver

WA250300 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Feb 86 p 2

[Speech by Hero of Socialist Labor V.N. Pletneva, weaver at the Kostroma Flax Works imeni V.I. Lenin]

[Text] Comrade delegates! A moving impression was made on all of us by the party Central Committee Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. This document has tremendous significance. It analyzes from scrupulous party-minded standpoints the political activity of the Central Committee and reveals far-reaching prospects.

The Kostroma Communists have elected me delegate to the party congress for the fifth time. And each time I have sensed I was taking part in a great cause and felt a sense of high responsibility for all that the party intends. The policy of accelerating the country's socioeconomic development, the innovative approach to the accomplishment of impending tasks and the concern for making Soviet people's life better and preserving peace worldwide evoke profound satisfaction.

I say straightfowardly, as a worker: This is a sound, popular policy! (applause) We approve and support it wholeheartedly. We will be more persistent in strengthening the economy and bringing order to bear at home and will struggle through deeds for a life without wars and weapons. Our people rightly say: Winning in work means strengthening peace; peace and work go together.

The Political Report set the tone for a frank discussion of our problems and shortcomings. I consider this frankness and candor opportune. It is Leninist!

I would like to talk about what disturbs both myself and my work comrades. And there is much that disturbs and worries us.

Life itself is compelling us to reorganize all work substantially. This was said back in the spring, at the CPSU Central Committee April Plenum. Lest we end up among the laggards, we need to roll up our sleeves and get down to business, refer less to difficulties and display discipline and responsibility. When we try to grasp the meaning of the draft program documents, which we discussed prior to the congress all together, as they say, and which we adopted with our hearts, we see that the impending tasks are enormous. But this is what is disturbing: There has been much talk of rebuilding, but as a whole we are not as yet turning quickly enough toward an intensification of production. At every step we are still working in the style to which we were accustomed yesterday. As if someone will come and will start to rebuild our vast economy for us. But everyone needs to take a closer look at himself -- from the man in the street through the minister -- and see that a particle of the great cause depends on each of us. (applause)

The same thing goes for the strengthening of order and discipline. The measures elaborated by the party and the government in this field have the people's full approval. Much is being done to fulfill them. But we still have plenty of sloppy individuals, drunkards, and all kinds of people who are fond of living off others. It thus transpires that some people work with full equipment, others hide behind their backs and sometimes are absent altogether. They sponge and contrive to enjoy benefits from the state to an equal extent and frequently receive wages which they have not earned.

It is necessary to act more decisively, and the nationwide approval must be backed up by nationwide efforts. Then there will be order, and we shall fulfill the plans. (applause)

For my whole life I have been connected with the Kostroma Flax Works imeni V.I. Lenin. It is more than 100 years old now. Its walls have accumulated a wealth of experience of the manufacture of linen cloth. It has long been renowned in Russia and abroad. The enterprise has hundreds of excellent spinners and weavers. It would seem that with such capital it would be possible to live carefree. But the fate of our works has been increasingly disquieting in recent years. The majority of people are working conscientiously, but the works is failing to cope with the plan.

The reasons works such as ours are engendered, I am sure, is primarily the inertia of outdated thinking at various levels of production management. Of course, there is much unfinished business on our part. At the same time, however, the planning authorities are also to blame. As a rule, the enterprise is given unbalanced plans, and the essential equipment is not allocated. It is time for the Gosplan and ministry officials to come down to earth and promptly tackle the questions which arise. (applause)

An urgent problem today is the slow pace of the modernization and retooling of the enterprise. This applies particularly to the spinning process preparatory shops. The dust content of the air is greatest here, and more than half of the equipment is worn. In order to somehow salvage the situation the management of the flax works established benefits for those wishing to work here. But, figuratively speaking, wild horses could not drag people to the preparatory shops currently.

There is no way to win, comrades, by updating merely one link in the enterprise chain, as has been done in our sector. Basic production has been updated, albeit partially, but preparatory production has been neglected. I consider the direct culprit of the current situation the USSR Ministry of Light Industry, and the local leaders also. If we continue to update in this way, we will soon, I believe, have to put the lock on works such as ours. There will be no people left in the preparatory shops, and the weavers will have no yarn.

The spinning frames and looms are frequently idle owing to malfunctions. And the weavers are racking their brains over how to fulfill the plan and the high socialist pledges. Our ministry has surely no inkling of what the thousands of meters of above-plan fabric have meant for me and my friends at work. I believe that if it had such an inkling, it would not be postponing the modernization of the enterprise from 5-year plan to 5-year plan. I recently learned that it had been put off again, until 1988 now. I hope that this is the final date.

In addition, it needs to be said plainly that both science and the machine builders are greatly in arrears to the flax sector. To all intents and purposes we still do not have a highly productive loom for manufacturing household linen. The requests for new machinery for the spinning process are being satisfied only 50 percent, as a rule. And the equipment which is received largely fails to conform to the demands of the times -- it is of large size and low technical standard. It goes without saying that the flax industry has found itself in the background of technical progress. It needs to be retooled more rapidly and comprehensively. Is such a vast detachment of scientists and machine builders incapable of updating our sector?

The party puts at the center of our entire work the task of a fundamental improvement in product quality. This applies particularly to us textile workers who manufacture consumer products. Unfortunately, not all is as it should be here. Go to the "Russian Flax" store. One does not know what to look at first. This is good. Of course we all remember the recent shortage in the stores, when there was no cotton or linen. People would come to me from various cities with the everyday request: You in Kostroma surely have more flax, please send us some. There are no requests now. But one worries -- demand for our goods has fallen sharply. What is the reason? We ourselves are to blame to a large extent primarily: spinners, weavers, trimmers. We have work to do. But the fundamental problem is the quality of the raw material.

Earlier the people used to say: Flax is born twice. The first time in the field, the second time in the dew-wetting area. This is the place where the flax was strewn and soaked under the August dew. As a result the long flax fiber was obtained, and from this the soft cloth of absolutely incomparable wearing quality. Now, however, we use the former experience less and less. The modern techniques of flax cultivation are adapted to machine harvesting. After all, it was with good reason that there was the saying: Break the flax longer, there will be more fiber.

I would not want it to be thought that I am calling for a return to old-fashioned methods. But as a weaver I see that the present flax is losing its past glory. It now manifestly lacks the attributes of "northern silk". It has become coarse and lost its fibrous structure. One wonders: Where is science here? Why are the sectorial institutes not working on this problem? It would seem that they are thinking more about their theses there. This is why the technology is at a standstill, as they say. (stormy applause) So let the scientists put aside their theses for a time and tackle our common task: Create a variety of flax which is both good for the machines and which we would not be ashamed to call silk. (applause)

One watches the customer in the store and one realizes that he likes neither the texture of the cloth besides nor the colors. Who wants colorless cloth? Even the new cloth looks faded.

This is a direct reproach of the chemical industry. We obtain dyes from the Rubezhnoye Chemical Works. They are low-grade and vapid. The textile workers recall from time to time when they worked on imported dyes. So we direct the blame overseas. Only it is odd: Are our chemical workers incapable of manufacturing dyes which would be envied abroad? (applause)

Nor does the pattern always satisfy the customer. Our artists have largely departed from the Russian traditions of linen cloth design. Local specialists and the USSR Ministry of Light Industry Artistic Council also, which send the enterprises the so-called fashion trends, must not divorce themselves from demand and study it only in their salons. It is necessary to consult the people more, as Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev rightly said in the Political Report.

Generally, the flax problem demands a comprehensive approach. It would be correct, I believe, were the USSR Council of Ministers to study this question and adopt the corresponding decision.

I would like to raise one further question connected with the organization of socialist competition, in which I have been an active participant for several 5-year plans now. Thousands of pacesetters and innovators are setting labor examples. We are learning from one another and enriching ourselves.

And it important here, I believe, that what has been achieved by the frontrunners becomes the general property of all workers. At the same time I feel that not all is as it should be in its organization. I have frequently heard the spiteful question asked about the pacesetters: How have they contrived in one 5-year plan to fulfill several? It is offensive and painful to hear this. I myself fulfilled 14 annual quotas in the 11th Five-Year Plan. It did not come easily. (applause) I work on the old AT looms, I exceed the sectorial standard 230 percent, and my work time load factor constitutes 96 percent. The limit, seemingly. But no, one hears that people are fulfilling more than 25 plans. One wonders, is this possible? We know of instances of some competition organizers artificially overstating the fulfillment of output norms and working for show and of individual pacesetters being assigned auxiliary people at the time of an expansion of the service zone and the result being attributed wholly to the personal account of a single workers. This is how these staggering records are set! (applause)

And this is something for the AUCCTU, USSR State Committee for Labor and Social Problems, USSR Ministry of Light Industry and the Textile and Light Industry Trade Union Central Committee to think about.

Dear Comrades! The congress is discussing problems of vital importance to all Soviet people whose solution demands a new, creative approach. May everyone at his place of work set an example of industriousness, perseverance in reaching the goal, and modesty! May party conscience by the guarantee of the quality of all our work and accomplishments! On behalf of all light industry workers I wish to assure the CPSU Central Committee that we textile workers will not let it down! Our party may count on us! (applause)

Kazakh Tractor Driver

WA250330 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Feb 86 pp 4-5

[Speech of N.V. Gellert, tractor driver of the Sovkhoz imeni Amangeldy of the Kazakh SSR's Tselinograd Oblast]

[Text] Dear Comrades!

It was with a feeling of pride in our Communist Party and our multinational motherland that we heard the CPSU Central Committee Political Report. Each line of the report was profoundly consonant with the spirit of the times and our views, thoughts, and aspirations.

The sound, important changes in all spheres of our life and activity which began in April 1985, the program goals of an acceleration of socioeconomic development and the measures to strengthen discipline and order in everything have been warmly approved in our hearts. This policy is to our liking, and we support it entirely. (applause)

The fact that in elaborating the new paths of the accomplishment of crucial tasks of communist building the party Central Committee has constantly sought the advice of the working people and relied on their opinion and experience is particularly dear to us.

A striking example of the Leninist tradition of the party's ties to the masses and concerned and candid consultation with the people was the nationwide discussion of the program documents and also the meetings and conversations of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, with the workers, scientists, and specialists, with the virgin land grain growers on our Kazakh soil included.

The directions of the CPSU Central Committee conference held in Tselinograd on most important questions of agrarian policy have become for us rural workers a combat action program and the precise reference point of our entire work.

The main resource of the virgin land fields is grain. As the people say: Grain is tops. It has not only physical but also moral value.

The country caters fully for the diverse grain requirements, and it is sold to the public at the cheapest price in the world. And this is good.

At the same time, however, we virgin land workers have taken to heart the Central Committee's concern expressed at the conference in Tselinograd that a disrespectful attitude toward the labor workers and peasants invest in the production of grain and other agricultural products is still frequently encountered.

Truly, on the one hand we hear many inspired words extolling grain and our labor and, on the other, we frequently witness an unproprietorial attitude toward grain not only in the field and on the threshing floor, for much bread goes to waste at public catering enterprises and at the family table.

It is wrong, I believe, that the price of the formula food for sale to the public is higher than for baked bread, the result being that there are instances of bread being fed to the livestock.

These negative phenomena are being combated. But the measures are clearly insufficient. I believe that for a solicitous attitude toward grain and other agricultural products it is necessary to formulate a system of economic, legislative, and educational measures making possible a radical change in attitude toward food products.

For me, as for every rural worker, grain is a most sacred concept. (applause)

Our multinational republic is evocatively called the "planet of a hundred tongues." The Kazakh virgin land is, as it were, a field where people grow and where the most characteristic features of the Soviet way of life are formed. Many virgin land workers -- representatives of various nationalities and national groups -- have ascended to the heights of fame and general recognition here.

The West is not averse to expatiating on human rights violations in the USSR and on some oppression or the other. Our reality fundamentally confounds these inventions.

The oblast's workers have reposed great trust in me, a German by nationality, having elected me a deputy of the USSR Supreme Soviet for the second time, and the Communists having elected me a congress delegate. (applause) I have a big and multinational family, my husband is a Kazakh, and at home we speak three languages: Russian, Kazakh, and German. (applause) And we have many such families. We live and work amicably on the renewed Kazakh land. At the party's call the virgin land has been developed by representatives of all the fraternal republics and oblasts of the country. Is this not a triumph of Lenin's national policy? (applause)

The friendship of the peoples has uplifted our region and lent powerful development of the virgin land region. Capital investments are growing, the material-technical facilities of agriculture are being reinforced, our power-worker ratio is growing, and the social appearance of the sovkhozes and kolkhozes is changing from year to year.

Much has been done, but we are not content with the results that have been achieved. The growth rate and, particularly, the qualitative indicators of farming and animal husbandry do not correspond to our potential and the quotas of the Food Program.

Our rayon, like the oblast as a whole, has remained in arrears to the state in terms of grain procurements. The reason for this is not only the arid weather conditions. Technological discipline is inadequate in a number of places, and the proprietorial attitude toward the land varies. Qualitative indicators are only improving slowly in animal husbandry as well. In a word, we are not yet making full use of the strong production potential which has been created on the virgin land, which the Political Report was entirely correct to mention.

The team I lead has switched to the unregulated system of the organization of labor and pay. This has enabled us to raise the standard of farming, strengthen discipline, and increase labor productivity by a factor of 1.5.

But to solve some problems, help is needed. On the virgin land the fate of the harvest largely depends on the time taken to perform the work. It is literally a question of days and hours. Delay in sowing or harvesting inevitably leads to losses of grain. Of course, we cannot manage without highly productive equipment here, especially not without the powerful "Kirovets"-type tractors. This is now the main machine on the virgin land fields. On this tractor I have repeatedly won all-union and international prizes for contests of skill and fulfilled 1.5-2 quotas. (applause)

However, comrade Leningraders, the demands are growing, and the tractor must be improved. Machine operators' complaints have been heard increasingly often in recent years about the "Kirovskiy zavod" Association. The quality of the K-701 has declined, and it has become more difficult to operate. It should also be considered that many women work on these vehicles here, and I am sure that there would be even more of them if the reliability of the vehicles, control, and the comfort of the cabs were improved. (applause)

One further question: When we speak of the human factor as the principal reserve for an acceleration of development, this applies to us grain growers also.

The virgin land has celebrated its 30th birthday. The first virgin land workers are departing for their deserved rest, and there is a change of generations, it is a matter of great importance into whose hands the glorious virgin land traditions pass.

It is necessary to cultivate and retain young grain grower personnel, and this is why we cannot slacken the attention paid to the social development of the virgin land sovkhozes and the creation of all the necessary cultural-everyday conditions.

I would like to mention in this connection "spiritual grain." Our multinational Soviet culture has a powerful force of influence on people's minds and hearts and inspires and elevates the working man.

The spiritual and cultural requirements of the present-day countryside have grown sharply. Today it is no longer high wages but these requirements which play the decisive part in the retention of personnel.

From the start of the development of the new land the masters of literature and art cooperated closely and fruitfully with the virgin soil. However, this splendid tradition has been lost in recent years, and initiative is on the wane.

We urge the USSR Ministry of Culture and our creative unions to restore and strengthen creative workmen's past ties to the grain growers of the virgin land. (applause)

We have embarked on the 12th 5-Year Plan in a good work frame of mind.

Frosty winter still holds sway on the expanses of the Kazakh steppe. But the grain growers are preparing actively for spring field work and living with thoughts and concerns of the new harvest.

Having initiated all-union socialist competition for the opportune and high-quality preparation of the equipment for the sowing campaign, the Tselinograders are overfulfilling their pledges. Personnel training has been organized. A good snow cover has accumulated on the fields. A struggle has begun everywhere to mark the first year of the 5-year plan, the year of the 27th CPSU Congress, with a substantial loaf and big virgin land grain.

I wish to say, personally, that, as a Communist and congress delegate, I will continue to work conscientiously, treat the land solicitously, strive for big harvests and excellent work quality, participate actively in social life and pass on experience to the young machine operators. (applause)

As a mother, on behalf of all mothers of the Kazakh virgin land and my entire electorate, I warmly and wholly approve our party's peace-loving foreign policy course. We unanimously support the specific initiatives and proposals set forth in the statement of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the Central Committee. (applause)

For all Soviet people the most cherished and beautiful and most desired word has been and remains the great word: peace. In the name of peace on earth, in the name of the bright future and happiness of our children, we will with our selfless labor constantly strengthen the economic and defense might of our motherland and do everything to successfully implement the new plans of our CPSU. (applause)

Izhmash Party Secretary

WA250345 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 1 Mar 86 pp 6-7

[Speech of Yu.I. Lobov, secretary of the Izhmash Production Association party committee]

[Text] Dear comrade delegates! Being a member of the Lenin party is a great honor. It is increased a hundredfold when one is named delegate to the truly great forum of Communists being held in a period of substantial change brought about by the decisions of the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum. The essence of these changes and the vistas of the future are strikingly outlined in the Central Committee Political Report and the draft new version of the CPSU Program and the party rules.

On behalf of the 6,000-strong party organization and multithousand-strong collective of the "Izhmash" Production Association I assert that these documents express the truly fundamental interests and aspirations of the working class, peasantry and intelligentsia -- in a word, of the entire Soviet people.

Our Communists and the leaders of the association have responded warmly to the party's appeal for a decisive renunciation of all that is outmoded and are feeling how this burden of the old load is being cast, slowly but persistently, aside. Renewal processes are perceived every day. There is coming to be more efficiency, specificity, and attention to each individual in the practical work of the party committee and shop and department party organizations. Communists' reports on their production and social-political activity, compliance with statutory requirements, and the work of the party members in the soviet, trade union, and Komsomol authorities and at the place of residence have become regular. A critical attitude toward what has been achieved is superseding complacency and indifference.

We judge maturity of our personnel today by the ideological conviction which imbues its actions, how it has learned in practice to combine unity of management, organizing, and political-educational work and by the end results it has achieved. We have begun to attack disorderliness more energetically and to institute strict party accountability by the Communists for disruption of the fulfillment of state plans and pledges pertaining to economies and thrift and the observance of contract discipline. We have seen for ourselves that such an approach is fundamentally changing the role and significance of the primary party organization in the labor collective itself and enabling it to tackle in practice all, even the most complex tasks.

For example, the manufacture of automobile and motorcycle spares (the association is one of the country's biggest suppliers of them) was long considered a difficult problem. The consumers of our products were perfectly justifiably complaining to various authorities. We were unable to find a way out of the situation until the Communists took a firm hold of this "narrow" area of production. The question was studied in the party committee and the shop party organizations. We directed our actions via the party groups at specific individual work with each worker in the brigade and the production bay, the development of effective competition, and the stimulation of the lagging collectives. In the 11th Five-Year Plan we were able to double the production of spares and thereby remove many acute problems.

For the purpose of an acceleration of realization of the comprehensive program of production intensification, the party committee appealed to all engineering-technical personnel for each to determine his place in the big campaign for technical progress. A broad movement developed -- each engineer to obtain per R1 of wages no less than R2 of economies thanks to applied innovations. Working under the motto "Initiative and Creativity At the Service of the 5-Year Plan," it was possible in 1985 alone in the shops and production bays to release and transfer to other work areas approximately 2,000 persons.

The adduced examples confirm that in the rebuilding process major potential and unutilized possibilities are revealed at the labor collective level. Unfortunately, we have not yet learned to properly control the renewal processes and are being slow to reorganize ourselves, unduly circumspectly in places, although we are firmly convinced that the most dependable key here is to uplift to a new rung the standard of work of our party organization and to further increase its operational efficiency, professionalism, and sense of responsibility. The conclusion here is simple: The necessary acceleration needs to be imparted to party work itself.

How much discussion there has been and how little has actually been done to remove excessive organization, bureaucratic bluster, and the compilation of numerous plans and measures! Little time remains in practice even for us party committee officers for live work in the shops and brigades, where the physical assets are produced. Not to mention the gorkoms and obkoms. We are once again encountering the diseases of the past, but they are quite tenacious even today.

We speak about a reduction in the flow of paper, but in 2 years our party committee received 117 decisions from the higher authorities alone. And they all have to be fulfilled. And many say plainly: Discuss within the party organizations within such-and-such a time and report the results. Last year alone 7 of the 12 meetings were concluded in accordance with agendas which had been recommended. Yet there are urgent questions in the shop organizations themselves. They have to be postponed or removed altogether. And this naturally influences the efficiency of the party organization's work.

There was particularly serious mention in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev of the need of the manufacture of top-quality products and competitiveness both within the country and on the world market. It has to be self-critically admitted that the party committee has not opportunely displayed the necessary perseverance in the replacement of a number of products, particularly consumer goods, the manufacture of which in 1985 alone constituted R1.5 billion. Thus the association has manufactured the "Uralskaya" economy car without essential design changes for 25 years. Much of it is obsolete.

True, we now have a fundamentally new base model of the "IZH-2126" automobile. Oriented toward the highest technical level, the constructors and designers have endeavored not only to create the maximum conveniences for the consumers but also to ensure significant national economic savings. Thus merely given the production volume which has been achieved, it will be possible to economize annually on a substantial quantity of rolled ferrous metals and fuel.

The necessary engineering design preparation has been carried out in the association. Fifteen automobiles of various modifications were manufactured on an initiative basis for the 27th party congress.

Then what disturbs the collective? The automobile's acceptance trials were completed back in 1984. However, the USSR Council of Ministers' decree on measures for organizing the production of a new model passenger car appeared only in January of this year. Furthermore, many fundamental questions of the modernization of the auto assembly works have yet to be decided. Equipment is not being allocated in full volume. The engine developed at the Ufa Motor-Building Association is, as before, inferior to the best foreign counterparts in terms of individual parameters. The allocation of many components to enterprises of a number of ministries enlisted by the government decision in the manufacture of the new automobile is causing difficulties. Departmental disconnection is manifestly to be perceived as yet.

Such disconnection is manifested not only here. Thus enterprises of our and other ministries plan to introduce production capacity and social-everyday facilities in the 12th 5-Year Plan in the city's new development area. The construction of a major rayon boiler house is contemplated to satisfy their heating requirements. However, as yet the leaders of the ministries are planning the construction of separate departmental boiler houses. As a result there are unjustified wasteful outlays and the time of the planning and start of the construction of this very necessary facility are being delayed.

The assertiveness of a person at work is largely determined by the concern for satisfaction of his material and spiritual requirements. We speak of a shortage of certain food products at times. I believe that the Food Program would be fulfilled more successfully if the industrial enterprises and construction organizations were to increase their contribution here thanks to the accelerated development of the subsidiary farms and their large-scale sponsorship assistance.

In January 1986 the Udmurt Obkom Bureau approved the initiative of the "Izhstal" Association and "Tyazhbummash" Plant collectives, which resolved to triple assistance to the kolkhozes and sovkhozes in the 5-year plan. We supported this undertaking and are performing a great deal of work.

A considerable proportion of the resources is allocated the countryside thanks to economies. However, these resources are insufficient. Small handouts will not help here since what is needed is the solution of large-scale economic and social problems. In Udmurtia, for example, 12 rayon centers out of 25 are not linked to the republic capital by improved-surface roads. This is influencing the development of the agrarian complex and the retention fo personnel in the countryside. Our powerful industry and strong construction organizations are capable of doing considerably more. It is necessary only that the slogan "Development of the Agrarian-Industrial Complex -- Our Common Cause" be obligatory for the worker, the director and the minister.

I believe that the ministries must also participate in sponsorship and provide where possible for the allocation of funds for this all-state, party cause!

How often still, comrades, the unsatisfactory solution of management questions lowers the efficacy of all party-political work and seriously harms the cause. I will give an example. This year the party organizations had prepared specially and responsibly for the communist voluntary Saturday work day. By the day of the opening of the congress hundreds of automobiles had been manufactured, but there is no room for them on the plant's grounds. More than 4,500 unshipped vehicles have already accumulated here. The leaders of the Ministry of Railways know about this and are attempting to help with special rolling stock, but unsuccessfully as yet. The automobiles stand idle. And those who toiled have unflattering words to say about us and those who put us in this position.

A big place in ideological work is assigned to Marxist-Leninist education. But currently, we believe, the organization of tuition has fallen behind contemporary requirements. The 12th 5-Year Plan is one of collective forms of the organization of labor. The brigade is the labor cell which is at the forefront of an acceleration of socioeconomic development. However, currently the members of this labor collective are being taught both in schools of communist labor and in the party, Komsomol political system. Practice has shown that application of the "work together, study together" principle produces big results. This will enhance the quality of the tuition and training of propagandists, and there will be more specific individual work with the students.

Comrades! Well-attended meetings in connection with the start of the 27th CPSU Congress were held in the shops and production bays of the association and at the republic's enterprises. The adopted resolutions record: We Communists and working people of Udmurtia wholly and fully support the party's domestic and foreign policy and will confirm this in our deeds. The party's cause is our cause, the cause of the Communists, working class, and peasantry and all strata of our society, and we will accomplish it persistently and constantly. (applause)

Uzbek School Director

WA250400 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Mar 86 pp 2-3

[Speech of M. Yakubova, director of the Urgench Residence School No 94 of the Uzbek SSR's Khorezm Oblast]

[Text] Dear comrades! It is difficult to convey in words the pride and emotion with which I mount this high rostrum -- a rostrum on which the gaze of all Soviet people and all progressive mankind is riveted at this time. This pride is in my people and the Uzbek woman, who was raised by Lenin and October from the gloom of the black yashmak to a new, bright life. (applause) My emotion derives from the great sense of responsibility for my every word at this historic congress, which is distinguished by efficiency and specificity and is determining the strategic paths of the country's development following the abrupt turnaround begun by the Central Committee April (1985) plenum.

I listened attentively to the CPSU Central Committee Political Report and after each conclusion and each proposal I said to myself: "Right." "Correct." (applause) This not by virtue of a teacher's logic but by virtue of the truth and objectiveness of the problems raised and by virtue of the fact that they come from the land, from people, as it were.

The country is being set far-reaching tasks. I, a teacher, am gratified that the party, looking to the distant future, is predetermining it today, displaying concern for those in school and in the student lecture hall, for all young people and children, taking pains to ensure that they correspond in thoughts and actions to their great times and that above them today and in the future will be clear, peaceful skies. (applause)

Peace and the future -- these concepts are inseparable. I have worked in the school for 35 years and have been leader of a residence school for approximately a quarter of a century. I have led hundreds of young people out into life at large in this time. We have 6 children and 7 grandchildren. (applause) As a representative of the most peaceful profession on earth and as a mother, I am boundlessly grateful to our party for the aggressive peace-loving policy and wholeheartedly support the relentless activity of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, pertaining to the preservation of peace and the specific plans for the destruction of nuclear weapons on our planet proposed in his statement. (applause)

I take advantage of this platform to express mothers' anger at those who are leading mankind toward catastrophe. Come to you senses, gentlemen imperialists! Stop! You have children also. Listen to our voice of prudence and justice, which is consonant with the voice of our party! We must not allow the death of children. (applause)

Comrades! Our teacher collective, like many others, has been working for almost 2 years on realization of the main directions of the reform of the general and vocational school. It is engaged in a creative quest for the most efficient methods of tuition and training. The school's ties to production are strengthening, and the new approach to work training and vocational guidance is producing the first results.

We educators are grateful to the CPSU Central Committee and the Soviet Government for the paternal concern for us, for the nationwide attention to us, for the party's high evaluation of our work, the appreciable increase in wages and the many benefits established for us.

However, it has to be said plainly that it is not in everything and always that we justify the hopes placed in us teachers. What can I possibly have to worry about? The school has a good name, the pass rate is pretty good and among its wards are prominent people of the oblast and of the republic as well as order bearers. But I am pained by every unsuccessful fate. For 10 years we nurture and at times fight for a child. And we suddenly hear that a ward of ours has committed a crime, become an alcoholic and abandoned his wife and child -- and, incidentally, there are both former distinguished pupils and Komsomol activists among these.

As Anton Semenovich Makarenko observed, the school can and must raise a person who must be polite, stern, kind and ruthless, depending on his living conditions, and capable of fighting and building and living and loving life. But this is seriously hampered by the gulf between what we say in class and what the children see and hear at home and in the (makhalla) and what adults hear at work. The atmosphere of money-grubbing, self-seeking, and a facile attitude toward life which reigns in a number of families and which is kindled by the tenets of Islam -- these are the serious obstacles which are still making their mark on education.

You were perfectly correct to note, dear Mikhail Sergeyevich, that a strong family is a most important pillar of our society. (applause) I also warmly support your views concerning the fact that it is essential to enhance the role and responsibility of the party organizations for the state of the moral-psychological atmosphere in the family, in the school, and at work and, under our conditions, in the (makhalla), that is, at the place of residence.

Under the impression of the big party discussion which is under way at the congress I have somehow acquired a new sense of my personal responsibility as a director and as a teacher for the inculcation of high civicism and diverse culture in those who will live and work in the 21st century. Undoubtedly, this will be a person of high erudition and profound professional skills. A most important condition for the achievement of these goals for our children is Russian. For the Uzbek people the language of the great Lenin has become not simply a second native language but a powerful factor of introduction to the achievements of the Soviet multinational culture and world civilization.

I do not conceal the fact that I am proud that I and all the members of my family speak Russian and that more than half the inhabitants of my republic consider it their second language. (applause) However, we are not fully satisfying children's and parents' requirements in the quality of tuition and expansion of the network of schools where the teaching is in Russian. The main reasons for this are the shortage of teachers, the inadequate methods of teaching Russian in the national schools, and flaws in the curriculum.

Sending RSFSR VUZ graduates to us to work as Russian teachers was a good tradition in past years. It has been lost for some reason or other in recent years. We would like it revived. We ask for assistance in speeding up the solution fo this important problem. (applause)

Comrades! Many, very many, true fighters and builders of the new life have been raised by the Soviet school on the basis of specific examples of the heroic history of the party and the people and the life and activity of V.I. Lenin and the Leninist Bolsheviks. The class struggle forged characters and formed personalities. But life inexorably moves on. Generations are growing up which have no knowledge of exploitation, war, starvation, ruin, or unemployment.

Under these conditions great responsibility lies with us for preventing a facile attitude toward the great gains penetrating our children's mentality and for ensuring that with their thoughts and conduct they affirm the Soviet way of life, have firm ideological positions and preserve the fighting qualities of the older generations and high civicism.

In the accomplishment of these difficult tasks the main reference point of the teacher is the pupil and the main place of realization of what is planned the classroom. But in the past 20 years the Ministries of Education of the country and the republic have been more concerned with replacing one textbook with another than with their improvement. As a result the world-outlook and moral content has begun to diminish to a certain extent in many of them. I believe that even in math lessons it is necessary to tell the students seriously in which instances "plus and minus" is good and in which bad (applause), to see behind economic geography the problems of internationalism and the importance of and need for the economic integration of the union republics, and at biology classes to inculcate firm atheist convictions. In this connection I would request that the USSR Ministry of Education and the Academy of Pedagogical Sciences, when examining the content of textbooks, keep at the center of their attention world-outlook questions in order that each of them introduce our communist morals to children's minds and actions and in order that the school textbooks be more profoundly imbued with the truth of life and shape conviction, civic duty, and an understanding that all the benefits of society and its members depend on the honest and selfless labor of each. (applause)

In the past 2 years the republic party organizations have been conducting a merciless struggle against many negative phenomena. This is good and right, and the people approve. But it is certainly necessary together with this to solve accumulated questions also. Let us take the problems of the schools' physical plant. Many decrees were adopted following approval of the main directions of the reform and it was determined who should undertake what and what had to be tackled and when. However, we are not as yet aware of a serious reorganization either in the metality or in the actions of individual leaders toward the school. It is incomprehensible, for example, why the ministries and departments and the enterprises are not providing in the plans of socioeconomic development for the building of special shops for trainees and interschool industrial training centers, are ignoring the student brigades and allocating obsolete equipment. Time will pass, and they, having done nothing for realization of the school reform, will start to talk about its ineffectiveness. In my view, the party program for education should primarily be an action program for each leader both of the school and the enterprise, establishment, kolkhoz, and sovkhoz. (applause)

Nor is the children's attraction to technology, computer technology particularly, being satisfied in full, comrades. It is necessary today even to teach them the skills of working with it and foster new economic and technical thinking in them, but many questions remain moot. What am I, the school director, supposed to do if only 54 computers have been received for all the schools of the republic? Given such a rate of supply, the educational institutions will not have such even by the year 2000.

Almost 20,000 children were born in our city of Urgench in the past 5 years, but schools were built in this period for only 4,000 pupils. Given the acute shortage of schools, I have painfully watched the zeal with which a variety of pompous hotels and opulent administrative buildings have been erected and how the headquarters at these construction projects have been headed by leaders of the city and the oblast and have thought bitterly: How they have distanced themselves from the people and from their needs! (applause)

The situation is now largely changing for the better. The party committee secretaries and ispolkom chairmen have begun to look into the schools more often, to meet the teachers and render concrete assistance in the solution of questions which arise. We hope that this will not be a temporary campaign. (applause)

At the same time it would also be desirable for the USSR Gosplan to reexamine to amount and structure of the capital investments for education. Particular consideration here should be given to the birthrate and actual position of the schools' physical plant.

I believe that all these questions will be taken into consideration in the main directions of the country's economic and social development in order that the reform be accomplished within the time specified by the party.

Comrades! On behalf of the school's collective and all teachers of the republic I assure you congress delegates that we will continue by honest and conscientious labor to justify the trust of the party and the people and work on the unconditional accomplishment of the tasks which will be determined by the 27th CPSU Congress (prolonged applause).

Kamenskiy Raykom Leader

WA250430 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Mar 86 pp 4-5

[Speech of Zh.D. Fedorova, first secretary of Voronezh Oblast's Kamenskiy Raykom]

[Text] Comrade delegates! Wholly and fully sharing the views of all who have mounted this rostrum, I would like to apend to them the opinion of Voronezh Communists that all the propositions of the Central Committee Political Report express Soviet people's treasured aspirations, are close and comprehensivly to everyone and motivate us to work in the new way, with the maximum exertion.

I have been secretary of a rural raykom for 8 years. Indeed, all my life I have been connected with the countryside. For this reason it is with a feeling of high responsibility that I apprehend the words of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev about the extent to which the role of the party committees is growing in implementation of the party's policy of an acceleration of our society's development and an intensification of the economy and in realization of the Food Program. The times and the innovative formulation of the tasks itself demand a more critical evaluation of what has been achieved and a creative approach to each raykom action.

The insistent need for an emphatic departure from the old plans and approaches can also be seen in the example of our Kamenskiy Rayon. While having fulfilled the plans for the sale of animal husbandry products to the state, in the last 5-year plan we, like all Voronezh Oblast, remained greatly in arrears in grain, sugar beet, and sunflowers. The gross product increased only 6 percent, whereas fixed production capital increased by almost one-third.

What were the reasons, if seen from the viewpoint of the raykom's influence? We cannot, of course, disregard the fact that the rayon does not enjoy the best soil-climatic conditions of the chernozem zone. But it is not a question of this. The main thing is, as the Communists stringently said in the course of the reports and elections, that a due system was lacking in the work with the personnel of all levels. Those who were not averse to attributing their own expenses and lack of enterprise to the "caprices" of the weather at times were not emphatically rebuked. Unfortunately, we spent more time calling for discipline and a sense of responsibility than fostering these qualities and teaching unity of word and deed.

Thus bitter fruit is being reaped owing to inattention to soil fertility, violations of components of the system of management and technological discipline, and a formal attitude toward the introduction of progressive experience.

Take, for example, the cultivation of cereals in accordance with intensive techniques. I will say plainly that at first some people greeted this innovation not without some skepticism. The raykom had to perform a great deal of work to dispel these doubts. We learned ourselves and taught people. There were blunders and errors also. Everything. Nonetheless, the addition to the winter wheat harvest compared with customary techniques constituted 18 quintals per hectare; the foremost farms harvested an average of more than 50 quintals; and this experience strengthened the confidence that industrial techniques in alliance with the brigade contract represent a dependable path toward big harvests even under unfavorable weather conditions. This is the path toward the increased interest of the farmers and their collective and personal responsibility for end results and the fate of the plans.

There is also an immeasurable increase in our responsibility for rational management of the farm on cost accounting principles. But this process is only progressing slowly, unfortunately. Insufficient use is as yet being made in daily practice of certain economic levers designed to ensure observance of the principles of social justice. Nothing other than local inertia and the imperfection of normative documents explain the fact that upon introduction of the collective contract the wage does not always reflect the quantity and quality of labor. The request for removal of this contradiction is posed perfectly correctly.

Since the Central Committee April plenum we have looked at many questions with different eyes, as it were, and not only abandoned many stereotypes in work with people but also tried to introduce something new. Recommendations pertaining to work with the personnel and its reserve, which were a collation of the experience which had been accumulated by the party organizations both of our oblast and other oblasts and republics and which were approved at an obkom plenum, have contributed to this. In particular, the differentiated training of the reserve, the competitive system of the selection of middle-level leaders, study and consideration of the opinion of the party organizations and labor collectives at the time of the promotion of officials, and their certification with reliance on the authoritative say of the people are beginning to produce pretty good results.

This is what is remarkable. Whereas earlier, while condemning the "armchair disease," behind which was inevitably formalism and bureaucratic rule, we were absolutely unable to find a sufficiently effective means of curing it, this very approach to personnel work is changing much for the better. And, primarily, the party officers are beginning to probe the state of affairs at the livestock unit or in the fields not through mechanisms and plowed furrows but through the people who work these mechanisms and who are plowing this furrow.

In a word, local initiative is accelerating. It needs to be underpinned more assertively by enterprise from above, and that includes the state authorities. I also would like to share some thoughts in corroboration of the justification of the concern heard at the congress.

The growing technical potential of the countryside, for example, is noted with satisfaction. This is gratifying and promising and at the same time perplexing. Precisely, perplexing. The point being that we are not at a stage of scientific-technical progress where it has to be a question not of the quantity of machines but of the quality of complexes corresponding to the applied techniques. Yet agricultural machine building is greatly in arrears to the rural workers. Highly promising advances are being dragged out too long. The technical specifications of the new row-crop tractors, say, or the "Don" combine have long been known from publications many years old. But what worries the machine operators is something else: Will not the old mistakes and unfinished work, when practically no combine leaves for the field without touch-up work by rural craftsmen, from sealing through attachments for harvesting lodged grain, be repeated?

The question involuntarily arises as to what is preventing an expansion of the competitive system of the creation and defense of pilot models of reliable equipment and what is holding back the expansion of a testing ground on the basis of a large number of farms in various regions of the country.

And what are the material and moral costs of the reciprocal stream of a huge army of specialists traveling around the oblasts in search of fruit choppers, plowshare kits, and so forth. We close our eyes to this, as it is customary to say, in the interest of the cause. But what kind of cause is this when behind all this is spontaneous exchange, often smart-dealing and sometimes abuse. It would be worth making more stringent evaluations of this situation both at the design and manufacturing state of the equipment and when it is being distributed.

The countryside is being built up. This is the novelty of the kolkhoz village. Four times as much housing was built in our rayon in the last 5-year plan as in the 10th, and a number of schools, children's establishments and trade and consumer service enterprises were introduced. All the central grounds are linked with the rayon center by asphalt roads. All these matters are party concerns. No one is stinting on either forces or resources for them. There has been a shortage, say, of construction workers, but we have not begun resorting to the assistance of "private" builders but are instructing in related occupations our kolkhoz members, who in the between-season period are erecting apartments and sociocultural-everyday facilities by the direct-labor method. These skills even come in handy in one's own house.

But life is raising other questions, too. The amount of housing leased from farm resources is growing, but interest in constructing private homes is declining. In the past 3 years the allocation of loans for this purpose in the rayon has declined fourfold, while the number of private homes built has declined more than threefold. I recall that dear Terentiy Semenovich Maltsev once said in this connection: When people do not aspire to have a private farm erected by their own hands, they are losing the threads, as it were, of peasant ties to their native village. Truly said. It is not far, given such a situation, to dependent sentiments. This has to be considered.

Other problems also arise. With the considerable expansion of gas and water supply and centralized heating questions of the operation of these facilities, which cannot always be decided by local initiative alone, arise in full magnitude. The same may be said about road maintenance for the asphalted country roads are not being included in the "budget" by the specialized organizations. It is perfectly obvious that the oblast and republic agrarian-industrial committees must make a better forecast of the development of the infrastructure of the countryside.

No less essential is adjustment of the construction production line with an orientation toward the end result. After all, what is often the result? On two of our farms the planning institutes, performing surveying work, found in favor of the construction of animal husbandry units, having obtained R70,000 for this. After the work had been started it was ascertained that they could not be built owing to the high level of the ground waters and quicksands. There was naturally a demand for reimbursement of the expenditure. But that's not how it turned out. The leadership of the institutes requested a further R6,000-7,000 for now substantiating the impossibility of construction, explaining that only after this could the money which had been transferred earlier be returned via the court. There was an appeal to the prosecutor. Following his explanations, the doubt crept in: Would not his substantial sum also be cast to the wind? It transpires that some people are economizing grain by grain in matters large and small, but here people do as they like.

Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev spoke in the report about the creation of opportunities for the koklhozes and sovkhozes to display greater independence. But, we say plainly, departmental approaches, outdated sets of instructions, and an uncoordinated wave of inspections are still fettering initiative. Let's face it, it is sometimes not enough for the kolkhoz chairman to be merely an enterprising person, he also needs to possess exceptional penetrating capabilities. After all, there essentially stands in his way a palisade of every conceivable monitoring and checking organization, a good 20 of which are endowed with the right to punish the leader. (applause) One involuntarily wonders: Does this all not testify to the inadequacy of control? Instead of organizing work and helping solve questions, it does not organize but at times disorganizes.

Last year the higher authorities carried out approximately 200 various inspections in the rayon, and there were visits in October alone from 37 oblast representatives. In the language of statistics, 114 man-days of "assistance..." was spent by rayon and farm specialists and leaders in reciprocal assistance in accompanying these representatives and preparing information and references for them. (applause)

As can be seen, the measures being adopted to coordinate control work at the oblast and at the republic and union levels are ineffective as yet. Cannot order be brought to bear here? Evidently, the party Central Committee departments also need to occupy a firmer position on these matters. We hope that following the high-minded and frank discussion which is under way at the congress there will be a reduction in the stream of documents and less information will be requested. It is necessary to fulfill the adopted decisions and organize better.

We understand full well that whatever aspect of our activity is broached, it all comes down to the need to strengthen the role of the primary party organizations and their influence on the affairs of the labor collectives. There is also much in this work that needs to be reorganized. It is necessary to teach the secretaries and the elective party militants more and, what is most important, better. Practical work results should be the decisive criterion of an evaluation of the party organizations and their leaders. And, of course, we must not slacken our attention to an increase in the vanguard role of the Communists. Implementation of the propositions of the new CPSU Program and the party rules will undoubtedly contribute to this.

The Political Report determined the party's clear strategic line of struggle for peace, which we unanimously approve and support. (applause) This convincingly expresses the will and aspiration of Soviet people for creative peaceful labor. This is striking testimony to the fact that in our country the people and the party are united. (applause)

We request that all foreign guests tell their people this. Let them know that under the leadership of the Lenin party Soviet people are sparing no efforts to strengthen peace on our planet. (applause)

The 27th congress will conclude in a few days. We, its delegates, upon our return home will convey to the Communists and all working people the tremendous political charge we have acquired at this unforgettable time. And this charge will be multiplied by the concrete deeds of the labor collectives in implementation of the congress' decisions and acceleration of economic and social development! (applause)

Donetsk Mine Worker

WA250515 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Mar 86 p 4

[Speech by Hero of Socialist Labor Yu.M. Shatalov, face worker at the Mine imeni Karl Marx of the Ordzhonikidzevskoye Production Association for Coal Production of Donetsk Oblast]

[Text] Dear comrades! The big discussion under way at our congress is a direct continuation and development of the ideas and line of the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum. Less than a year has elapsed since the CPSU Central Committee Plenum, which formulated a bold innovative policy of an acceleration of the country's economic and social development. But there is no longer any aspect of our life which has not been touched by the salutory changes. Specific work of far-reaching dimensions is unfolding, aimed at ensuring rapid advance and removing all that stands in our way.

The paths, forms, and methods of the accomplishment of the urgent tasks were comprehensively revealed in the party Central Committee Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. The report provides answers to the most complex and urgent questions of our life. The pulse of the times beats in its every word. This is why it has been received by people so warmly and is being discussed in each collective and in every home. People believe in the party and support its bold innovative course.

An analytical approach, boldness, candor and openness in an evaluation of the state of affairs, a large-scale approach, realism and precision of the formulation of tasks -- this is a Bolshevist tradition going back to Lenin. This is our proletarian, worker approach. (applause)

Our congress is discussing the draft new version of the CPSU Program and other most important documents, which have earned the full approval of the party and the people. They are close and comprehensible to the working man for they set the goal of the material and spiritual enrichment of his life and the preservation of peace on Earth. It is well worth working well in the name of this.

As always at abrupt turns of history, when the country's fate is being decided, the working class is ready to channel all its energy into the accomplishment of the tremendous tasks which the party is setting. "And when millions of working people unite as one man, following the best people of their class, then," Vladimir Ilich Lenin said, "victory is ensured." (applause)

At a meeting last year in the CPSU Central Committee with veterans of the Stakhanov movement you, Mikhail Sergeyevich, called on us to adopt from the Stakhanovite pioneers the indomitable spirit of innovation, the endeavor to get from equipment the maximum possible, and boldness in breaking with outdated norms and mental habits.

The call for a search for deep-lying reserves of an acceleration is clear and comprehensible to us miners -- the successors of Aleksey Stakhanov and Nikita Izotov. We in the Donbass have worked the upper galleries and have now been forced to look for coal in the depths and look purposefully and vigorously. After all, there is simply no other way.

The same goes for the development of the economy. There is practically no potential left on the surface. To ensure a breakthrough to the foremost positions it is necessary to emphatically switch to the path of intensification, to assume a somewhat heavier load and toil in each work place with full input.

In the 11th 5-Year Plan, I personally fulfilled nine annual quotas and cut roughly 5,000 tons of fuel over and above the plan. (applause) By the day of the opening of the 27th congress I had produced a further 500 tons of coking coal. (applause)

Thousands of face workers of the republic's mining collectives are working with the same high input. The quotas of the last 5-year plan were fulfilled ahead of schedule by 114 mines and more than 2,000 sections and brigades. These included the celebrated brigades of coal craftsmen headed by the Heroes of Socialist Labor and delegates to our congress Anatoliy Polishchuk, Petr Negrutsa, Grigoriy Motsak, Nikolay Skrypnik, and many others. (applause)

The Ukraine's miners prepared a good gift for the 27th party congress. One million tons of above-plan coal has already been dispatched for the national economy since the start of the year. (applause) However, comrades, it has to be frankly admitted that the sector is still operating unsteadily and that some collectives are failing to cope with the targets.

We see as the main task stepping up the pace and strengthening the mood in support of big practical achievements. Much depends on us workers here. Discussing the pre-congress documents, my comrades -- both Communists and nonparty people -- said plainly that it is necessary to approach our work with a great sense of responsibility, to strengthen discipline and organization, and to bring due order to bear everywhere. The party's line in this question is correct, and we will support it in every possible way. And the workers' word is firm. (applause) Everything in the miners' power, we will do.

However, in order to ensure a qualitative breakthrough in the work of the entire sector we need the help of science and the planning authorities and decisive measures on the part of the USSR Ministry of Coal Industry. In the Donbass coal is becoming more difficult to produce with every passing year. The depth of the mines is growing and production conditions are deteriorating; it cannot be taken with bare hands. While it must be said that the mines have begun to receive new, modern mining equipment, there are still not enough good machines. The miners have many complaints about their quality and reliability. Half of the rock-loading machines and almost 40 percent of the coal cutter-loaders arrive at the mines with factory defects and require honing and readjusting. I and my comrades, face workers at steep seams, dig coal with pneumatic drills, as we did 50 years ago. Things need to be rectified immediately, and it is necessary to hold strictly accountable those who are responsible for the development and manufacture of equipment for the miners. After all, this is not the first time this has been mentioned.

There is also another, very serious problem. The better and more productively we work, the more rapidly the coal reserves are spent and the mines die away. In mining this is natural. There is just one solution: build more rapidly and introduce in good time new coal production capacity. However, today, unfortunately, such an approach is being disrupted. In the past 5-year plan new mines were built in the Donbass for only 8 million tons of coal a year, while mines catering for almost four times as much were closed owing to the reserves being spent. The planning authorities, of course, can see better where to build new coal mines, but -- I will speak plainly -- it is offensive to us that the Ukraine annually imports millions of tons of coal when it has big reserves of valuable coal.

I would also like to say this: Writers and poets are fond of calling the Donbass the region of blue heaps. It has a beautiful ring, but this beauty brings people only grief. These piles burn, give off gas and scatter dust. Furthermore, they take up thousands of hectares of fertile land, which in our day has to be seen as extravagance.

Certain mines have now begun leaving the rock in the area that has been worked and using it for building roads and producing construction materials. It is necessary to develop this more intensively, we believe, and to preserve nature and people's health. Importance is also attached in this connection to the social development of the miners' cities and communities. There is no doubt that much is being done for us. For example, last year alone more than 15,000 miners' families obtained new apartments. But is it right that in the last 5-year plan more than R150 million at the Yenakiyev "Ordzhonikidzeugol" Association, where I work, were channeled into the development of production, and this is good, whereas not a kopek went to the construction of cultural and sports facilities. Evidently the USSR Ministry of Coal Industry is not yet giving sufficient thought to the miners' cultural, healthful recreation and to how to struggle assertively not in words but in deeds for a sober way of life.

One further matter: Workers are commenting with great approval on the work that has been done recently on the eradication of negative phenomena. A variety of speculators, bribe-takers, and spongers has been subdued somewhat. However, they still frequently avail themselves of our connivance. We talk about the establishment of the principles of social justice, but in practice adopt a tolerant attitude toward those alongside us who are living on unearned income. And this undermines moral principles and has a corrupting influence on people, the younger generation particularly. After all, in the mine, at the plant and in the field the kopek is earned by difficult labor, while at the same time, it turns out, it is possible to live comfortably and not work. The strictest, most decisive measures are needed in combating this evil. I say confidently: Working people will warmly support them. (applause)

Considerable losses are caused our society by drunkenness and alcoholism. For this reason we perceived as a most opportune measure the struggle to eradicate them which has developed on the initiative of the CPSU Central Committee. We are profoundly convinced that drunkenness, which is so corrosively eating away at our society, will finally be eradicated. The guarantee of this is the persistence and perseverance with which the Central Committee and the local party authorities have set about this work. Despite the difficulty of the set task, we are confident it will be accomplished.

Comrades! For the accomplishment of the tasks which the congress is setting the Soviet people we need peace. We see that our party is striving persistently and consistently to remove the threat of nuclear catastrophe looming over mankind and to secure people's main right: the right to life. We are proud that it has been our country which has pointed the way to the liquidation of nuclear arms.

We entirely support the peace initiatives set forth in the statement of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. It is not "star wars" but destruction of the most devastating weapons which will bring mankind peace and prosperity. We believe: Peace will be preserved! We will do everything to ensure that our Soviet house stands firm and that the might of our great socialist motherland constantly strengthens. (applause)

Pskov Hospital Official

WA260200 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 2 Mar 86 pp 6-7

[Speech by M.I. Zhelnina, head of a department of the Pskov Oblast Hospital No 1]

[Text] Dear comrades! I am happy to have the high honor of being a delegate to the 27th congress of the Lenin party. Having mounted the country's highest platform, I wish to express the sense of pride which I feel in our heroic Soviet people, our party, and its noble deeds and great goals.

I am thinking at this time how much I will have to tell my work comrades and my fellow countrymen when I return home. Primarily about the ineradicable impression from the CPSU Central Committee Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. I was moved to the bottom of my heart by the fact that it was imbued with great concern for each Soviet individual and the fate of peace.

We shall return repeatedly to the tasks advanced in the report and reflect on them. But it is clear to each of us today even that these are giant, inspiring tasks and that they demand the mobilization of all our forces and resources. Accomplishing them will not be easy. For this reason every worker and kolkhoz member, every specialist and leader must not only be professionally well trained and work selflessly. The tasks which we have to accomplish demand, comrades, that each of us be more assertive and physically strong and healthy.

We all know of the achievements of our health care in the years of Soviet power. A tremendous gain of socialism is the fact that for the first time it has truly put medicine at the service of the people. We are proud that the Soviet Constitution guarantees each individual health protection and free medical assistance.

Striking changes have occurred in the development of health care in our Pskov Oblast, too.

I have worked as a physician for more than 20 years following graduation from one of the country's oldest medical faculties -- of Tartu University. My husband, with whom I work in the same hospital, also graduated from this faculty. Our eldest daughter is now studying in there, while the youngest, a 10th-grade student, is doing practical work as a hospital attendant and dreams of becoming a doctor.

More than one dynasty of medical officers works in our hospital.

Naturally, at home, in a group of work comrades and in the party organization, which I have headed for a number of years, we constantly discuss problems of health care.

What questions concern us, comrade delegates?

Primarily disease prevention and the clinical examination of the population. I would like today to call attention to this particularly. After all, it was our country which was the first in the world to embark on a solution of the problem of a general dispensary system. We may already speak of the first results of the work. Certain experience has been accumulated in a number of oblasts of the RSFSR, the Ukraine, in the Baltic, and in our oblast.

However, there are still many unsolved problems in this big and important matter. There are not as yet, unfortunately, regulations even governing the procedure of clinical examination. The provision of medical establishments with modern technical facilities is in need of considerable improvement. It is hard for us medical officers to understand why our scientists and specialists cannot organize the production of the necessary medical apparatus at the level of the best world models and why some of it has to be purchased abroad.

I do not know who specifically is responsible for all this but surely the Ministries of Health, Medical and Microbiological Industry and Instrument-Making, means of automation and control systems and other departments should hold more strictly accountable the leaders of research institutes and industrial enterprises for the solution of these questions. (applause)

I would like to appeal to the communists working in the given sectors to display greater assertiveness and concern in tackling these urgent tasks.

The health of children and young people is of particular concern in our country. We all need to think how to unite the efforts of the school, the home, and the health care, physical culture, and sports establishments in tackling this most important task -- the protection and strengthening of the health of the younger generation.

We fully support the views expressed in the report concerning an improvement in physical culture-sports work, an expansion of the network of stadiums and sports grounds and an improvement in their use. A fundamental change of attitude toward physical culture in the schools and other educational institutions is necessary.

Comrades! We are sure that the party congress will impart new impetus to the development of all sectors of the economy and culture. Much will undoubtedly also be done for the development of health care. In turn, we medical officers consider it our sacred duty to do everything to better implement the party's directions pertaining to the protection of the health of Soviet man. This will have not only social but also great economic significance since it will enable us to make fuller use of the most important factor, the human factor.

Evaluating our work critically, we bitterly have to acknowledge that there are still instances of rudeness, an inattentive attitude toward patients, low qualifications, and breaches of the standards of medical ethics in medical establishments. I believe that we Communist medical practitioners should come down with all the force of our authority against these phenomena.

I would like to share the following thoughts. As a doctor of the oblast hospital, I frequently travel to the oblast's rayons and the countryside and I see for myself on each occasion that big changes are taking place in the Non-Chernozem area. Whole communities and new rural streets are growing up and roads, production premises, cultural centers and consumer outlets, schools, stores and medical posts are being built.

Nonetheless, what is being done in some places is not yet what one would wish. The physical plant of health care establishments, particularly in the rural areas, is as yet inadequate in our oblast, and this is also true elsewhere, evidently.

A large number of establishments are still housed in adapted premises. For this reason difficulties frequently arise over the hospitalization of patients and the creation of the necessary conditions for them. Yet the resources allocated this sector were not fully assimilated in the last 5-year plan.

The Obkom, Obliispolkom and, certainly, I and my comrade Obkom members failed to display sufficient exactingness toward the corresponding leaders for the accomplishment of these tasks.

I will not conceal the fact that I received with great satisfaction what the report said about it being necessary to abandon the so-called residual principle of the allocation of capital investments and resources for the installation of social facilities and the development of medical establishments. It is also time for a change in the construction workers' attitude toward health care facilities.

I would also like to say that certain northern and western areas of the RSFSR, which are distinguished by difficult natural-climatic conditions, where the last war is still making its presence felt, and a unique demographic situation, are in need of great attention on the part of the central and republic authorities. It would be a good idea for the leaders of these authorities to come here a little more often and probe the problems of this region in greater depth.

We medical officers are disturbed by the shortage of personnel and its turnover, particularly in rural areas. We undertake the vocational guidance of the trainees and educational work. But none of this produces the desired results at times. Medical officers are still inadequately supplied with housing. The leaders of medical establishments have limited opportunities for encouraging enterprising officers.

We received with great gratitude the news concerning measures to regulate the wages of doctors, registered nurses, and pharmacists. Have no doubt, comrades, we will respond to this concern with selfless labor to ensure that matters are organized in each hospital and clinic the way the party and our people demand. (applause)

Comrades! When I left for Moscow, the medical officers and many working people, women particularly, asked me to convey huge thanks to the Central Committee for the persistent and consistent work on purging our society of many negative phenomena and such a dangerous evil as drunkenness. This is a very necessary and urgent matter. The CPSU Central Committee recently adopted a decree on this question pertaining to Novgorod Oblast. The situation in our oblast is no better, I believe, in this respect than for our neighbors. There are still many problems in this matter.

Their solution also depends on the officers of trade, culture, and health care. I will say plainly that we medical officers also are still failing to display due assertiveness in the solution of these problems.

The drug-treatment service is not developing quickly enough, and there is a shortage of skilled drug-treatment personnel. The research institutes also should be developing more effective methods of treating alcoholics. The Central Committee demand is correct: The struggle against this vice must be conducted more assertively and aggressively, and every Communist and every Soviet individual must participate in it. Only by common efforts will we succeed in overcoming this evil.

I would like to support one further proposal expressed in the Central Committee report concerning the revival of the women's councils in the labor collectives and the place of residence and their unification into a single system headed by the Committee of Soviet Women. In fact this would be a great force; just try disregarding it, comrade men! (applause)

Dear comrades! An indispensable condition for the realization of our far-reaching plans is the preservation of peace on earth. The entire activity of our party and its Leninist Central Committee is subordinated to this main task. Peace on earth is essential not only to the Soviet people but all people of the planet also.

In war we medical personnel see -- more than anyone else, perhaps -- much blood and human suffering. I, as a mother and doctor, received with tremendous satisfaction the wide-ranging and responsible peace initiatives set forth in the statement of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev of 15 January of this year and in the report at the party congress. These initiatives have demonstrated time and again to all people in the world who is in fact for peace and to whom the arms race is profitable, who aspires to detente and who to increased tension in international relations. Personally and from all mothers of the country I would like to express heartfelt gratitude to the party Central Committee for the selfless work on strengthening peace and security on our planet. (applause)

Believe me, dear comrades, we Soviet medical personnel will give all our powers, knowledge, experience, and energy to the cause of strengthening the health of Soviet man, the purpose of whose life is selfless labor for the good of the people and in the name of the prosperity of our beloved motherland. (applause)

Pensioner From Voroshilovgrad

WA260310 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 3 Mar 86 p 2

[Speech of Hero of Socialist Labor K.G. Petrov, senior inspector of the "Stakhanovshakhtostroy" Trust, party veteran, and special union pensioner, Voroshilovgrad Oblast]

[Text] Comrade delegates! The businesslike frame of mind and spirit of creativity and optimism reigning at our congress strikingly reflect the social atmosphere which has taken shape in the party and in the country under the impact of the decisions of the CPSU Central Committee April and October plenums and the Central Committee Political Report delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev.

The Central Committee's energetic and persistent actions for bringing due order to bear and accelerating the country's socioeconomic development have won the unanimous support of the Communists and all working people. The more extensively the work on a qualitative rebuilding of the life of our society has unfolded, the more clear it becomes how immeasurable is the growth of the role of the party organizations and how essential a Bolshevist approach is now on the part of each party member.

Back at the dawn of Soviet power Vladimir Ilich Lenin said: "Now, when power has been consolidated in the hands of the workers, everything depends entirely on proletarian discipline and proletarian organization." These words are particularly relevant today, when, given the present proportions and speeds, even the slightest malfunction results in huge material losses. Not to mention the moral damage done to society by people who forget this Leninist instruction.

As a member of the Obkom, I often have to visit the mines, plants, and construction sites and communicate with Communists and nonparty people. I am gratified by the fighting mood of the working people, the depth of their understanding of their duty and their endeavor to fulfill it honestly and conscientiously. But I also sometimes encounter those who are not doing this but find a niche for themselves any way. It is particularly intolerable when such a position is occupied by Communists. After all, it is no secret that individual party members are reconciled to the role of middling persons and are not averse to expatiating about the honor and vanguard role of party member, but when it is a matter of action, they are no hurry to get to the firing line, as they say. What kind of Communist are you, one wonders, if you decline to switch to a lagging sector and take on, when it is required, additional assignments? Such people, and they exist, unfortunately, merely undermine our party's authority. (applause)

There should be no question for the Communist of what should I want or not want. There should be no deliberation concerning personal advantage. If the party has said "it is necessary," he is obliged to carry it out. (applause) And it is highly correct that the strict accountability of every party member permitting departures from proletarian discipline in the Leninist understanding of this word will now be enshrined more precisely in our party rules.

We are obliged to match up against Lenin our every step and action and purge ourselves of selfishness, complacency, and indifference. Whoever violates these behests cannot, I believe, be a member of our Lenin party. (applause) We must struggle in Leninist fashion, uncompromisingly for the highly moral character of the party! Particularly high demands must be made on the Communists who have been entrusted with heading party organizations.

As a former party organizer of the All-Russian Communist Party (Bolsheviks) Central Committee, I say that the level of party organization secretaries, both educational and cultural, has grown considerably today. The forms of party work are changing also. But let us be frank: They are not always improving. More, what should be part of the assets is sometimes consigned to the archives.

There was no such excessive report-writing in my time. As party organizer, I had a diary in which I recorded the plan of work and noted its fulfillment and had the minutes of party meetings and party committee sessions. We sent the Gorkom almost no references and information. Very rarely was the agenda of the meetings recommended from above. There was no problems concerning the organization of control of execution -- the decrees which were adopted were always specific and targeted.

I recall that, following Stakhanov's record, we came up to the surface on 31 August 1935. There was straightaway a brief meeting and then immediately following a session of the mine's party committee. There was just one question: "The labor productivity of face worker Aleksey Grigorevich Stakhanov". The decree which was adopted (I had thought over the draft while still in the mine) was such: "Attaching particular political significance to the record set by Stakhanov, 102 tons by the pick, the mine party committee believes that this is the right path which will lead to fulfillment of the party's instructions concerning the decisive role of cadres who have mastered new equipment and will undoubtedly assure the ahead-of-schedule fulfillment of the annual plan." (applause)

This is what we went on to record: to enter Stakhanov's name on the Roll of Honor of the mine's best people; to issue him a bonus of the order of a month's salary; by 3 September to allocate to Stakhanov an apartment from the available technical personnel's housing and to install a telephone. We wished to allocate a car, but since we had no cars we decided to assign him a rubber-tread horsecab. (applause)

We also resolved: to allocate as of 1 September in the club two reserved seats for Aleksey Stakhanov and his wife for all films, shows and every evening entertainment; to propose that all sector chiefs, party group organizers, and the mine committee examine by turns no later than 2 September in respect of all sectors the experience and record of Comrade Stakhanov; to develop around the mines competition for high labor productivity among the workers of all mine occupations.

From the very first day the party committee began seeking to ensure that Stakhanov had followers and that the record of the first pacesetter would grow into a mass movement. And we achieved this. But now, frequently, while announcing, coordinating, settling -- the initiative becomes long forgotten. Another look is taken to see whose initiative it was. If it was one's own, it is promoted, but if from elsewhere, it is promoted unassertively.

In addition, the primary party organization secretaries are at times simply incapable, behind the avalanche of paper, of spotting something new and setting it in motion. I believe it is necessary to free them from this captivity. After all, the main job is working not with paper but with living people. (applause)

The party Central Committee has recently been performing a tremendous amount of work on commissioning powerful sources of the creativity of the masses. An important component thereof is moral stimulation of the pacesetters of socialist competition. This was emphasized particularly at the meeting in the CPSU Central Committee with veterans of the Stakhanov movement.

However, things are as yet improving only slowly. As before, even certain business, trade union, and party officials are lagging in helping the pacesetters conquer new heights of labor productivity, and they are working inadequately with those who have fallen behind, failing to help them reach the ranks of the frontrunners.

After all, all heroes and people of high labor productivity came to their fame through their party organizations. It was they which trained them and cultivated them and led them to the records which they set and raised them up and made them celebrities of our motherland. (applause)

It is even offensive, I will be blunt, that a short-sighted position is at times occupied by workmen of literature and art, which was very rightly mentioned in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report.

I, as a miner who has worked 61 years and now works at a mine (applause), wish to submit a bill to the leaders of the creative unions of writers, composers, artists and, particularly, film makers. They are greatly in arrears to the miners. I will cite three examples, and you can see whether I am right or not.

In 50 years our film makers have made just one serious picture for the miners: "The Big Life." (applause) I ask: Do miners not have a big life now? It is a splendid life! (applause)

We have hundreds of heroes, thousands of foremost people, and very high labor productivity. We have culture, civic amenities, education -- all have grown. Why not portray something that ensures that the young people who have come to the coal industry learn and be retained there?! You, comrade motion picture workers, are to blame here! (applause)

I asked officials of the Committee for Cinematography: why do you not shoot such a picture? It is not us, they said, who are to blame, the writers are not writing them. The writers say: We are writing, they are not shooting. It is difficult for me, of course, to know the particulars, the more so on this platform, but I would like to say to the comrade writers that in my time I remember well just one book about miners, that of Boris Gorbatov, which came out 35 years ago, and since then, apart from pamphlets and small booklets, I have seen nothing. (applause)

Now about the composers. They wrote a song to us which not only we miners but certainly many of you know also: "The Dark Mounds Are Sleeping." (laughter) We have been singing it for many years now. (applause) Furthermore, for the composers' information, we are not making mounds in the Donbass now. (laughter) Half of those which existed have already been liquidated. In 10 years time there will certainly be nothing left. I wonder what we will sing then? (laughter, applause)

So I request on behalf of the miners from the writers, film makers, and composers: please, create new books, pictures, songs to hearten us and so that the young replacement shift are aware of us. I believe that for their heroic labor the illustrious miners have a right to expect fulfillment of this request. (applause)

I would like to call attention to the following question. Our scientists and design engineers could have done considerably more for the miners. The country needs a great deal of coal, but more accomplished and reliable equipment is needed to increase its production. We have been asking the minister of coal industry for decades that a coal shearer be made for us for preliminary operations in hard rock in order that there be reduced vibration for us on the pneumatic drill. I have been in Svezdnyy gorodok since they trained the cosmonauts there to combat vibration, yet our miner working with a pneumatic drill vibrates with this drill 6 hours every day. (laughter, applause) And we request that the drill be replaced by some other mechanism. Much has been said about this at authoritative gatherings, meetings, and conferences, but this has not reached our ministry and our science.

I wish to request on behalf of the Donbass miners that respected Anatoliy Petrovich Aleksandrov, president of the USSR Academy of Sciences, take up this matter and help science somehow replace for us this pneumatic drill, with which Stakhanov was cutting 50 years ago. One wonders what progress we are talking about?

I wish to divulge a document which angers me and to make it known. The Mining Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences Siberian Department has created a vibration-proof drill. Vibration is halved compared with that in use, and its noise is reduced considerably. Productivity is increased 20-30 percent. But the institute has been fighting for a long time and cannot get the Tomsk Electrical Engineering Plant to begin their manufacture.

So I wish to ask from this platform our dear executives of the USSR Ministry of Coal Industry and the USSR Gosplan: Why the so dishonorable, un-Soviet and even un-party attitude toward the miners' requests? It is time to have done with such an attitude. The miners are asking that their labor be alleviated and that their health be preserved so that they may provide the country with more coal. You are obliged, I believe, to meet immediately following the congress to settle this question. (applause)

Our highest pride is in Soviet Man, the ardent patriot and convinced fighter for the ideals of communism. These attributes of people were manifested particularly strongly in the period of preparation for the 40th anniversary of the victory, the jubilee of the Stakhanov movement and a fitting greeting of the 27th party congress.

Dozens of my fellow miners have repeatedly surpassed the labor records of Stakhanov. Nor have the metallurgists, machine builders and workmen of other sectors lagged behind. An increase in the intensity of competition and even greater smartness were brought about by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev's greetings to the collective of the 22d CPSU Congress, where the Stakhanov movement was born. Emulation of the exploit has redoubled people's forces.

The working people of our city of Stakhanov coped successfully with the quota of the 11th Five-Year Plan. I experience tremendous joy from the fact that my home town, which bears the name of a working man, was awarded for great, productive work the Order of the Labor Red Banner. (applause)

Comrades! It fell to the lot of my generation to perform great work on implementation of the second party program, which was adopted by the eighth party congress. We fulfilled it with honor.

Now we are confronted with immeasurably more complex tasks. They are expensively described in the Central Committee Political Report. They are formulated in the draft new version of our Lenin Party's program and have been unanimously approved by the communists and all working people.

The 27th CPSU Congress is beginning a difficult but great cause of a truly revolutionary nature and scale. The accomplishment of these tasks will require of us full input and the utmost self-discipline and creative ardor.

So it has always been. When the people have gotten down to business, they have resolved matters, and they will accomplish all tasks now also. But as before, so now also skeptics and doubters are encountered. I believe that if a leader pays lipservice to what is new and progressive, but in practice does nothing to bring about the necessary result, he should be kicked out lest he, as they say, "lie like a log in the way of our progress." (applause)

Particular hopes are placed in the youth. The situation now is such that it is necessary to once again outstrip time, boldly break through to tomorrow and conquer the deep-lying seams of progress. New records are needed today -- records of thought, records of creativity. This is within the capabilities of young, knowledgeable people devoted to the cause of the revolution. Worthily accomplishing this task is the highest happiness for the true Communist.

I declare on behalf of Communists of the older generations that we emphatically support the party's policy and the consistent activity of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo for strengthening the economic and defense might of our motherland and preserving peace on earth.

The policy pursued by the CPSU Central Committee is to our liking. And we will until the last beat of our hearts be active fighters for its implementation. We will not lower the honor and glory of our Communist Party, which was created by the ever-living great Lenin! (stormy, prolonged applause).

Vladimir Tractor Plant Secretary

WA260335 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 3 Mar 86 p 4

[Speech by V.Ya. Krasilshchikov, secretary of the party committee of the A.A. Zhdanov Vladimir Tractor Plant]

[Text] Dear Comrade Delegates! Each of us is at this time experiencing entire understandable feelings of pride in our Communist Party and a great sense of responsibility from membership thereof.

It is my great honor to declare to the congress delegates from this high platform on behalf of the Communists and the entire 17,000-strong collective of the Vladimir Tractor Plant warm and unanimous approval of our party Central Committee's Political Report which was delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. (applause) This document is a model of an in-depth and comprehensive Marxist-Leninist analysis of the actual state of affairs, scrupulousness in the formulation of questions and a precisely conceived action program.

The party Central Committee demands concerning the need for a considerable acceleration of the retooling of the national economy are close and comprehensible to us. We have seen from our own experience to what slowness and conservatism lead in this matter. Our plant is the coeval of the Soviet people's victory in the Great Patriotic War. The first 500 "Universals" were manufactured in April 1945. In the 40 years since then their manufacture has been increased to 36,500 tractors a year. Production of the engines with which one out of every five tractors manufactured in the country is fitted has been developed. The results of the past 5-year plan are no cause for concern, it would seem. Some 470 tractors were manufactured over and above the control figures. The 100-percent realization of contractual supplies to the consumers, and we have about 1,000 of them, was secured last year. The tractor is much in demand. The entire product has been certified in the top quality category, and 40 percent of the machines are supplied for export.

However, an evaluation of what has been achieved should proceed from the standpoint of the party's current requirements. The time of satisfaction with results that have been achieved and reporting successes is past. The more so in that there has been a manifest discrepancy at our enterprise in recent years between the levels of the manufactured product and the degree of equipment provision. Instrument production and engineering support have lagged behind in development considerably. The proportion of manual labor is still great, and obsolescent and worn equipment is used, which is being replaced very slowly. Despite the manifold appeals and specific proposals, for a long time the USSR Ministry of Agricultural Machine Building and the Gosplan failed to tackle the question of the plant's fundamental modernization. The habit of working without an eye to the future and making an insufficiently self-critical evaluation of the situation was reflected at all levels, evidently.

The fresh wind of the April changes altered the situation. Given the active influence of the party committee, the plant management has begun to pose questions more boldly, and the ministry and Obkom are now more attentive to our problems. Last November a decision was adopted on the creation of capacity for the manufacture of new tractors and engines. The state allocated R240 million for modernization and retooling. The plant essentially has to be reequipped from scratch. The manufacture of products is to increase by a factor of 1.6 without an increase in the number of workers.

Realization of the modernization is a particular concern of the party committee. The entire labor collective has joined in actively. The work being performed by the party committee is being conveyed to the shops, brigades, and work places; we are endeavoring to ensure that every worker has a clear idea of his role in tackling the tasks confronting us.

The first results have been obtained. The first 50 new T-30 tractors were manufactured a year ahead of schedule in honor of the 27th CPSU Congress! (applause) The productivity of the latter had been increased by a factor of 1.5 compared with those manufactured currently. The system of mounted implements makes it possible to increase from 80 to 120 the number of operations performed in the fields, vegetable plantations, orchards, and hothouses. The increased durability and reliability and the reduced fuel and oil consumption afford a possibility of reducing operating expenditure by more than R50 million per the annual manufacture of tractors. In a word, the start has been agreed. Government support has been obtained. The tractor has been built.

The plant party committee and the Communists have set the collective the task of reducing the time taken for the start of the series production of the new machine. We understand how difficult it is. The point being that decisions had been made earlier even in respect of individual directions of the plant's development, but their realization has been delayed and has not been carried through completely. The state of affairs is not changing quickly enough even today, unfortunately. The modernization has only just begun, but a work volume has been determined for the current year which is considerably below what was contemplated. And this is not an isolated instance. Yesterday my colleague from Ustinov cited an example of the ink on a decree not having dried before it was being disrupted. This is not the way. I would like to appeal to the ministry party committee secretaries for stricter control over the staff's work on fulfillment of government decrees. It is necessary to enhance their authority considerably. We will not manage to do anything without an emphatic strengthening of state discipline. (applause)

We have seen recently how people's mood has been changing for the better and how there has been a desire to work more enterprisingly and to embark more boldly on many practical matters, breaking with the old principles, traditions and many sets of instructions. There are such examples in our collective, too. Here is one: Speaking in Tselinograd, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev emphasized that scientific-technical progress had touched inadequately on animal husbandry. Understanding their role in realization of the country's Food Program, a group of plant enthusiasts, given the support of the party committee, designed and quickly, in 6 months, instead of the several years that it would have taken working in the old way, manufactured a special unit for the mechanization of laborious operations at small livestock units. The country now has many thousand such units.

The machine was manufactured on the basis of our tractor and performs fodder loading, shipping and distribution and livestock unit cleaning operations. Three models were tested in operation, and a new version of the machine was made with regard for agricultural specialists' observations. Tests are continuing in our, Vladimir, oblast, and also in Moscow and Kalinin Oblasts. This unit is much needed by the rural areas.

We are only concerned that the machine's fate could be lost in the paper go-around of every conceivable instance of coordination. The State Agrarian-Industrial Committee, Ministry of Machine Building for Animal Husbandry and Fodder Production, and Ministry of Tractor and Agricultural Machine Building should immediately settle the question of putting the unit in series production, otherwise the initiative and the time that has been gained will be unforgivably lost. (applause)

To ensure the speediest fulfillment of the tasks confronting the plant, constant concern is needed for the social development of the collective and, particularly, for an improvement in workers' housing conditions. The housing problem remains acute. We received with satisfaction the demand expressed in the Political Report on granting to enterprises big rights and independence in the solution of social questions.

Truly, it is no good shifting this concern solely to the state. We believe that there is potential locally also. In 1984 the Central Committee Politburo supported the initiative of the country's foremost collectives pertaining to the creation thanks to rational management of enterprise and oblast above-plan savings funds. This year the oblast is authorized, by way of an exception, to channel R10 million of such resources into the liquidation of dilapidated housing. This is good support, of course, but, we believe, the USSR Council of Ministers and the AUCCTU should make this practice not an exception but the rule on the basis of a specially formulated procedure of the formation and use of above-plan savings funds.

It would seem particularly clear today that the tasks which the congress is setting may only be tackled given a further improvement of the style of party leadership. It has to be acknowledged that reorganization is proceeding slowly so far. We are having difficulty abandoning outmoded forms of work.

Hackneyed stereotypes and excessive organization, rules and instructions dominate us unduly. There are still many meetings of various kinds, and too much store is set by the power of speeches and written measures. We all evidently need to depart more boldy from fixed routine. In a word, there is still much to be done to ensure that the role of the party committee, as an organ of political leadership, be on a par with modern demands.

Mikhail Sergeyevich's report spoke warmly about the working class and labor dynasties. Tremendous respect at our plant is enjoyed by the Utkin and Kostorskiy families, whose total length of service amounts to more than 130 years, and the Vasilyev family, whose members have worked 260 years at the plant, and we have hundreds of such dynasties. A traditional meeting of young workers and graduates of the sponsored schools was addressed by Nikolay Yeogorovich Ustinov, an instructor-foreman with a 30-year length of service. He recounted how in his footsteps had followed his daughter, Lyubov Nikolayevna, who now works in the motor shop, and warmly congratulated his Komsomol member grandson, Andrey, presenting to him a pass to the plant's vocational-technical school. All this is the best agitation for the title of Soviet worker! (applause)

Concern for the young reinforcement of the working class is part of the traditions of our plant. The party committee and the Komsomol committee are making extensive use in this work of the experience approved by the Central Committee Politburo of the Leningrad Oblast party organization. Today the plant school is a new modern complex furnished with highly productive equipment. Our school graduates skilled workers with high political and moral qualities. It is not fortuitous that Heroes of Labor and State and Lenin Komsomol Prize winners emerge from their ranks. It is on such people, those who possess a sense of what is new and aspire to achieve the best results, that the party committee primarily relies.

Our main thoughts are geared to the future. A great deal of difficult work lies ahead on realization of the party's course toward an acceleration of the country's socioeconomic development. Unflagging attention is being paid here to questions of a fundamental improvement in the quality of the manufactured product. As secretary of a party committee, I understand the concern which has been heard in a number of speeches of congress delegates in connection with the low efficiency of the work of certain research institutes. The sectorial Engines Institute is situated in the vicinity of the plant, practically on the same grounds. However, it is far from the solution of our most important problems and does not participate actively in raising the quality of the manufactured product. I support the proposals concerning the adoption of a law on quality and, consequently, the determination therein of measures of the research establishments' responsibility for the results of their work.

Our collective lives and works in a city which will soon be 880 years old. It is part of Russia's Golden Ring, and we have a Golden Gate, but the main wealth are the "golden" people, the pride of Vladimir soil. By their efforts the industry of our oblast fulfilled the 11th Five-Year Plan quotas ahead of schedule. In realizing the responsible socialist pledges they had assumed last year, the Vladimir people worked more than 3 days on saved material resources.

Comrades! In participating in the work of the congress each of us attends a higher school of party-mindedness, efficiency and practical action. Listening to the speeches of the congress' guests -- leaders of communist and workers parties -- one realizes once again what tremendous responsibility our party has for the fate of the Soviet people and all mankind. Our congress leaves no one indifferent, but fires everyone with a desire to work with redoubled energy.

The Communists and working people of the tractor plant and all Vladimir Oblast are fully resolved to implement the new designs of our glorious Lenin Party! (applause)

Azneft Drilling Foreman

WA260400 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 4 Mar 86 p 6

[Speech of Hero of Socialist Labor A.M. Amanov, drilling foreman of the "Azneft" Association's Ali-Bayramly Drilling Administration]

[Text] Comrade delegates! It was with a feeling of particular pride in our Lenin Party that we congress delegates, as did the whole Soviet people, perceived the pivotal significance of the document, the CPSU Central Committee Political Report, delivered by Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. We workers had long awaited such a Bolshevist-minded scrupulous and candid discussion. It began with the CPSU Central Committee April (1985) Plenum. As our people say: It's a load off the heart, we can work more easily.

Discussing the material of the CPSU Central Committee April Plenum in the brigade, one worker colorfully expressed his view thus: The plenum's decisions have extracted the latent energy from our hearts, given us strength and prompted us to advance and work at full stretch. The course of the congress and the comrades' speeches convincingly attest the vitality and timeliness of the tasks set by the party of an acceleration of socioeconomic development based on an intensification of production and scientific-technical progress.

The report we have just heard of Comrade Nikolay Ivanovich Ryzhkov, member of the CPSU Central Committee Politburo and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, translated the congress' political aims into the concrete language of practical deeds. It charted a broad prospect of economic and cultural building and our economy's movement toward a qualitatively new level.

A course toward the dynamic development of each republic, kray, and oblast and the fuller use of their reserves and possibilities can be clearly traced in the party's plans. For Azerbaijan, the coming years will also be a period of the dynamic growth of all sectors of the economy and the solution of social questions. The Main Directions envisage a 22- to 25-percent growth in industrial production. It is planned that the average annual agricultural product will increase 14-16 percent. The 12th Five-Year Plan is to be an important stage of the accomplishment of social tasks.

On behalf of the republic's Communists I propose approval of the Basic Guidelines for the Economic and Social Development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and the Period Through the Year 2000. (applause)

Comrades! Success and the practical accomplishment of the large-scale tasks put forward by the party will largely depend on the consciousness and organization and labor and political assertiveness of the working class and its vocational training. I do not conceal the fact that I, as an oil worker, in listening to the reports and the speeches of the congress delegates have somehow been particularly aware of my personal involvement in and responsibility for the fate of the accomplishment of the task set for our sector: raising the production of oil and gas condensate in the 12th Five-Year Plan to 625-640 million tons and of gas to 835-850 billion cubic meters.

I will say bluntly: Reaching these indicators will not be easy. But reaching the frontiers charted by the party is essential. What is needed is the smooth, precise work of the entire big oil industry: prospectors and geologists, drillers and repairmen, operators and machine builders and scientists and specialists -- in a word, all who are directly or indirectly connected with oil and gas production.

As the representative of the country's oldest oil-producing region, I wish to report to the congress that oil reserves here in Azerbaijan are far from exhausted. We have moved into promising deposits on shore and in the Caspian Sea and are employing progressive oil-recovery methods.

I have headed a drilling brigade for more than 20 years. Our collective has been coping confidently with the quotas for several 5-year plans now. We completed the 11th Five-Year Plan well. The drilling-progress plan was overfulfilled considerably, and an extra 17,000 meters of rock were drilled. We succeeded in doubling the planned drilling speed, raising productive time to 96 percent and saving approximately R1.5 million thanks to the rational use of resources. The current year has started pretty well, too. The precongress pledges were considerably exceeded. The brigade is now working on the account of the second quarter.

I am often asked: What is the secret? But there is essentially no secret; one only needs to know and love one's job.

Our brigade is like a single family welded together by a feeling of fellowship, comradeship, and mutual assistance. The backbone of the group are people who have worked together for 15-20 years, each knowing all drilling operations. High skills, strong labor and production discipline -- these are the guarantee of our steady work. This is why it is so important to display concern for the personnel and its retention and to improve qualifications and inculcate in everyone a heightened sense of responsibility for the assigned task.

Unfortunately, I have seen how experienced oil worker personnel are frequently dismissed. Difficulties and unsolved problems in pay and work conditions take their toll. The republic's oil workers have lost many of the privileges they enjoyed previously. These include length of service, payment for remote location, and others. We believe there should be concerned examination of these questions.

Comrades! I want particularly to speak about problems of drilling which disturb all the country's oil workers. If we wish to obtain lots of oil, we must abruptly change our attitude toward drilling and regard it as the decisive component.

Our "Aznevt" Association failed to fulfill the 5-year plan. And this was primarily because the drilling enterprises were over 400,000 meters of drilling in arrears. Serious shortcomings in the organization and performance of exploration and drilling operations, the high accident rate, and defects in the well-sinking process and low technological discipline were reflected.

We do not absolve ourselves of blame. But a bill has to be presented today also to those who are directly involved in questions of an improvement in the well program and the technology and techniques of sinking the wells and who design every well. We have the specialized major "AzNIPIneft" Institute, which is spending huge resources, but we are not aware of the due results. Drilling efficiency indicators are not improving and the accident rate is not declining. Is anyone considering the results of this accident rate?

I wish to comment unflatteringly on the work of the material-technical supply services. This could sound rude, but, comrades, is it order when the necessary bits and instruments are lacking and there is a shortage of turbodrills, resilient stabilizers even, centralizers, and much else without which normal operation is impossible. In a word, very many unsolved problems have accumulated in the sector. We request that Comrade Dinkov, minister of petroleum industry, investigate the urgent problems.

It is also legitimate today to pose the following question: What has happened? Quite recently, domestic drilling equipment enjoyed recognition? What has happened? Why is the level of scientific and design thought in this sector so much behind the demands of the times? One has the impression that there has been no serious, purposeful study of these questions in recent years.

Development of the fuel-energy complex is a task which, in terms of urgency, goes far beyond the confines of our country. All the socialist countries have an interest in this. Therefore we need to tackle it together, in close collaboration, as in a good collective. The scientific-technical and economic potential of the CEMA countries makes it possible to create perfectly modern highly productive equipment. I hope that we will be seeing at the oilfields in the not-too-distant future considerably more oilfield equipment manufactured in the CEMA countries. (applause)

Comrades! In the current 5-year plan it is intended to reorganize the structure of the management of drilling operations and to modernize operating and building new industrial engineering facilities for the drilling enterprises. This question has long disturbed us, and it is very important that the leadership of the Ministry of Petroleum Industry bring fulfillment of the outlined measures under strict control.

And one further point: Oil has been produced on Apsheron for over 100 years. In the last century, before the revolution, the barbaric exploitation of the deposits did tremendous harm to the environment; thousands of hectares of land were flooded with residual black oil and turned into swampland. This is now a dead zone, nothing grows there. It is painful to see these wounds inflicted on nature. I believe that this problem merits the closest, concerned attention on the part of scientists and competent state authorities, primarily the USSR Gosplan, which should allocate the necessary resources for this purpose.

Comrades! The party has put forward a wide-ranging program of creation and set difficult and crucial tasks. We are ready to tackle them. But for this we need lasting peace. We are grateful to the party Central Committee and the CPSU Central Committee Politburo for the constant concern to strengthen our motherland's defense might and for the great and persistent work to preserve peace on earth. (applause)

This gives us confidence in the country's bright future.

The 27th CPSU Congress will go down in history as a congress of quest and daring plans. And for us Communists there is no higher duty and honor than implementing by our labor the designs of the Lenin party. (applause)

GORBACHEV PROPOSES TEST BAN SUMMIT IN EUROPE

29 Mar Speech

PM301145 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Mar 86 First Edition p 1

[Text] Good evening, dear comrades.

At tonight's meeting I would like to share my views with you on the situation that has formed around the Soviet Union's moratorium on nuclear tests.

Several days ago the United States staged yet another nuclear explosion. It is clear to all of us that its timing was by no means accidental. The blast was staged on the eve of the ending of the Soviet Union's unilaterally declared moratorium. It was learned yesterday that in the next few days -- in the near future -- the United States intends to set off yet another nuclear device.

Soviet people, just as people of good will in all countries, are incensed by these actions of the United States. They write about this in their letters to the party's Central Committee and request that an assessment be made of the existing situation. They ask how should all this be understood? What conclusions should be drawn from this? Why did the United States take such a step? How does our country's leadership intend to act in these conditions?

We consider it our duty to respond to these messages. And this, in effect, is the reason for our meeting tonight.

I must tell you frankly that we regard the present actions of the American Administration, which is continuing nuclear tests despite pressing demands of the peoples, as a pointed challange to the Soviet Union, and not only to it but also to the whole world, to all peoples, including to its own people as well.

The question of stopping nuclear tests has acquired tremendous importance in conditions when whole mountains of inflammable nuclear material have been stockpiled in the world. And this is understandable.

First, the ending of nuclear tests is the most realistic way of achieving an end to the arms race. Without such tests it is impossible either to perfect or to develop [sozdarat] new types of nuclear arms. In short, it together with the United States and other nuclear powers we were to reach an accord on ending nuclear explosions this would make it possible to get the entire process of nuclear disarmament out of deadlock.

Furthermore, the continued testing inflicts a tremendous and, perhaps, not yet fully studied harm to nature, to that natural environment in which we all live. Do we not feel obliged to show concern for our own home? And not only for ourselves but also for our children and grandchildren.

And finally, in this difficult endeavor there is no need to start so speak from scratch. A definite road has already been traversed and joint experience acquired: What I mean is that tests in the atmosphere, in the water, and on land have not been conducted for many years. Nor have there been explosions in outer space.

It is after duly considering exactly these circumstances and on thoroughly weighing all the pros and cons that 8 months ago, on the 40th anniversary of the tragedy of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the Soviet Union came up with an initiative of extraordinary importance -- an end to all nuclear explosions both for military and peaceful purposes, and a call on the United States of America and other nuclear states to follow its example -- to start to move along the road of nuclear disarmament.

I have already had opportunity to say that in conditions of the unabating tension in the international situation this was not a simple decision for us to make. If you like, this step required both an awareness of the responsibility resting on the governments of nuclear powers and the necessary political will. In acting as it did the Soviet leadership had the mandate of its people, who know the price of peace and sincerely strive for its preservation and consolidation, for cooperation with all peoples.

Acting in this way, we proceeded from the deep conviction that the world in its development has entered such a stage which calls for new approaches to international security matters. Nowadays, in the nuclear and space era, one cannot think in the categories of the past. Everyone should ultimately come to realize that everything has radically changed. The question now concerns not only the preservation of peace but mankind's survival as well.

These are the motives for our decision to announce the unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests.

The good initiatives of the Soviet Union -- I am immensely pleased to say this -- has been regarded with understanding and widely endorsed in the world. Our action has been highly appreciated by the working people of all countries: Communists and Social Democrats, liberals and conservatives, Christians and Moslems, a multitude of public organizations, prominent political figures, scientists and cultural figures, and millions of ordinary people.

How did the other side conduct itself? I mean the U.S. Administration.

In words, it stands for the elimination of nuclear weapons. A good deal of statements on that score have been made. But in fact, a gap between words and practical policy exists. The U.S. Government continued to conduct nuclear tests despite the Soviet Union's call and example, despite persistent demands by the American people and by the peoples of the whole world.

We set certain hopes on the Geneva meeting with the President of the United States of America and expected to reach agreement with him on this matter as well. As you remember, reassuring statements were made there from both sides and jointly: that nuclear war is unacceptable, that such a war cannot be won, that the sides would not seek nuclear superiority.

The results of the Geneva meeting prompted us to take yet another good-will step: to extend the moratorium until 31 March of this year. We confirmed thereby in actual fact the responsible attitude toward the dialogue between the leaders of the two powers and hoped, of course, for steps in reply by the U.S. Administration.

I think you will agree that our statement of 15 January this year which set out a concrete and realistic program for the elimination of nuclear arms -- is yet another illustration of our real intentions -- to put an end to nuclear confrontation. When taking this step, our least thought was how to gain extra propaganda "points," as journalists say in such cases, to outsmart or outperform the other side. We consider such an approach to the burning problem of contemporary politics unacceptable. Our actions were motivated by our responsibility both to the Soviet people and to the other peoples, the responsibility for the removal of the nuclear threat and for the preservation and strengthening of peace.

In February the leaders of six nonaligned states, expressing the dominant sentiments in world public opinion, urged the leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States to refrain from nuclear explosions until a new Soviet-American meeting. We consented to this.

It seemed natural on the part of the U.S. Administration to support the Soviet Union's initiative with practical actions and to respond to the expectations of the peoples, to take precise actions to confirm its own statements made in Geneva. But that did not happen.

Everything shows that the U.S. ruling group has placed the narrow selfish interests of the military-industrial circles above the interests of the whole of mankind and its own people. The manner in which this is done is also quite important: pointedly, arrogantly, and with disregard for the opinion of the world community. There is neither a sense of realism nor of responsibility.

It is becoming increasingly obvious that the U.S. ruling circles are continuing to emphasize pursuing a militaristic line and are banking on force so as to dictate their will to other countries and peoples. In process, statements are made for everybody to hear that it is precisely this way that they will also influence the Soviet Union's policy.

What can be said about that? These are attempts using unsuitable [negodnyv] means. Nobody has ever succeeded in using power politics methods against our state, while now they are simply ridiculous. The peoples of other countries are also ever more vigorously rejecting the policy of diktat in international relations, which is already out of date.

The Soviet political leadership is now faced with the far from simple question of how to react to such behavior by the United States.

Our stand is clear. We believe that the world has now entered a period of crucial decisions. Yes, precisely a period of responsible decisions. We will not deviate from the policy of preserving and strengthening peace, which was most definitely confirmed by the 27th Congress of the CPSU. Fulfilling the wish of the Soviet people, the Soviet state will further build up efforts to ensure universal security. We will do that in interaction with all countries and their peoples.

As to our unilateral moratorium, I can say that it is, as before, in effect until 31 March 1986. But even after that date, as it was announced, we will not conduct nuclear explosions, if the United States acts likewise. We are again giving the U.S. Administration a chance to make a responsible decision -- to end nuclear explosions.

Failing that, the Soviet Union will resume testing. This must be absolutely clear. We regret it, but we will be forced to do so, since we cannot forego our own security and that of our allies. I am saying all this, so that there should be no reticence on that issue.

At the same time I stress again and again that our main intention is to stop the nuclear weapons race. The simplest, most explicit, and effective step in that direction would be to end nuclear explosions.

We have proposed that talks be started without delay on a total ban on nuclear weapons testing, including verification [kontrol] issues. All variants are acceptable to the Soviet Union -- bilateral Soviet-American talks, tripartite talks with the participation of Britain, and multilateral ones within the framework of the Geneva disarmament conference.

Now we have drawn the conclusion that the situation requires immediate action. It is not yet too late to halt the nuclear arms race. The first major stride in that direction is needed. An end to nuclear testing by all, first of all by the Soviet Union and the United States as well as by the other nuclear powers, could be such a step. We attach tremendous significance to carrying out this task which concerns the destiny of all peoples.

I am ready to meet President Reagan in the nearest future in London or Rome, or in any other European capital that will agree to receive us, in order to reach agreement on this question. And I do not see any insurmountable obstacles to this -- political, technical, or any other. What is needed is the necessary political will and understanding of our mutual responsibility. We propose to meet, exchange views on this crucial problem, and issue instructions to draft an appropriate agreement.

We hope that this proposal of the Soviet Union will be duly appraised and correctly understood by the President of the United States of America, by the governments of the countries of Europe and Asia, Africa and Latin America, of the whole world.

Time is not waiting. On behalf of the Soviet people we call on the American people and their government, on the peoples and governments of all countries to vigorously take practical actions to enable the ban on nuclear explosions to become a fact, an immutable norm of inter-state relations.

Mankind is standing on a line that requires the maximum of responsibility. The aftermath of the nuclear arms race can become dangerously unpredictable. We must act in concert. This applies to each and all. This is what I wanted to tell you, dear comrades, at our meeting tonight.

Good-bye.

U.S. To Study Proposals

LD292023 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 2005 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, 29 Mar (TASS) -- Petroski, official spokesman for the White House, stated in Santa Barbara (California), where President Reagan is resting, that the administration will refrain from any reaction to the speech by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee, for the time being.

In the words of the White House spokesman, an official statement will be made after the Soviet Union's proposals have been studied by the administration.

U.S. To Continue Tests

LD300322 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0255 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, 30 Mar (TASS) -- Throwing down a challenge to world public opinion, the Reagan administration has announced its intention to continue testing. A special statement, read out in Santa Barbara on behalf of the President by a White House spokesman, stresses that the U.S. stance regarding a moratorium on nuclear tests "has not changed." As the document asserts, halting nuclear explosions is not in the interests of the United States.

The overwhelming majority of the U.S. population and the peoples of other countries demand a halt to nuclear testing as the first real step on the path to nuclear disdisarmament.

Adelman Confirms Response

LD290625 Moscow TASS in English 0617 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Washington, March 29 TASS -- Kenneth Adelman, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, has said that the United States will go on testing nuclear weapons.

Speaking in an ASSOCIATED PRESS interview, he claimed that the tests were needed "to make sure that the safety and reliability of nuclear weapons is as high as we can make them".

The contention that nuclear testing is needed to maintain the "reliability" of the U.S. nuclear potential is among Washington's familiar propaganda ploys meant to cover up its unwillingness to discontinue nuclear blasts.

U.S. Attitude 'Unconstructive'

LD300930 Moscow TASS in English 0924 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Washington March 30 TASS -- The speech by the general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee on Soviet television has become the major news in the programmes of U.S. television networks. In their newscasts the ABC, NBC, CNN and other leading television networks amply cited the text of the speech and stressed its immense importance.

As for the U.S. Administration, it took up an unconstructive stand towards the Soviet initiatives again. A White House spokesman made a statement in which he reiterated that the U.S. stance towards the moratorium on nuclear tests had not changed. He alleged that this measure was not in the interests of the security of the United States and its allies.

This approach came under fire from Paul Warnke, a well-known U.S. public figure, former head of the U.S. delegation at the Strategic Armaments Limitation Talks. Warnke said that he believed the administration was committing a very grave error. In his opinion, the moves to further build up nuclear arms led to undermining U.S. security.

Response to Gorbachev Reviewed

LD301349 Moscow TASS in English 1342 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 30 TASS -- The Soviet Union has once against appealed to the American people and their government, to the peoples and governments of all countries to apply vigorous, practical actions so that the ban on nuclear explosions become a fact, an immutable norm of interstate relations. Such is the principal message of press, radio televison and wire-service comments around the world on Mikhail Gorbachev's televised speech.

The USSR reaffirms its determination to follow the course towards preserving peace, conformed with full certainty by the 27th CPSU Congress. In exercising the will of the Soviet people, the Soviet state will continue building up efforts with a view to ensuring universal security. The Soviet Union will do that jointly with all countries and their peoples.

The mass media in socialist countries give the full text of the Soviet leader's statement. "Stopping the nuclear arms race is the Soviet Union's chief intention," stresses the Bulgarian newspaper RABOTNICHESKO DELO.

The Soviet leader expressed his readiness to meet U.S. President Reagan in any European city at any time for talks on a comprehensive ban on nuclear weapons tests, observed a commentator of the American NBC television network. Gorbachev said he saw no insurmountable obstacles to that -- political, technical, or any other, the commentator pointed out.

The American Administration has hastily rejected the latest Soviet peace initiative. As to the nuclear test moratorium, says the White House statement, "The U.S. position has not changed." The White House announced that "a moderate level of nuclear testing is needed to ensure the continue reliability, safety and effectiveness of our nuclear deterrent."

White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan said in Santa Barbara, California, that the administration was not going to cancel the nuclear test to be set off in Nevada in mid-April. American observers pointed out in this connection that the Pentagon needed nuclear explosions for continuing work on first-strike weapons -- Midgetman and MX missiles -- and implementing the "star wars" programme directed at gaining military superiority.

The statement rejects the suggestion for an early summit meeting in Europe to conclude an agreement banning nuclear tests on the pretext that "meetings at the highest level should deal with the entire range of important issues between our two countries."

The White House's negative response has run into criticism on the part of prominent political and public figures in the United States. Paul Warnke, former chief American negotiator at Strategic Arms Limitation Talks, described the administration's response as a grave mistake. In his view, the further buildup of nuclear armaments was undermining the United States' security.

The White House statement cannot be regarded as a straight answer to the proposal involving the major question of our time. Nations all over the world demand that the ban on nuclear explosions become a fact, an immutable form of interstate relations.

THE NEW YORK TIMES quotes Gorbachev as saying that the actions by the American Administration, which is continuing nuclear tests despite pressing demands of the peoples, are regarded in the USSR as a pointed challenge to the Soviet Union, and not only to it but also to the whole world, to all peoples, including to its own people as well. Unless the United States responded to the Soviet Union's appeal, said a commentator of the American ABC television network, the USSR would have to resume its nuclear testing that was suspended in August last year. The USSR would have to do that for it could not forego its own security and that of its allies.

There is no task more important than invigorating the campaign for the termination of any nuclear blasts, eliminating nuclear weapons and all other types of weapons of mass annihilation, and preventing the militarization of outer space. This has been underlined by the participants in a world peace forum in the Austrian city of Graz. They stressed the importance of the peace initiatives advanced by the Soviet Union, noting that these initiatives were meeting approval and support of the world public.

REUTER news agency stressed that Gorbachev, while giving a fresh impetus to the Soviet campaign for the prohibition of nuclear testing, urged Reagan to meet as soon as possible to discuss the moratorium issue. According to Western diplomats, the proposal would generate political pressure on the Reagan administration in favour of displaying a readiness for disarmament.

The Soviet Union thrice extended its unilateral moratorium on nuclear explosions, recalled a commentator of the Japanese NHK Radio and Television Corp., assessing Gorbachev's speech as yet another attempt to influence the United States and to show that Moscow was doing its utmost to achieve the termination of nuclear testing. The Soviet Union was pressing the U.S. Administration to adopt a responsible political decision on ending nuclear blasts, stressed the Japanese news agency KYODO TSUSHIN. The Soviet Union accused Washington, it said, of placing the selfish interests of the military-industrial circles above the interests of all of mankind.

CEMA SCIENTIFIC-TECHNICAL COMMITTEE MEETS

LD280636 Moscow Domestic Service in Russian 2004 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Text] A regular session of the CEMA Committee for Scientific-Technical Cooperation took place in Moscow on 26-27 March. Representatives of Bulgaria, Hungary, Vietnam, the GDR, the Republic of Cuba, Mongolia, Poland, Romania, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia took part in the session. The committee focused its attention on questions connected with implementing the CEMA member-states comprehensive program of scientific and technical progress through the year 2000; perfecting the work of the committee; implementing the decisions of the 41st Extraordinary CEMA session and the appropriate decisions of the council's executive committee, and mapping out specific measures for their implementation. The session took place in an atmosphere of friendship, mutual understanding, and constructive comradely cooperation.

Poland's Szalajda Comments

LD281452 Warsaw PAP in English 0008 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, March 27: The 34th session of the Scientific-Technical Cooperation Committee of the CEMA wound up in Moscow today.

The Polish delegation was headed by Vice Premier Zbigniew Szalajda who is chairman of the government committee for science and technological progress.

In a statement for PAP correspondent, Vice Premier Zbigniew Szalajda stated that: "The debates of the committee were very much matter-of-fact. Out of five key directions which are discussed in the comprehensive programme, at the current meeting we discussed and signed two very important general agreements.

"The first, in the field of biotechnology, encompassing the whole food bloc, health and natural environmental protection and the second, not less important, on new technologies and materials. This field will also decide about the further development of construction, material savings, etc."

The vice premier went on to say:

"During the meeting important decisions concerning the beginning of work on the comprehensive system of scientific-technological information were also reached.

"Besides that many organizational matters -- difficult issues and sometimes even controversial ones -- were discussed. Their solution should however secure the efficient realization of the whole comprehensive programme.

"It is worth underscoring that the date lines are very stretched. In the first half of this year all agreements between direct executors of the programme -- enterprises, scientific-research institutions, etc -- should be put into detail."

"In other words, the whole phase of planning work should be finished in the first half of this year," stated Zbigniew Szalajda.

KORIONOV REVIEWS WEEK'S WORLD EVENTS

PM301750 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 30 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[Vitaliy Korionov "International Review"]

[Text] Main Direction

On the front page of today's issue of PRAVDA you, Comrade Readers, have read the address on Soviet Television by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. It is devoted to a question which has assumed tremendous significance in the present situation -- the ending of nuclear tests. It is still possible to halt the nuclear arms race. Urgent actions are needed. This is precisly what the Soviet Union is insistently calling for.

What we have is yet another convincing piece of evidence of how the CPSU Central Committee is fulfilling the assignment given to it by the 27th congress -- to strive, consistently, persistently, and according to plan, to achieve the solution of the problems of international security by orienting the Soviet Union's foreign policy toward unswerving pursuit of a course of peaceful coexistence: toward firmness in upholding our principles and positions; toward tactical flexibility; and toward readiness for mutually acceptable compromises; and an orientation toward dialogue and mutual understanding.

"The contemporary world," M.S. Gorbachev said in his Kremlin speech on 26 March, "and we do not tire of repeating this, is complex and multifaceted. Today the world community comprises very disparate countries. Each of them has its own past, its own traditions, its own national values, and its own specific features. But they all uphold sovereignty and legitimately want to make their own contribution to world politics. A realistic course cannot be pursued if this fundamental distinctive feature of the contemporary world is not taken into account. I want to emphasize that a realization of this and a respectful attitude toward the interests of other states constitute the alpha and omega of the Soviet Union's foreign policy."

The 27th CPSU Congress proposed the creation of an all-embracing system of international security and the practical implementation of this proposal would have a particularly salutary effect on the normalization of the situation in a world so full of contradictions. The year 1986, which was proclaimed International Year of Peace by the United Nations, could become the 1st year of the creation of such a security system and each subsequent year would become a milestone on the path toward the total liberation of mankind from nuclear weapons.

The normalization of the situation on the world's ocean and sea-lanes could play a major role in this process. Imperialism has made a practice of the notorious "gunboat diplomacy." These days, such "diplomacy" carried out with the aid of aircraft carriers and hundreds of carrier-based aircraft equipped with the latest weapons systems is in fact being transformed into state terrorism and ends up as military calamities for the peoples. Graphic evidence of this is the present situation in the Mediterranean Sea over which now lies the grim shadow of the huge bulk of American warships which are ready to bring death.

But the Mediterranean Sea which was the cradle of many civilizations merits an incomparably better fate. The proposals repeatedly made by the Soviet Union concerning the extension to this region of coordinated measures of trust, the reduction of armed forces, the withdrawal from the Mediterranean of ships carrying nuclear weapons, and other similar steps are aimed precisely at this. However, the USSR's proposals are coming up against the dogged resistence of those who are seeking to transform the Mediterranean Sea into an "internal sea" of NATO in which the U.S. 6th Fleet would hold sway without restriction.

This is why the Soviet Union's new initiative formulated in M.S. Gorbachev's speech at a dinner in honor of the visit to the USSR by Chadli Bendjedid, president of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria and secretary general of the National Liberation Front Party, was greeted everywhere with such attention.

In principle there is no need for the Soviet Union to have its Navy in the Mediterranean Sea on a permanent basis. If the United States, located thousands of miles from the Mediterranean were to remove its fleet, the Soviet Union would do this at the same time. We are prepared to enter into talks on this issue without delay. At the first stage of such negotiations, in the USSR's opinion, no restructions would be introduced on the naval activity and naval armaments of littoral Mediterranean states. But subsequent steps to strengthen security in this region could be defined, taking into account the Soviet proposals contained in the 15 January statement.

The summit-level Soviet-Algerian talks which took place in Moscow showed that the Soviet Union is strengthening its solidarity with the forces of national and social liberation and is firmly following the line of close cooperation with countries of a socialist orientation, with revolutionary-democratic parties, and with the Nonaligned Movement. The Soviet-Algerian talks which were held in an atmosphere of friendship and mutual understanding and confirmed the closeness or coincidence of the stances of the two sides, were a substantial contribution to the cause of strengthening world peace.

Attempt Against Peace

The events of recent days have confirmed most obviously that certain circles in Washington are taking dangerous steps which are deliberately aimed at creating new "hotspots" on the planet and at tying even tighter knots in interstate relations.

U.S. warships carried out a provocative act for intelligence purposes in Soviet territorial waters off the shores of the Crimea; an ostentatious nuclear explosion was carried out in Nevada; U.S. Armed Forces launched military operations off the coast of Libya; and not limiting itself to the violently hostile propaganda campaign against Nicaragua, the White House in essence strove to kindle a military conflagaration in this region too.

The administration is not only speeding up the implementation of the "star wars" program in the United States itself, but is also intensifying the pressure on its partners in an attempt to place the physical and intellectual potential of the FRG, Britain, Japan, and Italy at the service of its militarist scheme. At the same time, Washington is increasingly unceremoniously raising its hand against the Soviet-U.S. 1972 ABM Treaty and other international agreements.

All these are not separate, isolated acts but components of a deliberate course. Two main directions can be traced particularly clearly in its implementation. First, the attempt to change the international climate and to ensure that the "spirit of Geneva" which engendered hopes throughout the world, including in the United States, might evaporate as soon as possible which would give the forces of militarism the opportunity to open even wider the floodgates of the arms race. Second, the desire by any route, including the use of arms, to impose on countries and peoples which have chosen an independent path of development a policy which suits Washington and to force them to bow to U.S. diktat.

What are the reasons for the intensification of Washington's aggressiveness? One thinks that the main reason lies in the desire of the present ruling elite in Washington to regain at any price the positions lost by imperialism and to implement a policy of social revenge. (F. Knelman) a professor at Montreal University, states in his book "Reagan, God, and the Bomb": "The activity of this administration, which has at its disposal the instruments for destroying the 20th and even the 21st centuries, is directed by people who think in terms of the 19th century."

The ruling circles of the United States clearly have no constructive response to the program of peace and social progress put forward by the 27th CPSU Congress. This is why Washington continues to cling so doggedly to the policy of yesteryear. Of course, the politicians there realize that it is today no longer possible to tilt openly at negotiations between states. They therefore pretend that they are also in favor of negotiations but only those in which the United States might operate from a position of military superiority. The military might of the United States, the head of the U.S. Administration reiterates, is "America's trumpcard."

Such a stance is nurtured not only by anticommunist prejudices which are deeply rooted among the inhabitants of the White House. No small role is played here too by the fact that ultra-right-wing circles in the United States were roused to fury by the "concessions" which, in their opinion, the President made at the Soviet-U.S. meeting in Geneva last November. And these circles are exerting ever intensifying pressure on the President, acting in accordance with the motto: "To the right, more to the right!"

Accords have difficulty fitting into the framework of such a policy. Any constructive proposal of ours is turned down in the U.S. capital either straightaway or else by heaping up "conditions" and "reservations." Let us recall: How many years has Washington given assurances that it is in favor of agreements on arms reduction and, they say, the whole point is that the USSR is opposed to verification [kontrol]. We only had to declare that the USSR is open to verification [kontrol] for those gentlemen to lose all interest in verification [kontrol].

Or this: Washington does not stint on rhetoric in an attempt to give an assurance that the administration is seeking to "make nuclear weapons obsolete and impotent." And so the USSR takes steps which indeed lead to this goal. But, THE WASHINGTON POST attests, this immediately caused indignation in Washington where the USSR's stance was declared to be a far-fetched problem. And in response a hasty nuclear explosion in Nevada followed.

The USSR's moratorium of many months demonstrated a high degree of responsibility for the fate of peace, but by its Nevada explosion, the U.S. Administration showed once again that it lacks such responsibility; the USSR is doing everything in its power to implement the idea of a nuclear-free world, but the United States is blowing up this very idea -- those are the real facts. They cannot be concealed.

However, the powers that be in the United States do not care for the truth. In attempts to justify their aggressive actions they even bring into play allegations about an intrusion into Honduras by Nicaraguan troops. Using this pretext, the White House pushed through the Senate a decision on the allocation of $100 million for counterrevolutionary gangs of the U.S. mercenaries.

Such are Washington's morals. Describing the atmosphere that prevails there, the U.S. journalist A. Lewis wrote on 24 March: "There has not been such a malicious atmosphere in our country for many years like that which Washington has experienced in the period preceding the House vote on aid for the 'contras'... Our President is simply obsessed with this topic. He is pursuing his own aims without heed for common sense, humanity, or security."

No to Adventurism

U.S. Secretary of State G. Shultz, who has toured countries of NATO's southern flank, declared: Countries that are friendly toward the United States must "give a standing ovation" to U.S. actions against Libya. In fact, Washington is hearing, instead of applause, increasingly vehement condemnation of its aggressive actions.

Angry protests by the peoples against the nuclear explosion in Nevada and against the brigandage of the Pentagon military in the Gulf of Sidra are merging into one mighty stream.

Soviet workers angrily denounce the actions of the U.S. militarists at protest rallies which are being held in various regions of our country.

The militarist course of the U.S. Administration is encountering a strengthening rebuff in the states of the nonsocialist world too, including in the United States itself. The following fact is symbolic in its way: The day after the nuclear explosion in Nevada, the third largest U.S. city -- Chicago -- declared itself to be a nuclear weapon-free zone. The number of such cities in the United States is already approaching 110.

In parallel, there is growing concern and indignation at the Pentagon's piratical actions against sovereign Libya. The alarm is being sounded not just by peace-loving progressive public organizations and movements. In one form or another the U.S. brigandage in Libyan waters has been condemned by the governments of many countries, inlcuding certain NATO members. Arab states declared solidarity with Libya and the Non-aligned Movement condemned the provocative U.S. action. Washington found itself in a situation reminiscent of isolation. Under these conditions, the Pentagon announced an early end to the U.S. Navy's maneuvers off the shores of Libya.

Opposition to the adventurous course of the "war party" across the ocean assumes diverse forms. New sections of the U.S. population are beginning to acquire a better awareness of the real essence of the "star wars" program. The growth of opposition to this venture among scientists is characteristic. THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER recently cited data attesting to the fact that more than 3,100 professors, including 55 percent of the professors and instructors in the physics faculties of 20 leading universities of the country, and also more than 2,100 postgraduate students and scientific workers have already pledged not to participate in the implementation of "star wars" plans. Among those who have set down their signatures are 14 Nobel prize winners.

The administration's course toward overthrowing the legitimate government of Nicaragua by violent means is encountering substantial resistance in the country, including in the Congress. A public opinion poll recently conducted in the country has yielded some curious results: 60 percent of those polled approved of the fact that the majority of members of the House of Representatives of the Congress did not submit to pressure from the White House on the question of allocating an injection of $100 million for the killers from the "contra" gangs who are suffering defeat.

In conclusion, here is yet another characteristic episode that has occurred during the past week. The Government of Brazil has protested to Washington over a speech by the head of the White House in which it was alleged that "Brazilian terrorists" are being trained in Nicaragua for action against the legitimate Government of Brazil. The Washington purveyors of disinformation who have been seized by the arm were forced to try to wriggle out of it: They began to assert that it was a question of the presence in Nicaragua of certain "Brazilian radicals." After this, the Brazilian newspapers wrote ironically that by "Brazilian radicals" Washington meant "Brazilian doctors who are treating Nicaraguans, or students helping the Nicaraguan peasants harvest coffee." The capital's newspaper JORNAL DE BRASILIA writes: The United States is inventing the most absurd arguments in order to present Nicaragua as a lethal threat to its security. The U.S. President thinks that he has the right to be the policeman of Latin America, and he wants to turn the continent once again into the U.S. backyard. The Latin American peoples, however the newspaper observes, resolutely reject this cynical and brazen policy.

BOGACHEV OPTIMISTIC ON UN'S YEAR OF PEACE

LD290346 Moscow in English to North America 2300 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Vladimir Bogachev commentary from the "Outlook" program]

[Excerpts] The United Nations has proclaimed this year an International Year of Peace. In this connection, the Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has sent a message to the United Nations Secretary General Perez de Cuellar. Our news analyst Vladimir Bogachev comments. Here is what he writes:

The motto of the year is Peace and a Future for Humanity. People in the Soviet Union are hoping for tangible practical steps to be taken this year to rid present and future generations of the threat of a nuclear catastrophe. The Soviet Union recently advanced a comprehensive program of nuclear disarmament.

This year provides a chance to agree on a comprehensive nuclear test ban. The Soviet Union has gone a long way to promote such an accord. It extended its nuclear moratorium twice and is ready to accept any measures to verify compliance with a test ban in the Soviet Union and in the United States. The continuing blasts in Nevada seem to be the only roadblock. This year could also produce an agreement to scrap, on a mutual basis, Soviet and American medium-range missiles in Europe. Here too the Soviet Union has done everything for an agreement to be reached. It has unilaterally reduced the number of its missiles, suggested effective verification, and displayed a readiness to resolve the issue without any linkages. And here too the Western response evokes nothing but apprehension. For example, United States cruise missiles in Federal Germany are this month to be placed on operational duty. This year too could be used to set up a structure for a cooperation in preventing an arms race in space and in using space exclusively for peaceful purposes. But NATO seems to be in a rush to set up a totally different sort of structure whose one pillar is an agreement on collaborating on the "star wars" program signed by the United States with Federal Germany the other day.

In the light of all this does humanity stand a chance of reaching peace, security, and disarmament? The Soviet Union's answer is in the affirmative. The International Year of Peace should go down in history as one laying the foundations for a comprehensive system of international security. Each subsequent year until the end of the century should become a landmark in ridding humanity of all nuclear weapons.

FURTHER REPORTS ON U.S. ACTIONS AGAINST LIBYA

Security Council Condemnation

LD282221 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1545 GMT 28 Mar 86

[From "The World Today" program presented by Vsevolod Shishkovskiy]

[Text] Washington's aggressive actions against Libya have been roundly condemned by the participants in an emergency session of the UN Security Council in New York. Representatives of different countries view them as a provocation planned in advance, which threatens peace and security in the southern Mediterranean. This was stated, in particular, by representatives of Algeria, Syria, Yugoslavia, Iran, and India. These acts of banditry and international terrorism, they said, are a challenge to the whole of world public opinion and a flouting of generally recognized civilized relations.

The Soviet Union submitted for the consideration of the Security Council a draft resolution proposing that the U.S. armed aggression against Libya be resolutely condemned. The document expresses a demand for the immediate halting of all hostile actions against that soverieign state, and the withdrawal of the U.S. Armed Forces from the region without delay.

Having encountered sharp protests throughout the world, Washington was forced to declare a halt to its maneuvers in the Gulf of Sidra. The threat of new armed action against Libya remains, however. As has been stated by a representative of the U.S. Defense Department, American warships will not leave the Mediterranean. This was also confirmed by Weinberger, the secretary of defense, who again alleged that Libya has threatened the United States.

We shall return to the shores of Libya at any time, he said, when required, or when we consider it opportune or necessary.

Libyan Envoy Appreciates Support

LD282035 Moscow TASS in English 1909 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] New York March 28 TASS -- Mohamed al-Zarruq Rajab, charge d'affaires ad interim of the permanent mission of Libya at the U.N., has stated that Libya highly appreciates and supports new Soviet initiatives on the Mediterranean aimed at turning that region into a zone of stable peace and cooperation. He addressed the Security Council which is discussing the situation in the southern Mediterranean. Mohamed al-Zarruq Rajab said that Libya urged all the countries of the Mediterranean region to actively support those initiatives.

The Libyan representative stressed that the U.S. policy provoked regional conflicts and threatened international peace and security, that it was directed against independent nations.

Yuriy Dubinin, USSR ambassador to the U.N., who spoke at a press conference at its headquarters pointed out that the previous Soviet proposals aimed at achieving the objectives of peace and cooperation in the Mediterranean remained in force. At the same time, the USSR is ready to go further.

If the U.S. situated thousands of miles from that region withdrew its fleet from there, the Soviet Union would do the same, for it is ready to immediately start talks on this problem.

The Soviet representative emphasized that further steps aimed at the consolidation of security in the Mediterranean could be mapped out with due account for the Soviet proposals expressed in the statement of January 15, 1986, on the elimination of mass destruction weapons.

Conflict 'No Accident'

LD282208 Moscow World Service in English 1710 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Mikhail Glebov commentary]

[Text] The all-embracing system of international security proposed by the Soviet Union provides, among other things, for a peaceful settlement of conflicts and renunciation of the use of force or threats to use force.

The events in the southern Mediterranean have shown once again how topical that problem is. The provocative war games of the 6th U.S. Fleet off Libya's shores were turned into an armed conflict during which American warplanes delivered a strike at Libya. The American Administration hurriedly declared the conflict to be of an accidental nature. It presents the Americans as almost victims of the conflict and talks about international maritime rights. But one may ask, how in the first place did American naval ships find themselves of the Libyan coast, thousands of kilometers from the United States? Mikhail Glebov of our staff writes the following:

No, the conflict was no accident, and the Americans came to the Gulf of Sidra not in support of the conception of international maritime rights. The administration had prepared the escalation of the conflict a long time ago and it did not hide these preparations. The American ABC television company, citing official sources, reported that President Reagan had approved this tough action plan against Libya following the terrorist acts in the Vienna and Rome airports. Indeed the anti-Libyan campaign launched a long time ago was based precisely on accusing Libya on international terrorism. But the thing is that the American accusation is a lie from beginning to end.

Let us recall the events of recent months. The present anti-Libyan campaign of the Reagan administration began in December after terrorist acts had been perpetrated at the airports in Rome and Vienna. The Reagan administration accused Libya of masterminding these acts. American spokesmen promised to supply irrefutable evidence but failed to do that. The United States State Department has gone out of its way to advertise the book "Libya Under Al-Qadhdhafi" which supposedly supplied the missing evidence.

The BBC has said, however, that the book contains nothing that is new. The United States has failed to supply any photographs or facts. From the very beginning, U.S. accusations clearly appeared to be figments of the imagination. In its official letter to the United Nations Security Council Libya condemned the acts of terrorism and emphasized that it had nothing to do with them whatsoever. The Libyan Government said that it is prepared to cooperate with other nations in combatting terrorism and that it had already begun to cooperate with Austria in that.

The minister of the interior of Austria, where the terrorist action was perpetrated, said that he had no evidence linking Libya to that action. He also said that the terrorists seized by the police said that they had never been to Libya and that they had never been trained there. The list of examples of that kind goes on and on, but the picture is clear as it is: The only conclusion one can draw is that the Americans have been deceived by their own government. The true state of affairs was concealed from them and primitive tricks were employed to impose on them a fabricated version of the course of events. All this is done to cover up the true nature of United States policy towards Libya.

The objective of that policy, proclaimed a long time ago, is to topple the Libyan Government.

After the Libyan revolution the Americans lost military facilities there and the control of Libyan oil. That was when the United States began drawing up scenarios for wiping out the recalcitrant government and replacing it by a client regime. Back in 1981 the American INVESTIGATIVE REPORTER magazine carried a report about plans by the CIA to assassinate Al-Qadhdhafi. In this way real terrorism evaluated by the United States Administration to government policy level has become apparent in spite of the allegations about the so-called Libyan terrorism.

U.S. 'Badly Mistaken'

LD282318 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1800 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Leonid Rassadin report from Tripoli; from the "Vremya" newscast]

[Text] Here in Tripoli, once again you realize just how badly mistaken the Washington administration was in hoping to cause panic among the Libyans, to intimidate them, to compel this Arab state by brute force to give up its independent, anti-imperialist course. Studies in the schools and in other educational establishments were not interrupted for a single day. Building work continues at full swing. As always, there are a lot of merchant ships in the port. Nevertheless, even outwardly there is much in Tripoli these days that reminds one of the alarming events. The piractical action by the U.S. brass-hats are described here as clear confirmation of the policy of state terrorism that is being carried out by the Washington administration against dozens of states in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. The Libyans are filled with resolve to defend the independence of their homeland and to move further along the path of progressive reform that they have chosen.

Bogachev Commentary

LD281959 Moscow TASS in English 1854 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 28 TASS -- By TASS military writer Vladimir Bogachev. As a result of the aggressive actions by the United States and its allies, the Mediterranean area has been turned of late into one of troubled areas of the globe. The piratic attack of Israeli planes on Tunisian territory, the interception of an Egyptian airliner by U.S. warplanes over the Mediterranean, the United States' provocations against Libya and finally, the United States' "punitive" operation against the Libyan Jamahiriyah, have aggravated the situation in the region to the utmost.

The U.S. Sixth Fleet equipped with nuclear missile weapons is the main source of tension in the Mediterranean. Washington gives assistance to the Israeli militarists who stage aggressive actions against countries.

The U.S. fleet in the Mediterranean also threatens the security of the Soviet Union and its allies and friends. This is why the Soviet Union has to keep its ships permanently in the Mediterranean. There are no other reasons for the stay of Soviet naval ships in the Mediterranean Sea.

Guiding itself by the concept of a comprehensive system of international security set out at the 27th CPSU Congress, seeking to ease tension in the vast Mediterranean region, the Soviet Union suggested that talks be started without delay on simultaneous withdrawal of the U.S. and Soviet fleets from the Mediterranean.

According to the Soviet proposal, no restrictions on the naval activity and naval armaments of littoral Meditteranean states be imposed at the first stage.

Further measures for the consolidation of security in the area could be determined with taking into account the Soviet proposals contained in the statement of January 15 of this year on the elimination of weapons of mass destruction.

Washington has rejected the Soviet proposal hastily advancing ludicrous arguments in an effort to justify its stand. Spokesman for the White House Edward Djerejian told newsmen that withdrawal of Soviet and U.S. naval ships from the Mediterranean would, allegedly, put the United States at a disadvantage, since the Soviet Union's territory is adjacent to the Mediterranean while the United States is far away. Then going by the logic of the representative of the White House, stationing of similar Soviet and U.S. naval ships closer to the United States of America, say in the Hudson Bay or the Gulf of California would suit the United States interests.

It is not the first time over the past five years that Washington rejects proposals aimed at the lowering of the level of military confrontation, at the normalisation of the international situation. Over the same period, the present U.S. Administration has not taken a single step that could be assessed as a gesture of U.S. goodwill in the sphere of disarmament.

As if mocking the common sense of journalists, the self-same Djerejian said that dispatching Soviet observers to Nevada to observe U.S. nuclear explosions would be the best contributing toward arresting the nuclear arms race. There is, indeed, no limit to the hypocricy of Washington officials.

Maneuvers Termed 'Piracy'

LD301846 Moscow Television Service in Russian 1400 GMT 30 Mar 86

[From the "International Panorama" program presented by IZVESTIYA commentator Stanislaw Kondrashov]

[Text] The armed conflict between the United States and Libya, which began on Monday, 24 March, was one of the past week's most poignant events. The fanning up of tension which the Americans have recently been busying themselves with in this or that place, has, one can say, reached its logical conclusion in the Gulf of Sidra, where, using Harpoon missiles, the Americans attacked, sunk, or damaged severan Libyan vessels, moreover, not just warships, but also civilian craft, according to reports from Tripoli. According to U.S. reports, HARM missiles damaged an anti-aircraft defence missile complex near the town of Surt on the Libyan coast.

At a time when Americans encroached on the sovereignty of one Mediterranean Arab country, the president of another Mediterranean Arab country conducted talks with the Soviet leadership in a friendly atmosphere. I have in mind Algerian President Chadli Bendjedid's visit to Moscow. Speaking during a dinner in the Algerian guest's honor, Comrade Gorbachev said that what had taken place off the Libyan coastline laid bare the imperial and piratical nature of the U.S. neoglobalist policies. He said: We are not talking of an incident which has arisen all of a sudden, but of a type of punitive operation, preplanned, and thought out in advance. Such policies, he emphasized, provoke regional conflicts. They do that in order to establish U.S. influence in various regions of the world with the aid of a big fist.

The current U.S. Administration's conflict with Libya, which refuses to dance to Washington's tune, is of long duration. The anti-Libyan campaign was exacerbated in the extreme, following two incidents involving terrorist attacks on American passengers in the Rome and Vienna airports last December. Having ascribed responsibility for these acts to a Palestinian group which, according to Washington's allegations, supposedly enjoys Al-Qadhdhafi's patronage, Washington began to step up its punitive measures.

As is known, these measures included harsh economic sanctions against Libya. It already was whispered at that time that armed operations were in the offing, while U.S. warships continuously and threateningly loomed off the Libyan coastline.

However, at no time was such a huge force deployed off that coast as during the so-called exercises which began last Sunday. Three aircraft carriers, 240 aircraft-based planes and, approximately 40 warships in all. And the pretext? It was to assert the right to freedom of navigation in the Gulf of Sidra which the Americans regard as international waters and which the Libyans declared to be their territorial waters, south of the 32'30" northern latitude line. Freedom of navigation is the pretext here, but the aim is to provoke an armed conflict, to demonstrate U.S. strength, to punish Libya.

Ever since these exercises began, U.S. aircraft have violated Libya's airspace. The Libyans fired anti-aircraft missiles in response. Even though, according to U.S. data, they failed to hit their target, this act of self-defense was interpreted as evidence of hostile intent. The Americans hit an anti-aircraft defense base near the town of Surt. Such was the course of the development of events. Several Libyan warships, allegedly on the move toward the U.S. armada, also came to be suspected of hostile intent. They too, were destroyed by missiles, although they did not manage to confirm their so-called hostile intent by hostile action.

All in all, it is piracy, being portrayed as a preemptive strike. These provocative exercises in the Gulf of Sidra came to an end on Thursday, 27 March.

U.S. Aims To 'Frighten' Libya

LD301441 Moscow World Service in English 1310 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Yuriy Soltan commentary]

[Excerpts] Last week the world was witness to the United States' armed attack on Libya. No matter how Washington tried to justify the need for what it calls a surgical operation, this does not change the essence of the matter. An act of open and armed aggression was carried out against that independent state, an aggression thoroughly prepared and planned in advance. The decision is known to have been adopted in principle at a secret meeting of Washington administration leaders back in July last year. Only a pretext was searched and a suitable moment was waited for. At the weekend American ships moved away from Libyan shores, but the threat of a repeated attack against that country remains.

What has Libya done to displease the United States? Washington keeps no secret of the fact that for a long time now it has been detesting Libya's independent and anti-imperialist policy and its active participation in the struggle against United States and Israeli aggressive schemes in the Middle East. So, it decided to teach Libya a lesson, and conduct a punitive operation against it. Washington clearly hopes to frighten not only Libya but other developing nonaligned nations unwilling to accept the terms America dictates. This is how the doctrine of neoglobalism devised in the United States is being put into practice.

The essence of the doctrine is to resort to any means, military means included, to force independent nations to build their life on instructions from Washington.

The United States' attack on Libya is a challenge to the world public and a trampling upon universally accepted civilized relations. Such a policy provokes regional conflicts and puts international peace and security at risk.

'Anti-Libyan policy' Viewed

GF301940 Moscow in Persian to Iran 1600 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Yuriy Soltan commentary: "The Anti-Libyan Policy of the United States"]

[Text] During the past week, the world witnessed a U.S. military attack on Libya. Whatever excuse the people in Washington may give for this so-called surgical operation, it cannot change its true nature. This was open armed aggression against an independent nation. It was planned and predetermined. As is now known, the idea was accepted in principle last January in a secret conference among U.S. officials. They were waiting only for an excuse and an opportunity. Finally, on 14 March, as [word indistinct] of the United States report, a plan called [words indistinct] was adopted. Under this operation, aircraft from U.S. aircraft carriers, which had cruised near the Libyan coast, attacked the Libyan city of Surt with bombs and missiles and fired at Libyan patrol boats. Later, the U.S. ships moved away from the Libyan coast. But the threat of a repeated attack against this country remains.

Why is the United States against Libyan policies? The people in Washington do not conceal the fact that they do not like Libya's independent and anti-imperialist policy and its active participation in the struggle, which they have been unable to stop, against the aggressive designs of the United States and Israel in the Middle East. Thus, they decided to teach Libya a lesson and to punish it. In fact, people in Washington are of the opinion that not only Libya but other countries which are progressive and nonaligned and which are not ready to bow to U.S. orders also should be overawed. It is in this regard the U.S. policy of neoglobalism is being implemented. According to the nature of this doctrine, independent countries should be made to conform to orders from Washington through all means, including military. The U.S. attack on Libya amounts to confrontation with the world and tramples upon the recognized norms of relations governing civilized countries. Such a policy generates regional tensions and clashes and threatens world peace.

Murphy 'Threatens' New Exercises

LD310901 Moscow TASS in English 0855 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] London March 31 TASS -- U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs Richard Murphy has come forward with new threats to Libya. The REUTER news agency has reported that he said the United States may hold future naval manoeuvres in the Gulf of Sidra.

In an interview on U.S. television, he insisted on a certain "right" of the USA to interfere in Libya's internal policy if the leadership of that state continues to pursue the course aimed at achieving genuine independence.

REAGAN RADIO ADDRESS SHOWS NEOGLOBALISM

LD301719 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 1337 GMT 30 Mar 86

[Excerpt] Washington, 30 Mar (TASS) -- The U.S. Administration is persisting in carrying out its imperialist "neoglobalism" policy, pretending to some "right" to continue its piratical acts against sovereign states and peoples. As is evident from the regular radio address by the U.S. President, Nicaragua and Libya have now been chosen as the main targets for the interventionist policy.

R. Reagan attempted to portray the U.S. naval armada's aggressive actions, carried out during provocative maneuvers off the shores of Libya, as some act of "self-defense." "The U.S. ships and aircraft were fired on by the forces of the North African country, Libya," he asserted. He also resorted to obvious misrepresentation and distortion of facts in describing the situation in Central America. He portrayed the little republic of Nicaragua, which is the victim of an undeclared war being waged by the CIA and the Pentagon with the help of gangs of Somozists, as a source of aggression against neighboring countries.

The President's words about U.S. might being "an unquenchable symbol of hope for the oppressed peoples of the whole world" which could "quickly be embodied into democratic movements," truly did sound like a wicked mockery of common sense. The President could find nothing better to cite as an example of such an "embodiment" than Grenada -- the small Caribbean state, whose freedom and independence were mercilessly trampled under the boot of the U.S. military as a result of U.S. aggression in October 1983. The President classified the U.S. bandit actions against Libya and other such actions as fostering "a strengthening of peace and freedom."

U.S. NICARAGUAN POLICY TRAMPLES INTERNATIONAL LAW

LD290334 Moscow in English to North America 2300 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Igor Geyevskiy commentary from the "Outlook" program]

[Text] [Announcer] On Thursday the United States Senate has voted for $100 million worth of aid to the Nicaraguan contras upon whom Washington relies in its bid to topple the lawful government of Nicaragua. The bill was passed by a slight majority and will now return to the House which previously rejected it. Here is a commentary by Dr Igor Geyevskiy.

The most interesting thing is that in its campaign for the aid package to the contras the White House has not appealed a single time to the UN Charter, the Charter of the Organization of American States, or any other fundamental document of international law. It has failed to do so for the simple reason that, in its policy toward Nicaragua, the U.S. Administration has trampled upon the norms of international law. In keeping with Article 1 of the UN Charter, all nations must promote friendly ties with each other. The UN Charter proclaims as a supreme principle the sovereign equality of all nations and noninterference in their internal affairs. Article 4 of the UN Charter covers the territorial integrity and political independence of all nations. Now the White House has openly proclaimed it a goal of its foreign policy to topple the government of Nicaragua, a nation that, just as the United States, is a member of the United Nations, and with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations.

It's really hard to recall a precedent in recent history of the government of one nation officially proclaiming its intention to topple the government of another.

Officials of the present U.S. Administration are fond of talking about its commitment to human rights and the values of civilization. But how can that commitment be proved other than by abiding by the UN Charter and the fundamentals of international law? That's exactly what is missing in Washington's policy toward Nicaragua. The mining of Nicaraguan harbors and the use of mercenaries to topple a government elected by the people has nothing to do with the values of civilization; it's rather like the law of the jungle. What if some hypothetical government declared that it is out to topple the U.S. Administration at any cost and allocated money to arm mercenaries and send them to the United States? What would Washington's reaction be? Naturally, it would describe the action as terrorism and a violation of the UN Charter. Why then is the American Administration following that kind of policy toward Nicaragua?

ZAGLADIN, LEGISLATIVE COMMISSIONS RECEIVE FASCELL

LD281731 Moscow TASS in English 1629 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 28 TASS -- A meeting with Dante Fascell, chairman of the U.S. House Foreign Affairs Committee was held at the Commissions for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet of the Union and the Soviet of Nationalities of the USSR Sumpreme Soviet in Moscow today.

The sides declared the wish of the legislative bodies of the two countries to make a contribution to bettering Soviet-American relations. In that connection the attention of the American guest was drawn to the fact that the USSR's wish to maintain normal stable relations with the USA on the basis of equality and equal security and non-interference in each other's internal affairs was explicitly expressed at the 27th Congress of the CPSU and was mirrored in the congress documents.

It was pointed out that even with a divergence of attitudes to a number of issues, a continuing dialogue at the parliamentary level, and in particular, this visit are useful because it makes possible to find out the stands of the sides and thus contribute to a better mutual understanding. This is important not only for Soviet-American relations, but also for the cause of peace the world over.

The meeting was attended by Vadim Zagladin, secretary of the Commission for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, and other officials. A luncheon was given in honour of the guest on behalf of the Commission for Foreign Affairs of the Chambers of the USSR Supreme Soviet.

PRAVDA REPORTS SHEVARDNADZE-KIM YONG-NAM TALKS

PM281655 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Mar 86 First Edition p 4

[TASS report under general heading: "Talks Heads"]

[Text] On 26 March E.A. Shevardnadze, member of the CPSU Central Committee and USSR foreign minister, met with Kim Yong-nam, member of the Workers Party of Korea [WPK] Central Committee Politburo, deputy premier of the DPRK Administrative Council, and DPRK foreign minister, who made a brief stopover in Moscow on his return home from a tour of African countries.

During the talk there was an exchange of information on topical questions of the domestic and foreign policies of the USSR and DPRK.

E.A. Shevardnadze familiarized Kim Yong-nam with the priority measures to fulfill the decisions of the 27th CPSU Congress, paying special attention to the tasks of implementing the program to eliminate nuclear and chemical weapons by the end of the century and promote the concept of all-embracing international security which is formulated in the CPSU Central Committee Political Report to the 27th CPSU Congress delivered by M.S. Gorbachev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

Kim Yong-nam noted that the DPRK leadership assesses highly the results of the 27th CPSU Congress and the policy documents it adopted, stated the full support of the Communists and all working people of the republic for the Soviet program of struggle to eliminate nuclear and chemical weapons and create an all-embracing system of international security, and wished the Soviet people success in implementing the tasks set by the congress. The DPRK foreign minister described the key problems of the DPRK's foreign policy which is aimed at ensuring favorable international conditions for the successful building of socialism in North Korea and the implementation of the country's independent, peaceful unification on the basis of democratic principles.

In discussing questions of Soviet-Korean relations mutual satisfaction was expressed at their steady forward development on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and socialist internationalism and the provisions of the 6 July 1961 treaty on friendship, cooperation, and mutual aid between the USSR and the DPRK.

E.A. Shevardnadze stressed that the Soviet Union will consistently continue to steer a course toward the all-around consolidation and development of cooperation with the DPRK and toward support for the efforts and initiatives aimed at easing the military and political tension on the Korean peninsula, consolidating peace in Korea, and achieving the country's peaceful unification.

There was also a discussion of the course of the implementation of the accords reached during the official friendly visit paid to the DPRK by the USSR foreign minister in January this year, including on questions concerning collaboration between the USSR and the DPRK in the international arena in the interests of safeguarding peace and security in Asia and throughout the world.

The talk took place in a warm, comradely atmosphere.

SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA: AIMS OF MEESE PAKISTAN TRIP VIEWED

PM271458 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 26 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[S. Bulantsev "Rejoinder": "The Washington 'Pilgrim'"]

[Text] This itinerary has become so customary for certain categories of high-ranking foreign visitors to Pakistan that it is now possible to bet with some confidence that anyone who nurtures wild dreams of drowning the Afghan revolution in blood will invariably go to Peshawar and the Khyber Pass. In recent years this region has become a kind of "Mecca" for "pilgrims" from America, Europe, and Asia who share a common hatred for the people's system in the DRA. It is said that many of them, when they get there feel like some latter-day Alexander the Great, whose hordes once went through the pass. The only difference is that the Greek general was heading toward India, whereas the present day conquerors are waging an undeclared war on Afghanistan.

The "pilgrims'" well-trodden path is now being followed by U.S. Attorney General E. Meese, who this week will visit the dushman gangs entrenched in the Pershawar area. The attorney is carrying out President R. Reagsn's personal assignment -- to convey his greetings to the "freedom fighters," as they motley Afghan counterrevolutionary rabble is pompously called in Washington and certain other capital cities.

You do not have to guess at what the President's message represents. Its content may be judged from the recent inflammatory proclamation in which the White House boss declared 21 March to be "Afghanistan Day." The fabrications regarding the situation in Afghanistan alternate with slanderous anti-Afghan and anti-Soviet attacks. As an Afghan Foreign Ministry statement rightly notes in this connection, R. Reagan, who talks a lot about his love of peace and humanism, is encouraging the bandits to commit more crimes against the people's system in Afghanistan and against the country's civilian population. The maintenance of tension around Afghanistan suits the White House, since it fully accords with the goals of America's neoglobalist policy.

Judging by reports in the international press, the U.S. attorney general's trip to the dushman camps marks a qualitatively new stage in Washington's war against the DRA people. It is common knowledge that in the years since the April Revolution the bandits have received more than $1.5 billion from the United States. This year alone U.S. aid to the murderers will amount to $470 million. However, now the White House is not content with that and has instructed E. Meese to make direct contact with the Afghan people's enemies and lift their much shaken morale.

The "pilgrim" chosen by the White House to transmit the President's personal message to the dushmans is himself worthy of note. Just who is Edwin Meese? Right now he is attorney general, but in the past he was a professional soldier. Quite recently he was working in the intelligence section of the U.S. Army reserve. However, he only rose to lieutenant colonel and, consumed with longing for a military career that never was, he "elevated" himself, as the ubiquitous U.S. reporters assert. Now he finds himself in a strange position: On the one hand, as attorney general he has to defend law and order, while on the other he has become an ally and mentor of terrorists.

E. Meese's "pilgrimage" to Peshawar is Washington's latest provocative action aimed at starting up a new round of aggression against the DRA and galvanizing the political corpses of the renegades spurned by the Afghan people. Such futile attempts have been going on for almost 8 years now. And throughout those years, the DRA people have been increasingly confidently following the path of building a new life which was begun by the April Revolution.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON SHULTZ MEETINGS

Comment on Turkey Visit

LD282146 Moscow in Turkish to Turkey 1400 GMT 27 Mar 86

[Unattributed commentary: "Turkey Rejects the U.S. Diktat"]

[Text] The visit by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz to Turkey is over. According to the AP correspondent in Ankara, the Reagan administration was pursuing the goal of extracting the maximum military and political concessions from Turkey through this visit. U.S. mass information media make no secret that Shultz' visit to Ankara was not crowned with success. The agenda of Shultz's talks in Ankara was rather crowded. The U.S. secretary of state was hoping, in the first place, to achieve progress in U.S.-Turkish talks on extending the defense and economic cooperation agreement, which expired last December. In the second place, the subject of the reconstruction of military bases on Turkish territory and the establishment of new ones was taken up within the framework of the aforementioned agreement. The reference in this case is to the military bases in eastern Anatolia, that is the region close to the Soviet border. In addition, the Americans were intent on imposing the proposal concerning the use of these bases by the Rapid Deployment Forces, forces for expansion. And, as if this were not enough, the United States was insisting on Turkish support for U.S. activities in the Middle East.

As one can see, the U.S. secretary of state had extensive plans. Nevertheless, as THE WASHINGTON TIMES correspondent writes, Shultz left Ankara with empty hands. The problem is that Turkey asked the United States to ensure favorable conditions for the development of the Turkish economy and the broadening of the Turkish economy in bilateral trade. This is a request to which the Americans have long turned a deaf ear. In our view, there is another factor to which increasingly more attention is being paid in Turkey. The reference is to the reaction to the Pentagon's attempts to expand, through Turkey, NATO's area of influence in the Near and Middle East -- and the war TERCUMAN puts it -- to transform Turkey into an area of operations for the U.S. imperialists for mounting military [word indistinct] against neighboring countries.

It appears from reports in the press that the Turks are well aware that this not only undermines the standing of both countries in the international arena but also threatens the national security of the country. This was one of the topics discussed at a meeting of former Turkish ministers from various periods, as well as public and political figures, held in Ankara on the eve of the Shultz visit. The movement for relaxing international tension and for improving the international situation has been forging ahead with growing activeness of late. The arguments advanced by the partisans for increasing the U.S. and NATO military presence on the territory of other countries are being rejected by public opinion and even the ruling circles of these countries. In view of these circumstances, the U.S. leadership is resorting to various provocations to scare Turkey with a nonexistent threat, that is to say the Soviet threat, and thus to justify its militarist claims. In this connection, U.S. political commentators are pointing out that the provocative act committed by U.S. naval vessels in the Black Sea, along the southern coast of the Crimea, on the eve of the visit to Ankara of the U.S. Secretary of state is no coincidence. A NEW YORK TIMES commentator poses the following question: Could it be that Shultz wanted to pass on the secret information gathered by U.S. vessels on the so-called Soviet threat to Turkey at the Ankara talks?

It seems that Washingtonians are unable to abandon their shopworn imperial pretences. Threats of use of force, shows of military might, and provocations organized in the vicinity of the borders of others derive from this.

Odd as it may seem, all such acts often coincide with the visits of high-ranking U.S. officials to various regions -- including Latin America, Southeast Asia, the Middle East, and the Mediterranean region where the United States has committed an overt act of aggression against Libya -- and are perpetrated on the eve of such visits. U.S. Secretary of State Shultz' visit to Ankara has, in this sense, not been an exception.

Anti-U.S. Feeling in Italy

LD281240 Moscow TASS in English 1150 GMT 28 Mar 86

[Text] Rome March 28 TASS -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz arrived here today for a brief visit in a tour of Western Europe. He will meet with the Italian president, the chairman of the Council of Ministers and the ministers of foreign affairs and defence. The emissary of the White House will be received in the Vatican by John Paul the Second. The local press points out that Shultz will try to persuade Italy to endorse the U.S. course towards stepping up confrontation, in the Mediterranean, in particular, and to join the Pentagon's "star wars" plans. The visit of the U.S. secretary of state begins at a time when a wave of vigorous anti-war and anti-American demonstrations is sweeping the Italian peninsula. The foreign-policy goal and actions of the present U.S. Administration give rise to mounting discontent and resistance in Western Europe.

Discusses Libyan Actions

LD291941 Moscow TASS in English 1909 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Rome March 29 TASS -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz who is visiting in Italy within the framework of a tour of West European countries has made hostile attacks against Libya. Speaking at a press conference here, he unfoundedly accused the Libyan leadership of allegedly sheltering, training, fitting out and encouraging terrorists. In so doing he in every way tried to justify the glaring act of state terrorism by the U.S. military -- the piratic attack by U.S. ships and aircraft on a number of Libyan facilities.

According to the U.S. secretary of state, questions connected with the U.S. large-scale show of military might near Libyan shores occupied the central place during his talks with President Francesco Cossiga of Italy, Prime Minister Bettino Craxi, and Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti. He had to admit the existence of differences in the stands on this matter between the USA and Italy which maintains close mutually beneficial economic contacts with Libya and which has condemned Washington's anti-Libyan actions. Although Shultz tried to belittle the importance of the differences, he, as the REUTER news agency points out with reference to U.S. officials, privately more and more frankly expresses exasperation at the Italian Government's stand on this matter.

COMMENTARY ON WEST'S DESIRE IN ANTONOV CASE

LD291239 Moscow TASS in English 1226 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 29 TASS -- By TASS political analyst Vladimir Goncharov. A Rome court today acquitted Sergei Antonov and two other Bulgarian nationals on charges of complicity in the attempt on the pope's life as there was insufficient evidence for a conviction. That there would be no evidence had been known to unbiased observers from the start of the frame-up "case".

It was known all along that Ali Agca, Turkish neo-fascist and killer, was a liar, that, in slandering Antonov, he acted on instructions of special services, hoping for a pardon. His "testimony", the sole source of the charges brought against the Bulgarian nationals, was false through and through.

So, Antonov is innocent. But a legitimate question arises in this connection: Who is guilty of keeping the innocent person under arrest for the long three years, subjecting him to physical and mental suffering? Undoubtedly, the guilt is above all with Western special services, their agents. The guilt is with professional liars with journalist cards -- Claire Sterling, Michael Ledin, Paul Henze...Italian investigating judge Ilario Martella also played a no small part in that. The true intention of those who sought to sling mud at Antonov and his compatriots was to slander Bulgaria and other socialist countries, sow discord between communists and Catholics involved in the campaign for social progress and peace, hamper the efforts to ease world tension, revive the "cold war" and divert attention from the U.S. policy of state terrorism in the Mediterranean, in the Middle East and other parts of the world.

The end of the "Antonov case" spells the failure of the Central Intelligence Agency and other organizers of the major anti-socialist provocation in recent years. It must be mentioned that instead of passing a full acquittal, the court used the "insufficient evidence" wording. That is, undoubtedly, a compromise between the truth and the aspiration to whitewash somehow those who masterminded the "case." This wording does not satisfy millions of people around the world who followed with anxiety the dramatic plight of the Bulgarian national, who campaigned for his release. They believe that Antonov should be fully acquitted and that the Italian judiciary should offer their apology to the victim of arbitrariness and violence.

SPANISH BUSINESSMEN DISCUSS TIES WITH OFFICIALS

LD260803 Moscow TASS in English 1854 GMT 24 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 24 TASS -- Jose Maria Cuevas, president of the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organisations, declared for the widening of commercial and economic cooperation between Spain and the Soviet Union. He spoke here today at a meeting of a delegation of Spanish businessmen he heads with the leadership of the Soviet Union's Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Noting the constant growth of the volume of Spanish-Soviet trade turnover, Jose Maria Cuevas said that, in the opinion of Spanish businessmen, there exist vast opportunities for the widening of the list of mutual deliveries and use of new forms of commercial and economic ties between Spain and the USSR. He emphasised the role that the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organisations and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the USSR can play in the development of business contacts between Spanish firms and Soviet foreign trade associations. For this purpose the two organisations intend to sign an agreement on cooperation which will determine the measures called upon to step up commercial and economic cooperation between Spain and the USSR.

On the same day the delegation of Spanish business circles had meetings with chairman of the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations Konstantin Katushev and USSR Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade Aleksey Manzhulo. During the stay in Moscow the Spanish businessmen will hold negotiations at a number of Soviet ministries and foreign trade associations.

Visit Arkhipov

LD261313 Moscow TASS in English 1305 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow March 26 TASS -- First Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR Ivan Arkhipov today received a group of representatives of the Spanish confederation of business organisations, led by Jose Maria Cuevas. They had a talk on further development of trade and economic relations between the USSR and Spain. Ambassador of Spain in the USSR Jose Luis Xifra de Ocerin took part in the talk.

At the airport the leader of the friendly country and his wife were greeted by Andrey Gromyko, a member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, president of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., and his wife, Eduard Shevardnadze, a member of the Political Bureau of the CPSU Central Committee, minister of foreign affairs of the U.S.S.R., and Anatoliy Dobrynin, secretary of the CPSU Central Committee.

Ryzhkov, Machel Hold Talks

LD310704 Moscow TASS International Service in Russian 0650 GMT 31 Mar 86

[Text] Moscow, 31 Mar (TASS) -- A discussion between Nikolay Ryzhkov, member of the Politburo of the CPSU Central Committee and chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, and Samora Moises Machel, president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, took place in the Kremlin today.

The Mozambican leader arrived in Moscow on Sunday on the invitation of the Soviet leadership for a friendly working visit.

U.S. CLAIMS ON NICARAGUA 'INVASION' VIEWED

PM281201 Moscow PRAVDA in Russian 28 Mar 86 First Edition p 5

[Vladimir Bolshakov "Commentator's Column": "Casualties Again"]

[Text] The United States is fueling the hysteria surrounding Nicaragua increasingly fiercely. In the past few days, Washington has urgently earmarked $20 million in aid to Honduras and instructed the U.S. Air Force to help to transport Honduran troops to the Nicaraguan border.

In an attempt to at least somehow justify these blatantly provocative actions, Washington has announced that Nicaraguan troops allegedly crossed the border with Honduras on 22 March and invaded its territory to a depth of over 15 km to destroy the rear bases of the detachments of "contras" entrenched there. An attempt is being made to create the impression among the U.S. people and entire world public that "the Sandinists have deliberately challenged the United States" after the U.S. House of Representatives refused to allocate the $100 million requested by the White House for military and other aid to the gangs of former Somozists under the patronage of the CIA and the Pentagon.

These gangs have now suffered heavy losses. The CIA scenario providing for the overthrow of the Sandinists at the hands of the "contras" is obviously not working. All Nicaragua has risen up to fight them. Under these conditions the White House wants to prove that the refusal of aid to the "contras" in the House of Representatives was a mistake. The administration is trying to wreak revenge in the Senate, which is discussing a bill for rendering aid to the "contras." Obviously playing into the hands of the White House, the CIA readily provided "information on Nicaraguan aggression."

This "information" is flimsy. The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry has resolutely denied Washington's phony assertions of the invasion of Honduran territory. In their reports from the border between Honduras and Nicaragua, U.S. television companies also confirm that no signs of an "invasion" are to be seen there.

But Washington does not bother with facts. It is pursuing its own line, formulated by the White House: "The cancerous growth called Nicaragua must be removed." Neither more nor less! Honduras has been urgently given additional military aid. U.S. troops which have long been waiting there for the order to invade Nicaragua have been put on heightened combat alert. General J. Galvin, commander of the U.S. southern command, has arrived in Honduras to lead the new act of provocation.

It is clear that all this provocative ballyhoo has not been launched accidentally. It cannot be ruled out that it envisages at subsequent stages the direct use, on some pretext or other, of U.S. Armed Forces in accordance with the Grenadian or Libyan "scenarios." The danger of this adventure is obvious. But Washington should understand that Nicaragua is not defenseless Grenada. Its people are fully determined to defend their freedom. And in this all honest people of the world are in solidarity with Nicaragua. And it is time that the over-zealous gentlemen from Washington heeded the voice of the world community: "Hands off Nicaragua!"

Nicaraguan Statement Cited

LD271005 Moscow TASS in English 2255 GMT 26 Mar 86

[Text] Managua March 26 TASS -- The Nicaraguan Ministry of Foreign Affairs has categorically refuted Washington's mendacious accusations that the Sandinista People's Army allegedly "invaded" the territory of Honduras. The ministry's statement circulated in Managua emphasises that U.S. propaganda's latest falsehood is part and parcel of the slanderous anti-Nicaraguan campaign which the Reagan administration has launched in an attempt to get congressional approval of new multimillion appropriations for the Somozista forces based in Honduras.

TASS Cites Ortega

LD290954 Moscow TASS in English 0926 GMT 29 Mar 86

[Text] Managua March 29 TASS -- The Reagan administration is on the path of "Vietnamizing" the conflict in Central America, Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Executive Commission of the Sandinist National Liberation Front and president of Nicaragua, told a news conference here Friday.

He lashed out at the adventurist policy of the United States which has gone as far as to directly involve U.S. servicemen based in Honduras in providing support to the C.I.A.'s mercenary gangs in their aggressive actions against Nicaragua.

U.S. military transport planes manned by U.S. pilots, Ortega said, were used to airlift Honduran troops to the border with Nicaragua where there was fighting between units of the Sandinist Popular Army and Somozist groups. The military operation undertaken by the Pentagon in an attempt to save the mercenaries from a final defeat was supervised by John Galvin, chief of the U.S. southern command.

The escalating U.S. military interference in Nicaragua's affair, Ortega said, is exacerbating the dangerous situation in the region. The Nicaraguan president added that the U.S. Government bears the full weight of responsibility for the consequences of its adventurist actions, including the possible death of U.S. troops in the combat zone. Once they pentrate into Nicaraguan air space, he warned, U.S. military helicopters risk being shot down.

Flatly denying White House charges that the Sandinist Popular Army "has attacked Honduras", the Nicaraguan leader called President Reagan "the biggest lie-manufacturer in the world". It is not Nicaragua but the United States that is flouting international law as it encroaches upon the independence and territorial integrity of Nicaragua, Ortega said.

The Reagan administration has raised a counter-revolutionary mercenary army which is occupying part of the territory of Honduras in violation of the latter's sovereignty and staging raids against Nicaragua from bases there, he said.

The C.I.A. hired terrorists are killing Nicaraguan citizens and destroying everything that has been created by the revolution for the people. In these conditions, the Nicaraguan president said, his country has the full right to armed defense against aggression and will continue exercising it. Washington's mendacious claims, he said, are disproved even by the fact that Nicaraguan troops have not had any armed clashes with the Honduran Army. In the reported fighting troops of the Sandinist Popular Army carried out a successful operation against the C.I.A.'s mercenaries and overran their camps, including their main training center. Nicaragua thinks highly of the fact that Honduran authorities have not yielded to pressure from the United States eager to provoke an armed conflict between Honduras and Nicaragua, Ortega said. He said the Nicaraguan Government has sent a message to the Contadora Group countries, pointing to the threatening situation in the wake of the stepup in U.S. aggression against the Nicaraguan people and suggesting that a mixed commission be formed to monitor the situation on the border between Nicaragua and Honduras.

The Nicaraguan president denounced the U.S. Senate's decision to meet a White House request for 100 million dollars in military aid for the "contras".

The multimillion-dollar appropriations and "instruction" by U.S. military "advisers", he said, will not save the mercenaries from a crushing defeat. But the very fact of U.S. Congress deliberating the "ways and means" of suppressing the Sandinist popular revolution represents an attempt to scrap the existing jungle. U.S. aggression against Nicaragua, just as infringments of the sovereignty of Libya, are a threat to the security of all mankind, the Nicaraguan president said.

Paper Views Situation

PM271159 Moscow SOVETSKAYA ROSSIYA in Russian 27 Mar 86 First Edition p 3

[TASS report: "White House Provocation"]

[Excerpt] Washington, 26 Mar -- The U.S. Administration has taken a new step with the aim of whipping up the situation in Central America. President Reagan has claimed that the Sandinist People's Army has "invaded" Honduran territory. On this pretext he announced the granting of "emergency military aid" to Honduras to the tune of $20 million,

At the same time, as the news agencies report, the Honduran Government initially refuted the statement about an "act of aggression" supposedly perpetrated by Nicaragua. Only later, clearly on Washington's prompting, did it acknowledge the "instance of attack." According to reports from Honduras, that country's authorities have given the order to place their troops on the Nicaraguan border in a state of enhanced combat readiness. It is also noted that John Galvin, commander of the U.S. southern command, has arrived there hurriedly.
